It is said that amid the cholera panic of France the Jews have alone remained without alarm or excitement, and have as a rule entirely escaped the disease. Moses and his sanitary, God-given laws have herein a practical vindication that Ingersoll will hardly care to put down as one of the "mistakes."

There is another point about the Jews. There are 60,000 of them in New York City and yet it is said that not a single one is a bartender, and they seldom or never figure before the police courts for intoxication or drunken rows. The same testimony could be gathered in every city where these people are found. If any inquire why the Jews are so universally despised and their name a bye-word, we might answer by asking why the Jews are all Freemasons. One of the first Masonic lodges opened in Chicago, we were informed years ago, was given up to the Jews and abandoned of all others. With all the opprobrium that adheres to his character the Jew seems to make a good Mason.

A grandson of the great Henry Clay, bearing the same name, and heir it was hoped of the same surprising genius, was shot in a saloon brawl during Saturday night in Louisville, Kentucky. Young Clay was already prominent in political circles and his habits were no objection, it would seem, to a nomination for Congress, which was mentioned as one of the honors of which he was worthy. Clay was in a drunken rage when he invited the shot that may prove fatal. Will his aged relative, Cassius M. Clay, now speaking for the Republican party take heed to this argument against the unmanly position of his candidate in Maine?

The official report of the vote in Maine gives 78,912 for Robic, Republican, and 59,061 for Redman, Democrat; and for other candidates and scattering, 4,449,—a total vote of 142,422. The prohibitory amendment received 64,507 votes, and 20,224 voted against it, from which it appears that there were some 58,000 voters who followed the ignoble example of Mr. Blaine and said in effect that they did not care whether the saloon was voted up or voted down; and had the laws of Maine provided that a majority of the whole vote cast should have been required for the adoption of the amendment, the proposition would have been lost by some 7,000 votes. Thus, while we rejoice that the result was secured, it is with some trembling that we scan the figures to know the public sentiment after thirty years of Maine law.

Ex-Governor St. John was greeted in Chicago last Thursday evening with so hearty and so large an audience, that he took good cheer for the prospect in the country, when Chicago—this great city of such ill repute—could fill our largest hall and overflow by hundreds into another. The day before he had spoken by invitation at the State Fair at Madison, Wisconsin, to an immense crowd of 25,000, and in giving his speech for prohibition he was introduced by the Democratic candidate for governor in that State. The Buffalo papers help the good cheer wonderfully with their figures from western New York of nearly 19,000 voters for reform in that grand old Anti-masonic district. The testimony of the fathers is not forgotten there. The Music Hall audience last Thursday was a unique one for this city. Some 3,000 were present and no one could tell where the applause was the heartiest, from floor, from first or from upper gallery; and everybody stayed till the close, even those standing about the doors. Seldom are speaker and theme so honored here.

Broadway Tabernacle, New York, held an unusual congregation Sabbath afternoon. Since Peter Cooper died there has been no funeral like that of Jerry McAuley, the reformed river thief—the Christian evangelist. Sixteen years ago he found a Saviour who could rid him of all his sin, and his life has since, as the world confesses, been that of a true and grateful disciple. He began the mission on Water street for the salvation of the lowest, and a few years ago he went back further into the city into the midst of its deepest sin and seized and held for Christ the hall of the Cremorne mission. Every type of society was represented in the multitudes who wept for him—negroes and whites, silks and rags, women with painted faces but with tears in their eyes stood beside other women who in other circumstances would have shunned them. Bankers, merchants and lawyers a long time before the hour found the church already full and lingered in the crown with poorly-clad men and boys who were also eager to enter. Many were astonished at the motley multitude, but as the people without distinction had come to Christ so they came to this disciple, and proved against all the eloquence of infidelity how real and holy is Christianity.

The Odd-fellow body representing all the lodges of that order in the world met last week in Minneapolis. One of the most interesting portions of the business to those who are happily outside this order was the excited debate over a proposed amendment which would allow the admission of members without regard to color in jurisdictions outside the United States. "A most bitter onslaught", say the despatches, was made against this proposition, most of the objections being from the Southern States, and it was voted down two to one. Article 16, section 2, of the constitution still provides, therefore, that one of the essentials for admission to Odd-fellowship must be a white skin. The lie is thus openly and brazenly given to the pretensions of this order to in its publications, speeches and professions. "Friendship, Love and Truth" are flaunted on its banner to the world, but when we look behind them we catch the devilish leer of the managers of the show, which means "friendship and love" for men with the right sort of skin and a regulation body, and "truth" for anyone who can find it.

The result of the imperial conference in Poland will be awaited with some anxiety by those who have interpreted the late movements of Germany and France as hostile to England. The Czar, the old Emperor William and Francis Joseph of Austria met last week. It is rumored that the conference was for peace, and probably the quiet of the three empires, and the subjugation of the secret lodges of political assassins was a topic of first importance. But it is suggested that Russia hates England for Beaconsfield's sake, and Germany may be willing that words may come to blows between the English and French, in hope that the latter may be less troublesome ther after. Heaven forbid that there should be any he ish plots of war in this meeting. It is more like the emperors have enough to consider in managin the secret enemies about their own palaces. The meeting was not a popular demonstration. No o was in sight but soldiers. The precaution was n uncalled for. A few days ago the Nihilists issued th proclamation of war in Warsaw: "In the struggle sustain the people against the rule of the Czar ought to have recourse to the same weapons he use Our fight is now, as it ever was, a poutrance. W have done justice to the journalist Skiriptzyk, who death was wrongly attributed to the violence thieves. He was executed by us as a spy. No trait escapes."

A MISSIONARY LETTER FROM INDIA.

BY C. B. WARD.

India is a monster land, about 1,500 by 2,000 mil in area, peopled with the multitudes represented the figures, 250,000,000. Of these, about 190,00 000 are Hindoos; 50,000,000 Mohammedans; 10,00 000 Aborigines; and everywhere can be found a fe Parsees and Jews. Buddhists abound in Ceylon a Burmah.

Nearly forty missionary societies, American a European, are at work in the Empire, employing force of over 700 Anglo missionaries and it is sa there are now 500,000 native Christians in Ind We would it were so. Doubtless there are 500,0 baptized natives; but the number of living, genuin native Christians is not above 100,000. You w wonder at this; but some light will dawn upon th that subject when you learn that several of these s cieties proclaim sacramental Christianity; seve others ceremonial Christianity; and of those w hold the form of Holy Ghost Christianity, not a fe are without the power and make Christians on ca chetical tests rather than the evidences of regene tion.

It seems cruel to tear away the glowing pict held up to the world—"a half million Christians" India. But the devil only smiles when he he Christendom boasting over an edifice erected on unregenerate foundation.

There has been a wonderful uplift in the quali of missionary characters in India since 1870. Th scarce a European missionary was a total abstai and few indeed who did not smoke. Intense wor liness was no great blemish on Christian charact and regeneration by the power of the Holy Gh was with only about six missionary societies a con tion of admission.

But a wonderful change is manifest in the last f years. Many missionaries have put on a bet Christianity themselves and their preaching is acco ingly improved. Many others of the ordinary te per have year by year retired from the field. Exte sive revival and holiness movements at home ha greatly improved the home churches, as is manife ed in the fact that the missionaries coming from b America and England in the last five or six years more pious, freer from intemperate habits and ma of them came with hearts on fire with holiness God. In 1870 there were not twenty missionar and Christian workers in India who were entir sanctified to God and preached this uttermost sal tion and testified it. To-day, there are perhaps o hundred. Then witnessing Christians were few; n there are thousands of them. Witnesses to the gra of entire sanctification can be found all over the E pire, yet many missionaries and professed Christia do not believe in salvation from all sin in this l through the blood of Jesus, preferring to vainly l lieve that death will wash away or rub off sin's l dye. India needs the prayers of good people. Do think the heathen need them all. Remember the m sionaries and their converts.

True Gospel leaven is at work in many sections India. On the east coast the American Bapti have a grand work and idols will be swept away th in a few years. In the southern part of India t London and Church Mission with the Americ Board are doing grandly.

In the southern part of the Bombay Presidency the American Board Missionaries have the most successful mission in Western India. In the north of India Presbyterians and Methodists are measurably successful. Methodism, as represented in the South India Conference, is the principal Gospel leaven at work among the English speaking people. Other work is being done all over the Empire. But accounts sent home are often too glowing and made too much of by the secretaries. Besides, missionary effort is to an astonishing degree an educational work. We confess to a feeling that it would be better to divide the work when presenting it to the people at home into Gospel and educational work. We do not object to educational work; but we question whether it is just the thing to get people at home to give to evangelize the heathen, then use their gifts in purely secular school work, as is done by every mission society in India.

I and my fellow workers in the Nizam's Dominions have started on the line of pure evangelism, as Paul did. God is with us. Our working force is twenty-three, male and female. We work, too, wholly among the heathen in the vernaculars, having no manner of English work. We are faith missionaries. Our work costs us this year about $5,000 and we are getting it day by day as we need in answer to prayer. We need workers. Will the Cynosure readers send us one missionary, sanctified soul and body? Ought it not to do a little missionary work in this way? Three hundred dollars will send us one. Try it.

THE BELIEVERS' BIBLE CONFERENCE.

BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

Repeated announcement was made in Bible Notes, published by Mr. S. R. Briggs, Toronto, Canada, that no Believers' meeting would be held this year. Notwithstanding this notice Major D. W. Whittle arranged for such a gathering, though it was understood that the attendance would not be large, because many who usually attend had already spent their vacations and others had their arrangements so far completed that it was impossible to change them.

Harbor Springs, on Little Traverse Bay, was selected as the place of meeting. This village is located just within that portion of the bay which lies inside of Harbor Point. On the north is a high bluff completely shutting away the cold winds from Mackinaw and keeping the water within the point quiet when outside the waves are rolling in upon the beach.

There are several summer resorts in the immediate vicinity. Four miles across the bay is Petoskey. Just at hand is Harbor Point, which now has nearly sixty cottages and a hotel. One mile along the shore is the Presbyterian resort called We-che-ton-sing, an Indian word meaning "the little bay in the bay." Here are some twenty cottages and a hotel. Directly south from We-che-ton-sing is Bay View, a Methodist summer resort, where a camp meeting is annually held. Altogether it is a most beautiful region, not as yet invaded by the high prices which make life at the ordinary resort so impossible to those who are not rich.

THE MEN OF THE CONFERENCE

were not many in number as already indicated. First of all was Major Whittle, so constantly engaged in the Master's business. Then Prof. Moorehead of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Xenia, Ohio; Rev. Lewis of Joliet, Illinois, Bro. Walter of Grand Rapids, Bro. Dean from Iron Mountain City, Bro. H. M. Skeels of Pingre Grove, Ill., Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton and others.

Beside these gentlemen a number of ladies were in attendance. Mrs. Prof. Curtis of Chicago, Mrs. Skeels, Mrs. Prof. Moorehead, Mrs. Pres. Blanchard, and besides those from abroad a number of earnest praying men and women from the vicinity met thrice each day for the study of God's Word.

THE SUBJECT OF THE CONFERENCE was Jesus Christ, our righteousness, wisdom, sanctification and coming Redeemer. Brethren Moorehead and Whittle led the studies of the week chiefly, others assisting. A deeply religious spirit prevaded all the gatherings and on the Sabbath at the Lord's table, and in the preached word there was a manifest presence of the Holy Spirit. On Sabbath evening the Major preached a powerful sermon from the words, "Look unto me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth." Isa. 45:22. At the close of the sermon a number of persons rose to signify their purpose to lead a new life, and thus the conference closed. On Monday many of those attending went on an excursion to the island of Mackinaw, or, as it is spelled now, Mackinac, where are the summer cottages of Major Whittle, Bro. Gurdon S. Hubbard of Chicago, and others.

The meeting was the first one of the kind which the writer ever had the privilege of attending and was spiritually most profitable. The very conception of the meeting was delightful: a gathering of persons who believed in Jesus and watch for his appearing to meditate on his Word and pray that he may speedily appear. No sectarian godlings to glorify, but a glorious, interceding, coming Jesus to adore. If this imperfect note shall be the means of leading any of the readers of the Cynosure to the Believers' meeting of '85, this writing will be amply repaid, and others will receive the blessing which came to those at Harbor Springs.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

I notice in the issue of Sept. 4th, a brief communication from an officer of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of Illinois. The statements made in it are just what I made in my earliest connection with the order and until developments within the order taught me better. Now I greatly wonder that such statements ever came from my lips, as all the foundation I had for them was the common talk of Templars who for the most part had taken no degrees and knew little of what they were talking about.

The first statement in the communication referred to is that the Temple of Honor is not political. All I have to say about that is that the history of the political action of the order in Rhode Island is, to say the least, amusing. The next statement is that it is not a church, which (as temple and church are synonymous terms) is the same as saying, a church is not a church. The admission is made that its sessions are opened and closed with worship. A temple is a place of worship, and so is a church, the worshipers in one are called templars (which originally meant a student of the law), in the other, church members; or, collectively, the first are called "the temple," the other, "the church." That in Rhode Island at least the Temple of Honor is considered equal to the church is evident from the fact that the Sister Grand Templar made that assertion before a public assembly, and when resolutions were afterward offered to the Grand Temple disowning the sentiment they were rejected with spirit and unanimity. The record of that is found in the published records of Grand Temple of R. I., dated June 3, 1875. In view of the above facts the Temple of Honor stands fairly before the world as a rival of the church of Christ. If we examine the work of the order we find it presumes to do the same work as the church in an altogether different way. It professes to save men, and when they die, to place them in "that temple not made with hands eternal in the heavens," yet not as the church does it, through repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, but thorugh belief in its own peculiar theology, wherein Christ is ignored, and consequently the Christian's God is excluded, for inspiration teaches us that "he that hath not the Son hath not the Father." This false and fictitious god of the order is represented by a point within a circle, the commonly received symbol of sun-worship. The theology of the order is seen at greater length in the pamphlet sold by the National Christian Association, entitled "The Temple of Honor Illustrated."

One true statement is made: "The pledges of this order are as free to the inspection of those outside as to its members." So is all the secret work of the order up to and including the third degree, but when I was a member of the order the pledges as well as the other secret work were not to be revealed "for life." And that phrase "for life" antagonizes the moral science of the Bible and the church of Christ. The first commandment in the Bible regarding oaths is that, under certain conditions, they should be renounced. Paley and Wayland give several conditions which make void the oath or promise, but the Temple of Honor, like Freemasonry, teaches that the promise is never, under any circumstances, to be violated.

The principal work of the Temple of Honor is not temperance. The name of the order forbids the thought, and observation and experience teaches us the name is a correct one. Honor comes before temperance in order of importance. Temperance comes before honor in order or place only. Temperance takes the first or lowest place, it is the foundation upon which the fane is builded. The first initiation represents temperance, but the first degree does not, nor the second, nor the third. In the second degree, skeptic, infidel and profane are baptized alike into the salvation of the order. The Temple of Honor is a church having a theology which excludes sorrow for sin, repentance and all the distinctive doctrines of the church, demands as the only things necessary, the payment of a certain sum of money and acceptance of its sun-worship creed, and trains up its neophytes in honor and temperance for the salvation of their souls. Its chief end is salvation, honor and temperance being the means only. It is all a delusion and a snare, and has nothing in common with Christianity.

Providence, R. I.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS ON PROHIBITION.

A REPLY.

I have just read Mr. Douglass's extraordinary appeal to the Prohibitionists, and the assumptions by which he would induce the temperance men to abandon their principles, turn their backs upon their own party, and vote for the Republican candidates; which would be to stultify themselves, throw down their arms and surrender to the enemy. I must say, notwithstanding my old friendship and great respect for Mr. Douglass, his appeal lacks the good sense and sound reason, the strong logic and consistency, and consequently the force and conclusiveness which usually characterizes his efforts.

This is not, perhaps, so much his fault as the fault of the cause he undertakes to champion. The Republican party sustains to-day the same relation to the liquor business that the old Whig party did to the slavery business. The Whig party fellowshiped and sustained slavery and slaveholders; and its candidate, Henry Clay, was a slaveholder and an avowed defender of slavery, declaring that "200 years of legislation had sanctioned and sanctified negro slaves as property, and what the law made property, was property!"

Mr. Douglass then took the ground that to vote for such a party and such a man was a "pro-slavery vote," and most severely and justly denounced the inconsistency of those professed Abolitionists who could vote for the pro-slavery Whig party and its candidates. Mr. Douglass did not then "look one way and now another," but cast in his lot and voted with the young, feeble and dispised—but growing—Liberty party. He did not claim to be a good anti-slavery man and then vote for slavery and urge others to do the same inconsistent thing.

Just so to-day precisely. The Republican party is in fellowship with, upholds, and panders to the liquor power for its votes, as did the Whig party to slavery. It advocates and sustains the iniquitious license scheme, which is the great prop, the guy and main stay of the liquor business in this country. It throws over and around this traffic, so prolific of all that is bad in society, the broad shield and panoply of the law; thus making the government particeps criminis in the terrible crimes and woes which flow from the business, and forces upon the people its fearful demoralizations and its enormous burdens of taxation. At its recent National Convention in Chicago, the Republican party was appealed to by the eloquent and indefatigable Miss Willard, backed by a hundred thousand of the noblest women of the land, and by many of the leading temperance organizations of the country, representing a million of the best citizens of the United States, asking that the party declare for the submission of the question of prohibition to the people and let them decide it for themselves. To all of which the convention turned a deaf ear and a cold shoulder; and their candidate, Mr. Blaine, like Mr. Clay, seems to recognize everlasting and inalienable property rights in the liquor business; and in his famous "proposition" has not a word of condemnation of the traffic or even a suggestion of the evils it inflicts upon the country, but coolly contemplates and calculates on its continued legalization by the government and them distributing the unrighteous avails (the blood money) among the several States: thus virtually offering a bonus to the States for the legal ized perpetuation of the wicked and destructive traffic.

Mr. Logan's "moral philosophy" is still more abhorrent to every refined sentiment of justice, consistency and humanity. Like Mr. Blaine's, it includes the licensed continuation of the nefarious traffic by the government and then turning over the ill-gotten gains to the education of the people's children!

"O judgment! Thou hast fled," etc.

And these are the candidates Mr. Douglass would urge us to vote for! Mr. Douglass has the moral principle and the virtue to abstain from both the liquor and tobacco vices himself, and the manliness to let it be known to the world. Have the candidates he commends to temperance men either the moral principle, the virtue, or the manliness to go and do likewise?

Look at the humiliating and the mortifying spectacle presented by Mr. Blaine, playing the political demagogue and dodger at the recent Maine election, refusing the good women a vote to help the constitutional banishment of the liquor curse from their State; proving himself destitute of the courage of his own convictions, or, too cowardly to commit himself to the right—or in fact, to either side of the question. The excuse he gives for the unmanly act is a cunningly devised political quibble, unworthy a true and noble statesman. Said our Lord who went to the cross for his principles, "He that is not for me is against me. He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad!"

But, friend Douglass repeats to us the old, old "cant," You can't succeed. You can't elect, etc. I reply, what ought to be done can be done. "Be not faithless, but believing." Did Christ tell his little band of believers they could not succeed and had better therefore join the Jewish church? Did Wesley counsel his little brigade of "New Methodists" not to throw their labors and prayers and votes away, but to join the old heroic, Apostolic Episcopalian church "for the good it had done," and help it beat the old wicked Catholic church? Did Washington advise the little struggling army of patriots that, as they could not succeed, they had better disband and join and help the Tories? Did Gerrit Smith, William Goodell, Alvin Stewart, Lewis Tappan, Fred. Douglass tell the little Liberty party it could not "elect" James G. Birney;" would "throw away its votes" and therefore better join the Whig party and help whip the Democrats? I trow not!

But Mr. Douglass quotes Wendell Phillips as saying, "Parties are not born, they grow." Yes, but from what? Do they grow from nothing? Do they have no conception or beginning? The germs of the Liberty party were the anti-slavery men and women who hated slavery and loved liberty, and who came out from the old Whig and Democratic parties that sustained slavery into a more congenial climate where they grew into a power that finally forced the issue. The germs which grew into and constituted the Republican party were the anti-slavery elements transplanted from the Whig, Democrat, Free-Soil and Liberty parties. These germs grew into a giant and grand party which finally shook the continent, overthrew the all-dominant and dominating slave dynasty, recovered the country from its cruel and degrading power and saved it, we fondly hope, for liberty, sobriety and humanity.

How strange that this same triumphant party should soon forget the "Rock from whence it was hewn," the germs from which it sprang; and so soon put its own neck under a more galling yoke, and refuse to use its God-given power and providential opportunity for the overthrow of a greater foe to mankind, to human society, and to human government than was ever human slavery!

But, again, Mr. Douglass tells us there are other great interests and important issues to be looked after in a great nation like ours besides those growing out of the temperance reform and the abolition of the liquor traffic. That is true; and none are more sensible of the fact than temperance reformers. They yield to no class of their fellow citizens in their loyalty to righteous civil government, a just administration, civil service reform, a free ballot and a fair count, woman suffrage and civil equality before the law to all American citizens, settlement of national differences by arbitration, the Bible in schools, a Christian Sabbath, a sound currency by the general government, etc., etc., and we believe all these interests and issues will be quite as wisely, well and safely managed under the control and administration of intelligent, sober, temperance men and women as under a liquor dynasty, when drinking, rioting and drunkenness disgrace the White House and the national halls of legislation; and we think the good people will say AMEN!

No, my dear old friend, in the language of the good prophet Nehemiah to the Sanballats and Tobiahs down on the plains of Ono, when he was struggling to rebuild the prostrated walls of his loved city of Jerusalem, so say we: "We are doing a great work, so that we cannot come down; why should the work cease whilst we leave it and come down to you?"

As ever yours,

GEO. W. CLARK.

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1884.

INSURANCE LODGES.

What we wish to emphasize in this paper is the practical elimination of God from the toils and cares and responsibitities of every day life. There may be some communities of Christians whose lives and daily intercourse emit the sweet fragrance of the fear of God and the consciousness of his constant presence and loving guardianship. We have no knowledge of them. We have only read about their having existed in the good old days of yore. The spirit of our times is not so humble and godlike. The majority of professed Christians live as though they were without God and without hope in the world. The realization of the beautiful passage, "Thou God seest me," is deplorably rare. God is conceived to be present only in the sanctuary of his house. And consequently the knowledge of his presence there has little effect on the hearts that, consciously or unconsciously, are swayed by that wicked idea. How many are ruled by the conviction that they are under the ever watchful eye of God, while transacting business, going on a journey, moving in strange places and mingling among strangers, conversing with companions and conducting the affairs of their homes? Hence there is so little fear of God and so little trust in him. In prosperity they congratulate themselves on their success and pride themselves on their good management, prudence and shrewdness, without thinking of the mercy and long-suffering of God and of their accountability to him. In adversity they make the best of their misfortune and rely on the arm of flesh to carry them through. The conduct of the vast majority of Christians shows that their trust in the Lord's help, of which many make loud professions in days of prosperity, is in reality such a slender thread, such an imaginary and visionary thing, that the slightest misfortune and the most ordinary reverses snap it like a cobweb and disperse it like a puff of smoke in the open air. Careful observation of ourselves and our fellow-men oppresses us with the mournful fact that Christian confidence and trust is a rare thing in this scheming and self-reliant world. When people profess to believe in divine providence, yet feel secure only so far as they can see their way clear, their faith is a deception and their profession a lie. They are in fact putting their trust in flesh, practicing idolatry before God and a fearful deception upon themselves.

The evidences of this faithlessness are easily produced. From every quarter they force themselves upon our notice. The agencies are almost countless and still multiplying, by which people insure and secure themselves before and behind and on every side, so that, whatever may befall them, they will have a tangible assurance of being safe. Christians have caught the infatuation of the world, have been seduced by the specious and glaring sophistries of insurance agents and advocates of the lodge, and are swelling the ranks of those who take providence into their own hands and displace God from the responsible post he has assumed as Provider and Protector of his people. We cannot but look with disfavor and reproach upon any and everything that smacks of modern insurance in any form or shade. We have such a hostile feeling toward the whole system, not because we believe that there is no form of insurance that is perfectly legitimate and which a true Christian can with a good conscience adopt, but because we believe the whole arrangement to be the agency which is robbing people of the last spark of Christian trust in God the Father Almighty. Secret societies, building associations, mutual aid societies, insurance companies, etc., are all one in this respect. While some of them must and will be avoided, for other reasons also, by every enlightened and sincere Christian, the most innocent one among them forms a dangerous support for those who are already weak in the faith. They give the flesh a feeling of security that it otherwise has not. The desire for that security grows like every other lust. Two lodges or two policies furnish more security than one. We have met men who belong to four or five lodges, and that fact gave them an air of heathen satisfaction and composure quite lamentable to behold. The poisonous drug insinuates itself slowly and unobservedly into the moral and spiritual system, until the latter is a corrupt sepulchre, beautiful outwardly, but within full of dead men's bones.—Lutheran Standard.

THE LODGE A DESPOTISM.

The Columbus, Ohio, Daily Dispatch of the 5th inst., publishes the following manifesto from seceding members of the Enoch Lodge of Perfection, meeting probably in the same city. The Masonic bodies from which these men come out are of the Scottish Rite, and the Supreme Council whose control they throw off exercises its authority in the States north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi as Albert Pike's Council does for the rest of the country under the name of the Southern Jurisdiction. The statement of these seceders is worth preserving as a powerful argument against the whole Masonic system:

On the evening of the 15th day of August, 1884, Enoch Lodge of Perfection, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, assembled in Masonic Hall at the special request of Deputy E. T. Carson, who was present and presided over the meeting. At that meeting the following named officers and members of the Rite peremptorily resigned and withdrew their membership and forever renounce their allegiance and fealty to the so-called Supreme Council and its subordinate bodies for the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction of the United States, viz.:

William A. Hershiser, 32 degrees, Past M. W. and P. M.; A. B. Robinson, 32 degrees, M. W. and P. Master; A. B. Coit, 32 degrees, M. P. K., Senior Warden; Joseph P. Martin, 32 degrees, M. P. K., Junior Warden; G. A. Frambes, 32 degrees, M. E. Sov. P. Grand Master; Franklin Saunders, 32 degrees, Past M. E. Senior Grand Warden; H. N. P. Dole, 32 degrees; Past Grand Secretary Henry O'Kane, 32 degrees, Thrice Potent Grand Master; James C. Kroesen, 32 degrees, H. of T., Deputy Grand Master; Wm. M. Roberts, 32 degrees, V. Junior Grand Warden; W. H. Feaster, 32 degrees, Grand Captain of the Guard; F. W. Schueller, 32 degrees, Past G. C. Guard; R. B. Collier, 18 degrees; F. H. Breyfogle, 32 degrees, Grand Master of Ceremonies; J. S. Gold, 18 degrees; Louis Fink, 32 degrees; Jacob Felber, 32 degrees; C. E. Turner, 32 degrees; Denman R. Kinsell, 32 degrees; J. H. Collins, 32 degrees; C. G. Beck, 32 degrees; George L. Ruggles, 32 degrees.

As there seems to be a disposition on the part of some people to misrepresent the motives that prompted the above-named brethren to withdraw from the Northern Jurisdiction, the following reasons are set forth in explanation, so that, hereafter, there may be no mistake on the part of the uninformed and no excuse for the evil disposed:

1. The form and polity of the government of the Northern Jurisdiction is monarchical, and in most features an absolute one. As true citizens of the Republic we are bound not to recognize or foster in any way such an organization. Legitimate Freemasonry binds each member to execute the duty he owes to his "God, his country, his neighbor and himself." To encourage any society, whether it be secret or not, in the propagation of the doctrines of a one-man power, is a wrong act on the part of a true citizen of the Republic. The education and training of the youth of this country in the solid principles of a "government for the people, and by the people," is of vital and paramount importance to the future welfare of our country and its institutions. Absolutism is a thing of the past. It has no abiding place in legitimate Freemasonry or in these United States.

2. The Supreme Council, the ruling body of the Rite of the Northern Jurisdiction, has clothed itself with dictatorial powers, ignored the true constitutions that should govern the Rite, disfranchised every member of the order outside of itself, by suppressing the only legislative and representative body in the Rite—an act of "absolute despotism," worthy of the dark ages. It has even gone so far as to deny the right of petition, and does not hesitate to more than insinuate disloyalty in those who presume to ask of its august body a redress of their grievance. It imposes a heavy tax upon its subordinates. but refuses to grant them their right of representation. It forgets that taxation without representation lost to England her brightest gems on the American Continent. The Supreme Council elects and perpetuates itself for life. It promulgates the false doctrine, that the life power of the Rite lies in itself, and not in its subordinate bodies from whom come the contributions that sustain and nourish it. It advocates the doctrine of the divine right of kings, by foolishly placing itself in the line of succession to Frederick the Great, of Prussia, claiming the absolute power of that monarch, when it is pretty well understood at the present time Frederick knew nothing about the Rite. It has trampled under foot one of the brightest tenets of Masonry, that of justice to its fellow-men. In relation to its own members it reverses that most just principle that a trial should begin in a lower and end in a higher court. It has gone out of its way to lampoon and ridicule and defame other Rites that in all probability are entitled to as much respect as itself. It has attempted and to some extent succeeded in dragging its petty quarrels into the York Rite bodies, engendering strife where harmony should reign, thereby confessing its own inherent weakness; for if it be founded on pure and just principles it need fear no disintegration or loss of power, but if otherwise, its decline and fall will be only a question of time.

3. Alarmed at the rumblings of the coming storm, invoked by its arrogant and tyrannical conduct toward its subordinate bodies, the Supreme Council at its last session prepared and adopted an oath of fealty, and at once made it part of the constitutions, and then proceeded to force the said oath down the unwilling throats of its members under threats of discipline, in order to still more enslave them and prevent a revolution. A portion of said oath reads as follows: "Will hold illegal and spurious every other body established within its jurisdiction claiming to be a Supreme Council, and every other body of said Rite within the same jurisdiction that does not hold its power immediately or immediately from said Supreme Council; and will hold no Masonic communication whatever with any member of the same, nor allow them to visit any Masonic body of which I may be a member."

The Blue Lodge, Council, Chapter, and Commandery of the York Rite are all Masonic bodies, but have no relationship whatever with the so-called Scottish Rite; yet here is a command to carry this ostracism into place where it has no right or business to go. It asks a Mason to do and perform an unrighteous and unmasonic act. It seeks to involve the original Rite of Masonry in the quarrels of the Northern Jurisdiction. In a word, the same oath of fealty is about the smallest and most contemptible thing the Northern Jurisdiction Council could originate to entrap its neophytes with. It speaks for itself.

4. At the last meeting of the Supreme Council the following startling doctrine was enunciated by its Committee on the Condition of the Rite, in answer to a petition for "representation with taxation," viz.: "the same would regret the first step towards the modification of the organic principles which now distinguish Masonry, and partic larly that feature which gives to it its aristocratic monarchical peculiarity. This is one of its life springs which assures its perpetuity; and so, and finally, 'Should a representative form of government ever fasten its poisonous fangs upon the vitals of the Ancient Accepted Rite, the death knell of the order will reverberate through every chamber of the Temple.'"

After reading the foregoing, if any Mason should still doubt, let him read what even the Deputy of the Supreme Council, E. T. Carson, has to say in relation to the absolute despotism of that body. In speaking of a respectful petition presented to the Supreme Council by the Council of Deliberation of the State of Illinois, and which was rejected, he says: "Here we have a plain and absolute denial by the Supreme Council of the right of the subordinates to even petition that illustrious body for any change in the organic law." "The logic of this argument is Bourbonism in its most offensive aspect. Is it treason to advocate a change in the constitution of a State? The same principle applies in our Masonic government."

Again he says, "Under our present organization the membership of the order has no voice whatever in its government, not even the right to respectfully petition for any modification of the organic law which is supposed to be for the protection and benefit of all the members of the Rite." And "It was never intended either by the constitutions of 1762 or those of 1786 that the masses of which the order is composed should be disfranchised." In speaking of the Supreme Council exempting its own members from discipline in the subordinate to which they also belong, he says "he believes that the position assumed is an aggressive and unnecessarily offensive encroachment upon the rights of subordinates." "Because power and absolutism may have aggregated to itself until it has become arrogant and despotic, through the apathy or inertness of the governed, does it follow that it is permanent or stable? To the thinking, philosophic mind, apparent strength and power is often the unmistakable evidence of weakness and final disaster! Before the French revolution, when French people were ground into the dust by royalty, the nobility and the clergy; when, politically, the French nation had no existence; when the superb Louis the XIV. exclaimed 'The State! I am the State!' when the king was the sole governing power, he alone promulgating laws and imposing taxes; when the bulk of the population, both urban and rural, may be said to have literally possessed no rights, except that of paying taxes, there were a few who saw that the apparent strength and power and absolutism was a sham; they sounded the tocsin of alarm, but in vain. A brilliant and truthful writer of the history of this eventful period in modern history has forcibly and truly said, 'A revolution, therefore, was inevitable because it was necessary.'"

The Supreme Council is Louis exemplified. By the evidence of its own members and officers, it is no longer worthy the allegiance of those who believe in a pure, righteous and just government, and we have therefore resigned and withdrawn, fully and completely, from all connection with it. BY THE COMMITTEE.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

WILLIAM DANIEL,

OF MARYLAND.

PLATFORM.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

EX-GOV. ST. JOHN'S appointments for the rest of the campaign are as follows: Oct. 1, Sullivan, Ind.; Oct. 2, Indianapolis; Oct. 3, 4, and 5, Ohio; Oct. 7, 8, and 9, Michigan; Oct. 11 and 12, Philadelphia; Oct. 13, Baltimore; Oct. 14, New York, Oct. 15, Brooklyn; Oct. 16, Boston; Oct. 18, Newark, N. J.; Oct. 21, Perry, N. Y.; Oct. 22, Rochester, N. Y.; Oct. 23, Ashtabula, Ohio; Oct. 25, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Oct. 27, Marion, Ind.

—"One thing is certain," says a Republican sheet: "If the Democratic Convention should be held next week the name of Grover Cleveland would not be mentioned. Another thing is equally certain: If the Republican Convention should be held next week there would be no other name mentioned than that of Blaine. All this after a discussion of sixty days."

—Funk and Wagnalls, the well known New York publishers, are issuing a prohibition campaign paper to be called The Voice, which will be a valuable addition to our temperance literature and at the cheap rate of 25 cents for two months. Their prospectus says:

"The time has surely come for the advocates of temperance to make politicians of both parties understand that they too are a numerous body of men who have also the courage of their convictions—a class of voters politicians dare not any longer ignore when they set about framing platforms and nominating candidates. The object of the paper is to show why it is of great importance that the vote for St. John should be a large one. The paper will be filled with strong, short, compact arguments in favor of prohibition.

CALL FOR AN IOWA PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

The undersigned Prohibitionists of Iowa make a call for a Prohibition mass convention for the nomination of a State electoral ticket in conjunction with the National ticket headed by St. John and Daniel. All men and women of Iowa who are in sympathy with this movement are invited to convene in the court house in Marshalltown on Wednesday, Oct. 1st, 1884.

Joseph Steere, West Branch; John G. Hoover, West Branch; Seth Cox, Oskaloosa; J. P. Osborne, Dexter; Isaac T. Gibson, Salem; A. F. Foster, Mt. Vernon; and sixty others whose names will be read in convention.

Those who want information or excursion rates, or who wish to lend aid by letter, address,

A. F. FOSTER, Mt. Vernon, Iowa.

ST. JOHN AND DANIEL.

SKETCHES OF THE CANDIDATES.

John P. St. John was born at Brockville, Franklin Co., Ind., Feb. 25, 1833. His father was a man of considerable education and superior natural ability, and his mother was a woman of beautiful and exalted character. At a tender age young St. John began to assist on his father's farm, working morning and evening and attending the log school-house in the middle hours of the day. This kind of life was continued a few years, during which the boy developed into a student. He was pursuing a systematic course of study before he emerged from boyhood into youth, and depended on the kindness of neighbors for the loan of books suitable for general reading. The family was poor and grew poorer on account of the intemperate habits of the head. For this reason St. John went out to work while in his teens at a salary of $6 a month. He continued a grocer's clerk until nearly 20 years old, when he left home to try his fortune in California. There he followed such occupations as offered, from chopping wood to comparatively lucrative work on steamboats. Of the cash he made a good share was sent to his mother, and the habits of the young man were uniformly exemplary. He has himself told the story of his first departure from home, and of the vow he then made to his mother. Says he:

"Poor mother was almost broken-hearted, though she did not say it. Father, a good man, a loving husband and a kind father always, would have been better off but for his habit of imbibing too freely from the social glass; consequently things were not about home as they used to be before this fault had overtaken him. Mother was not so cheerful and happy as formerly, although she never spoke of her fears and secret sorrow; yet I saw it all and, boy as I was, I hated the demon drink that had made such a change in my father, and broken the heart of my mother, and darkened the home of my boyhood. I resolved that the disastrous poison should never pass my lips and that any thing I could say or do should be done to put the blighting curse from other homes. Mother called me to her and said: 'John, my son, promise me you will always be a man wherever you go. I made that promise, and wherever I have been, and however tempted to go astray or to do anything I knew that my mother would not approve, that promise kept me right. O mothers! talk to your boys, and get them to promise you not to enter a saloon and imbibe the poisonous draught. Boys, think, would God want you to do this? If your thoughts won't go as high as that, think of your mother, your next best friend to God. Think whether or not she would have you do such a thing, and if she would not, do not do it."

At this period of his life St. John made voyages to South America, to Mexico, and the Sandwich Islands, and also took a journey through Central America. In 1852 and 1853 he served against the Indians, and was twice wounded.

A life so changing and hard presented few opportunities of study, but the young aspirant did manage to pick up some acquaintance with the law during these years, and in 1860 began his career as lawyer by taking a clerkship with a firm at Charleston, Ill. This led to his becoming partner with the gentlemen who had engaged his services, a fortunate connection, which lasted until the outbreak of the war, when St. John enlisted as a private in the Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. He proved to be a good soldier, and rose to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. When he returned to private life he settled at Independence, Mo., where he practiced law for several years.

St. John became popular as a speaker in the political campaign of 1868. The next year he moved into Kansas, settling at Olathe, where he continued the practice of his profession, and took an active part in politics. In 1872 he was elected to the State Senate of Kansas, his first public office, and in 1878 he was persuaded to accept the Republican nomination for Governor of the State. He was triumphantly elected, and at once gave his undivided and undisguised support to the prohibitory measures, then agitating the State. Re-elected to a second term, he saw and was largely the agent in, the accomplishment of one of the great—the greatest—purpose of his life, the triumphant approval of the prohibitory amendment by the people. Compelled to accept a nomination for a third time, the wily liquor interest, supported by the monopolies whom he had made enemies through his rejection of all and every overture to prostitute his high office to their demands, defeated him, although the cause for which he had labored and suffered was not involved in his personal discomfiture. Called forth from a retirement which he would gladly have maintained for some time, by the earnest friends of the cause of which he had become at once the most prominent champion and victim, he has for the last two years visited many of the States and Territories, speaking with ever increasing power in favor of prohibition, as the political as well as social and economical "Question of the Age." How his mission has been received, thousands of our readers know by personal experience; to any who may never have heard him speak on his favorite subject, permit us to quote the tribute paid him by the peerless President of the W. C. T. U., Miss Frances E. Willard, as she seconded his nomination at Pittsburgh: "The heroes of the people," she said, "must always be the men of the people, who have won their way up through difficulties and discouragements to the Pantheon of the American heart. He (St. John) belonged now to fortune and to fame, and his was one of the names not born to die. When slavery demanded the bloody argument of war, he bared his own broad breast to the enemy. The new war has come and the old issues are buried forever in the graves of the blue and the gray. He has been raised too high for defamation. To-day we need a sun-glass that will focus the most rays. We need a Pathfinder across the mountains of difficulty, a new Fremont, who will find a way over the rock-ribbed mountains of vice, of bigotry, and of indifference, to the valley where peaceful and Christian homes rear themselves as monuments to industry, contentment and devotion." Nominated by acclamation, after having declined repeated requests that his name might be presented with his consent, his modest acquiescenee in the action of the Convention, "looking to God for his guidance in the path of duty," fitly supplements and rounds out a public career only fairly commenced, the future of which promises to be as brilliant as its past has been laborious and honorable.

Ex-Governor St. John is a man of interesting and pleasing manners and a ready and effective speaker, impressing the hearer by the sincerity of his convictions and honesty of purpose rather than by flights of eloquence. His utterances are carefully considered and well expressed, unaffected and manly. His home is at Olathe, Kansas, where he has an interesting family. He has one son in Washington City. He is a member of the Congregational church in Olathe, of which Rev. B. F. Worrell was lately pastor. His religious convictions are frequently manifested in his public speaking. One grand object of the reform movement in politics is to teach the great parties that to-day, as well as three thousand years ago, there is a "God in Israel" whose laws cannot be disregarded, whose judgments are to be feared, and whose presence and power among the nations must never be left out of the account.

WILLIAM DANIEL.

William Daniel, candidate of the Prohibition party for the Vice-Presidency, was born on Deal's Island, Somerset Co., Maryland, January 24, 1826, was reared to farm life, and until the age of 17 had only such educational advantages as were afforded by the country schools of that day in a slaveholding State. In 1844 he entered Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Penn., and four years later graduated therefrom, standing third in a class of twenty-eight. Hon. John A. J. Creswell, Postmaster-General under President Grant, and Prof. John W. Marshall, afterward President of Dickinson College, were his classmates, between whom the honors of first and second were shared. On leaving college Mr. Daniel entered the office of William S. Waters, a lawyer of note, as a student, and was admitted to the Bar in 1851, since which time he has been a successful practitioner in the courts of Maryland.

In 1853 Mr. Daniel entered politics, and as a Whig was sent to the legislature. His term of two years having expired, the Americans returned him as their repre-itative for another term. At the close of this term the nericans sent him to the senate for the term of four ars. Serving one session, he resigned, removing to ltimore for the purpose of becoming established as a actitioner of law in that city. Mr. Daniel was a mem- r of the Maryland State Constitutional Convention, ld May, 1864, for the purpose of providing for the ancipation of the slaves of that Commonwealth. In 36, through the solicitations of Henry Winter Davis d friends, Mr. Daniel ran as an independent candidate Judge of the Court of Equity, but was defeated.

Though the son of a slave-owner, and though from his ldhood surrounded by all the influences with which cial custom and law had invested slavery, Mr. Daniel ver gave consent or support to the institution. On the ntrary, he persistently declared his convictions in op- sition to the institution, and as persistently sought its erthrow. Hence, while residing in a Democratic State, has for more than twenty-five years been in political liation with the Republican party, and not uutil the th of July, 1884, did he openly declare that his allegi- ce to the party had ceased.

While the prohibition of the drink traffic was not an ue in the campaign which resulted in seating Mr. Dan- in the legislature in 1853, the question did become an ue in the legislature that year. A bill containing pro- ions similar to the Maine law was submitted, and Mr. niel immediately became its champion. Two years er the issue went to the people, and on that issue Mr. niel was again re-elected to the legislature. Again in 57 the issue reverted to the people, and as the sup- rter of prohibition (in the form of local option) Mr. niel was sent to the senate.

From 1858 to 1872, a term of fourteen years, the anti- very contest, and the questions growing out of the ne, took precedence of all other issues, aud during s time prohibition was not an issue in Maryland pol- cs. But in 1872 a temperance revival swept over the te, which resulted in the organization of the Maryland mperance Alliance, a society having for its object the pression of the sale of intoxicants within that Com- nwealth. Mr. Daniel was made President of this ganization, and has been re-elected every year since. rough this society the prohibition movement has been ried forward in Maryland, and through Mr. Daniel l the Alliance, what is known as the Option Law was acted. In principle, purpose and method of enforce- nt, the law is as strictly prohibitory as the Maine law. liffers from other prohibitory laws only in its optional ture. Thirteen counties, out of the twenty-three com- sing the State of Maryland, have at appointed elec- ns asked for and secured the protection of the law. five of the remaining counties elections have been lered by the legislature, and Mr. Daniel predicts that r out of the five will secure the application of the v. The thirteen counties now under prohibitory law all Democratic strongholds. The county of Frederick t an overwhelming majority against the law. It is a publican stronghold. By reason of the great work Daniel has wrought in bringing democratic Mary- d into the ranks of prohibitory States, he is farmiliarly own to the public there as "Maryland's Little Giant." For ten years Mr. Daniel was a trustee of Dickinson llege, and is now the treasurer of the finance com- ttee which holds and disburses all trust funds belong- to, or by will donated to the college. He has been active member of the Methodist Episcopal church ce 1848, and during this time has held official relations rewith.

Mr. Daniel's appearance at the Pittsburgh Convention the head of the Maryland delegation; his selection as porary chairman of the convention, and his sub- uent nomination for vice-president, virtually by animous acclaim, are matters of current history, famil- r to all intelligent readers.

POMEROY TO ST. JOHN.

THE CHANGE ENDORSED.

According to my judgment, if the Prohibition and erican parties do not unite both will be defeated. As as I can judge both agree on prohibition: and by the p of God, and earnest, active efforts on our part, we gain the day this fall, and shouts of victory be heard through the land. Then the lodge will be the next at issue. We shall be able to make a clean sweep, for Americans are truly all, or nearly all prohibitionists. t let us stick to every plank in our platform. We are king progress and moving along about at the same io that anti-slavery did, and at the appointed time God d, "It is enough." So he will say again, if we be thful to our grand, beloved party.—P. Kribs, Lamer- e, O.

We have just read the several letters in the Cynosure Sept. 11, concerning the change of candidates. We nk, considering all the circumstances, the change is all ht. If we vote for St. John and Daniel we shall vote them as Americans, and candidates of the American rty. The American platform is the only one that we uld ever conscientiously endorse as a whole. We have cently published it in our paper (Michigan Holiness cord) and expect to heartily support it. Think the atform should be published in every religious paper, d be supported by every Christian man and woman. e only right way to deal with sin, by law, is to prohib it. I had just as soon vote for the man who favored secret lodge or favored licensing the liquor traffic as e in favor of licensing houses of prostitution. Every ofcssed Christian who will support a party that toler- es and licenses such an evil should blush for shame.— B. Shaw, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The unselfish, manly, and wise course taken by the noble banner bearers of the American party, Pomeroy and Conant, in so wisely and meekly referring to the National Committee and sustaining constituency before transferring their party banners to St. John and Daniel, and so readily and heartily accepting the decision when their advisers consented to their voluntary position, drew tears from my eyes. Nor did the sufficiently plain, and yet not unnecessarily provoking, acceptance of St. John and Daniel of our "anti" doctrine dry up those tears. I hope all of our American friends will be wise enough to fall in rank and cast in their votes for St. John and Daniel. God bless the reform and give it success.—H. S. Limbocker, Manhattan, Kans.

I am glad a bridge has been built, that a coalition can be effected without compromise. I hope Americans will put on a bold front now and act with so much discretion for principle that we can magnetize the honest part of the Prohibition party. By our present action we show a spirit of conciliation and not selfishness, and I hope that our God may so bless our action that no Philistine can shear us of our strength.—J. C. Young, Custer City, Pa.

PROHIBITION.—IS IT NATIONAL OR ONLY STATE?

Blaine's excuse for not voting prohibition in Maine was the pretense that it was only a State question. This being the fact, when the elections were being held for State officers, was the very reason why he was inexcusable for not voting upon it, seeing he belongs to that State. His excuses are not those of principle but of the merest time-serving at best, and have not a shadow of the truest manhood. If a word here could influence any one, I would implore, young men especially, to be true to their convictions of right: that firstly, THAT secondly, and THAT thirdly, in all their actions, personal, political, and religious. Good seed yields good fruit. To sacrifice right to expediency is ever dangerous to the integrity of the person and the ultimate success of any truly good cause. "We ever ought to obey God rather than men," even if the jail or the scaffold gloom in the pathway.

Thus, therefore, as our heroes did in the recent days of slavery, if one is convinced of the awful curse of drunkenness let him stand up for its "abolition" throughout our whole country. Slavery was local in the South. Let the South manage it, said our political party men; but what were its effects? Away with such sophistry! How absurd! What, let an evil grow up in Utah, or in our national capital and domain, and because the battle is not national don't fight it in the State, or because the war is not waged in the State don't vote against it on the national ticket! Could fallacy and absurdity farther go?

What folly it is for aspirants to public favor thus to commit political suicide! How blind they must be when to save a vote they shrink from taking part against an acknowledged evil because "not national," as if the eye, or ear, or foot, or head, was not a part of the body! Surely any party or person who would build upon an acknowledged public evil cannot have the slightest claim upon voters who "dare to be true" and who "dare to do right."

Only a few years ago neither of our great political parties would commit themselves to the abolition of slavery. "It was not a sin per se," as said several ministers on the old-time Atlantic Liner Columbia to the writer over thirty years ago. And this was the sentiment of many religious people in these past days. But what is it now? O what misery would have been saved if the country had then listened to the contemned abolitionists and their plea for justice to the slaves! But alas! it floated down the stream of expediency until it was caught in the rapids and whelmed over the falls of the very Niagara of civil war. The war slew its thousands of men and swallowed its millions of money in a few years, but insatiate King Alcohol has slain succeeding generations past, and cunningly excites and deludes the one to-day to its destruction.

But hurrah for St. John and Daniel! How significant are these names! How suggestive of loyalty to truth and right and ultimate victory! Yours truly, A. Scor.

General Butler as a Candidate.—In a single line of a speech made lately, General B. F. Butler incidentally re-affirms his old political creed that the Constitution is to be respected and obeyed, whether it agrees with or contradicts the law of God. "When I was released by the war," he says, "from my obligations to slavery, I did what I could to put down that evil." It is the old story. Herod "for his oath's sake" murdered John the Baptist. Slavery was an evil, and the slave had a right to his freedom, but we had bargained away his liberty in the provisions of the Constitution, and we must regard them until the rebellion of the South set us free from these bonds. The man who holds that any human compact can annul the binding obligation of the moral law, is unfit to be a ruler of men. And any law or compact which contravenes the law of God, and exposes the souls of men to this temptation, is a national crime calling down judgment and demanding repentance. The nation must yet enthrone in the Constitution the principle that the law of God is of supreme authority, and that any provisions of human law which are in conflict with it are null and void.—Christian Statesman.

Iowa Voters.—All parties in Iowa desiring Electoral and State American tickets headed by St. John and Daniel, will address the undersigned, stating number and including postage for return. Persons desiring to contribute to the expense of the same are requested to remit. Now let no one fail of having tickets.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MRS. GOUGAR ON SUFFRAGE AND TEMPERANCE.

Menomonie, Wis.

Dear Cynosure:—The people of Menomonie were recently favored with a rich treat in a series of lectures by Mrs. Helen M. Gougar of Indiana, editress of Our Herald, a lively and able temperance and woman suffragist paper of La Fayette. The first of the series, Sept. 6th, was a powerful plea for woman suffrage; and the objections raised against it were sent flying like the chaff of the summer threshing floor.

"Woman," some say, "should not defile herself in the dirty pool of politics." She asks to know who has made politics a "dirty pool." Politics is defined as "the science of government." How would it sound to speak of the "dirty science of government?"

One Dr. Hamilton, in an essay on the subject, says, "Women are such liars that they cannot be trusted with the ballot." She thinks they can hardly excel some of the men who run the campaign papers. Dr. Hamilton says that the women who started the woman suffrage movement were a restive, uneasy, ambitious, slanderous set of women. But it was the noble, Christian, intelligent Quaker women who first plead with Congress for the right of petition in behalf of the poor slaves. And the mammoth petitions which from time to time pour into the National and State Legislatures, are headed by the leading Christian women of the land.

Again, Dr. Hamilton says that the brain of woman is ten per cent smaller than man's and therefore she ought not to vote. "Upon investigation I found, says Mrs. Gougar, the relative size of the two brains to be as stated," but I felt sure there must be some way of escape from the deduction that on that account woman ought not to vote. On looking farther, I found the desired relief. I found that it was also declared that woman's brain was of finer and more complex mechanism, and capable of finer work than man's, and I am sure that the country, legislatively speaking, needs finer work." "The legislatures of the country have plenty of brains, but they need a greater and better heart—the mother heart—to legislate for the moral protection of the rising generation."

It is not any inherent difference in the goodness or badness of the two sexes, but the conventional standard of morals set up by each for the other, that compels greater moral rectitude on the part of woman. And it is for woman to say that men shall adopt a higher standard. But she can speak authoritatively in the matter, as applied to office seekers, only when she has the power of the ballot." "There is hope of removing the whisky curse from the land only as the women, who are the greatest sufferers from it, are allowed to assist in voting it out."

"The same with the curse of Mormonism. The men in Congress are dilly-dallying with it, filling or hoping to fill their pockets with bribes as a reward for letting it alone. There is not a woman in Utah who is a polygamist. The men are the only ones. The woman can have but the fortieth part of one man, but the man can have forty women."

"Woman's vote has wonderfully purified and elevated the elections in Wyoming Territory, making them clean, quiet and orderly as a Sabbath meeting, as testifies one of her most eminent jurists."

Mrs. Gougar gave her second lecture Sunday evening in the Baptist church. She read the thirteenth chapter of Romans to show that the Bible was, in part at least, a book of politics, and in justification of presenting the moral phases of the subject on the Sabbath, in the house of God. Her subject was the "Aims and Methods of the National Liquor League." That organization was formed to oppose and defeat the plans of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the first plank in their platform was a resolution declaring that they must prevent the passage of the woman suffrage act, for in this act would come the last hope of prohibition. But the woman's crusade, founded and carried on with prayer and earnest effort, grown now to the W. C. T. U., with a membership of 300,000, with multitudes of sympathizers, both men and women, is, with God's blessing, marching to assured victory. If all professed temperance men would, and all the Christian and temperance women could vote as they pray, the good work would soon be accomplished.

The Liquor Leagues of Kansas have arranged for colonizing the State with beer guzzlers from abroad, and intend to resubmit the prohibition act to the people, and to destroy it. But if the women of Kansas to-day had the privilege of voting, they would "fix things" in the Legislature, the Supreme Court, and in every department, so that the liquor question would be forever settled.

The Liquor League, with its vast money power on the one side, and the Christian men and women of the land upon the other, are marshalling for the mighty conflict in which the well-being of the present and of unborn generations is involved. Let the women have power to vote as well as pray, and prohibition will soon be triumphant. So thinks Mrs. Gougar, and her large and spell-bound audiences seemed to think so, too. And really it looks strongly that way. Who can dispute it? But some of us apprehend that there will be found one terrible obstacle in the way, of which the leaders of this movement either do not dream, or seeing, dare not, at least do not, say anything about it. We think that the Freemasonry of the country, so strongly interwoven with the Liquor League, will be found stubbornly opposed to woman suffrage.

We have forgotten the name of that member of the Congressional Committee before whom Mrs. Gougar and others were permitted to present their cause, and who, with tears streaming down his cheeks, declared that their petition ought to be granted. But it afterwards appeared that he "cried one way and voted the other." Neither do we know that he was a Freemason, but we believe that he is, or that he stands in fear of the secret society power of his constituents.

May be the good women of the land will be obliged to bring their powers of speech and pen, and of their prayers, to bear upon the secrecy abomination, to clear the way for the possession of the ballot.

W. W. AMES.

DR. McCREA AND SOME OF HIS MASONIC COMPANIONS.

PARKVILLE, Mo.

Rev. A. J. McFarland's letter to Dr.(?) McCrea is an interesting and eogent document. It is worthy of careful reading by every one who sees it.

Masonry, like the stately peacock, loves to spread itself out before the gaping world. But why such a remarkable fondness for religious display? They even invade the places where we lay our dead to rest, and put their impious folly upon monuments. The square and compass, with their mystic "G", and beneath, "Gone to the celestial lodge above," are often seen over the graves of departed church members. In the cemetery of Troy, Ill., I saw the above display upon the monument over the grave of a preacher. As I beheld it I wondered whether the "Reverend" had entered the place named as a Mason or as a Christian. No, it could not be the latter, because the grand entrance of the "H'd Q'r's." of the Masonic "G. A. U." is tyled, no doubt, to keep out all "cowans;" and such, of course, are all who have never sworn away their manhood, their liberty, their conscience, their religion and their lives.

Dr. McCrea is another example to prove that the Masonic system takes away, in addition to everything else that is worth having, a man's judgment. I am willing to allow, you see, that some of these oath-burdened Christians are honest men; they "mean well," you know, and really and truly try to serve God and honor his Son. When I come into intimate relations with such a man, I cannot leave him alone in regard to his delusion.

I have had some interesting experiences in that direction. One of the elders of the session where I served once as pastor was, as I now yet believe, an earnest, well-meaning Christian; but, strange to say, an adhering Royal Arch Mason. In conversation with him one day, on this subject, he claimed that Masonry was doing much good everywhere; that the lodges of the place (Odd-fellows and Masons) were doing more for charity than the churches, and fulfilled their duty better than Christians; that it was not true that the name of Christ was excluded from the lodge-prayers; and that in his lodge any one who pleased could pray in Christ's name in the lodge meetings. When I remarked that it was also the privilege of any member present objecting to such prayer, to complain to the Grand Lodge, he replied, "There is no one to complain." He stoutly maintained that the prayers offered in the lodge to which he belonged were Christian prayers, in the true sense. Now, I believe this man is sincere, but that he needs "more light"—not in Masonry—is quite evident.

Another elder, who is an active and liberal-handed Christian, and truly his pastor's "right-hand man," is a Mason of three degrees. I asked him one day how a man of his mental calibre and uncompromising devotion to principle could be an adhering Mason. His answer was that old, threadbare, stereotyped one we so often hear: "I see no particular wrong in it."

"Do you see any particular good in it?" I asked.

"No, I can't say that."

"Why, then, are you a Mason?"

"Oh, I don't know. I don't care much about it one way or the other."

"But, as a Christian, you ought to care. Haven't you studied the philosophy and symbolism of Masonry?"

"No," he answered; "I never cared enough about it to study more than just to learn what was necessary to keep my standing."

A blind Mason, I say. And of such there are thousands. And yet, be it well emphasized here, this man is among the giants in intellect; a prominent lawyer and ex-judge, and, as such, possessing and exercising more than ordinary integrity. He did not believe, he said, that Masonry, as such, hindered the administration of justice in our civil courts; and I believe he is honest about that, so far as he is concerned.

This village was recently incorporated. I heard it said that the "city fathers" did it so that they could have a saloon. I don't believe that is quite true, but, at all events, we now have a saloon, and a calaboose, too, of course, and a "city marshal." But the queerest of all the queer things is, the saloon-keeper himself is the marshal.

J. D. GEHRING.

THE NASHVILLE BAPTIST REVIEWED.

GIBBS' CROSS ROADS, Tenn.

Dr. J. R. Graves, LL.D., of Memphis, Tenn., heaps sarcasm, logic and irony on the First Baptist church, Nashville, for having called on the Masons to lay the corner-stone of their new church building, in one issue of his paper, the Tennessee Baptist, and in the next issue levels his cannon at what he calls the "Woman's Suffrage" party; evidently to try to alleviate Masonic suffering inflicted by his recent sledge-hammer blows. I give one or two extracts:

"The Woman's Suffrage party has succeeded in disgusting all thoughtful people by the policy and plans for conducting its political campaign, demonstrating that female suffrage can offer no promise of purifying the polls, but contrary-wise. [Was ever such a slander uttered against our mothers, wives and sisters?] and the Prohibition party, that claims to be pre-eminently the 'godly party,' and that all ministers and all Christians should unite with and work through it, comes forth and enters the political campaign with a President and Vice President candidate as though the election of these men, which no one believes probable or possible, would cause one barrel of whisky less to be manufactured or one glass less to be drank in America." The learned doctor closes by saying, "We advise all Baptists to let this political Prohibition party severely alone."

His excuse for all this tirade is a paragraph from the Memphis Appeal, a Democratic paper, charging the Prohibition party with "Sabbath desecration" by holding a ratification meeting at Pittsburgh on Sunday. Whether this is so I am not able to say, but how much better is the Christian editor who would keep his wife, his mother, his daughter or his sister in bondage by refusing them equal rights and privileges with himself—yea, even heaps vile epithets on the heads of those who earnestly labor for their emancipation; and by refusing to prohibit, offers the tempting and intoxicating bowl to his father, brother or son—how much better is he than those who zealously labor to those ends every day in the week? Candid readers can decide for themselves.

May the time speedily come when it may be said of those whom the Son has made free, that they are "free indeed." May the Cynosure, like the pole star, continue to guide us aright.

REV. W. H. SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

WISCONSIN STORMS.

Heavy rains on the 8th and 9th inst. on the head waters of the Chippewa river, produced disastrous consequences at Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire, Wisconsin. All the bridges on that river at those two places, except the railway bridge of the Omaha line at Eau Claire, have been swept away. A hundred houses, at least, and other buildings at the latter place were carried away, and several lives reported lost. Various small bridges, dams and mills at different points were carried off; and the loss of hay and grain and stock on the river bottoms is immense. Communication is so badly cut off that full and accurate information has not yet been obtained. A terrible tornado at the same time nearly annihilated the village of Clear Lake on the North Wisconsin railroad, and produced a terrible destruction of timber over a wide area of land. Three persons were killed outright at Clear Lake, and several others badly injured.—W. W. AMES, Menomonie, Wis.

NEAR TO HELL.

I am well acquainted with an old preacher, a pretty good preacher, and a pretty clever one. He belonged to an anti-secrecy church; but he had a special tooth for secrecy, so he recently left his first love and joined a secrecy church and a secret order. Soon after he held a protracted meeting in his new home, and one night, while down praying with more than usual physical power for sinners, at the close of his entreaty he fell as dead, and lay until after midnight. The next night when he got up to preach he said that he was as near hell the night before as he wanted to get. How can it be otherwise? It was he that stood in the way of sinners, and sinners saw it, too, and remarked about it. No doubt he saw the black flag wave, and realized his situation. God sometimes gives the faithful pilgrim a glimpse of his final happy home to encourage him in his Christian journey. He also sometimes opens the eyes of the unsaved that they may see the drawn sword before it is too late.—L., Big Springs, Kansas.

HOW DO YOU KNOW?

In tract No. 6, by Eli Tapley, "A Voice of Warning," occurs the following passage: "150,000 men have left Masonry in the last ten years." As I am prone to use statistics against the lodge, and learning from experience that at times figures given as statistics are not accurate (not that I desire to discredit Bro. Tapley; I would to God it were 550,000; yea, to the last man), I would like to inquire where the figures were obtained, so that, should I use them, I can, if pressed, give authority, for you know with a great many, if I refer to the tract alone as authority, it would be like throwing water on a duck's back. Would it not be well, if another edition of that tract is printed, to give in a foot-note the authority for the numbers, so it could not be said to be written merely for effect and had no foundation?—J. C. YOUNG, Custer City, Pa.

The authority is Colman's Masonic Register, published a few years since in Kentucky—Louisville, we believe.

THE GREAT REVOLUTIONS

Among governments have often been the result of the combination, as it were, of the principles of Christianity with those of civil government for the destruction of the heathenism and corruption which may have been found in them. The great reformations in Europe by Luther and Knox partook largely of political changes by the physical forces of the respective countries. But we shall not expect to find the purest churches evolved from out of such unions of civil and ecclesiastical wisdom! The union of church and state is, under Christ, characterized as adulterous, and the woes of God's judgment are pronounced against the corrupt churches which are ruled by the state. The church has one head; viz., the Lord Jesus Christ, and one code of laws, the Holy Scriptures. And the present dispensation is held as dating from the day of Pentecost, for not until then could the Gospel of the crucified, risen and ascended Lord be preached for salvation

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON I.—Oct. 5, 1884.—Solomon Succeeding David.—1 Kings 1: 22-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind.—1 Chron. 28: 9.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Adonijah's usurpation. Vs. 22–25. Solomon was a type of the Messiah in being his father's chosen heir (Heb. 1: 2; Matt. 3: 1). In the peacefulness of his reign (1 Chron. 22: 9). In his just and merciful rule (Ps. 72: 2, 4, 12–14). But as there were some who did not wish to see him on the throne, so there are many now who say of God's own beloved Son, "We will not have this man to reign over us;" and who try to set up a king of their own choosing. The real name of this king we find in Rev. 9: 11. To reject Christ is to crown Satan, and many a professed Christian stands in this fearful position without knowing it. Masonry may claim to be moral and religious as well as benevolent, but the testimony is overwhelming that it takes in rumsellers, Sabbath-breakers and profane swearers on an equal footing with the minister of the Gospel. Bradlaugh, the noted English atheist, is an active Freemason. All such men have over them another king than Christ, the angel of the bottomless pit; and the professed follower of Jesus who participates with them in their unhallowed rites by every law which binds a subject to his sovereign or a soldier to his general is a traitor and a deserter. The fact that we often find ministers in the lodge no more proves it to be right than Abiathar's presence at the feast proved Adonijah to be a loyal subject. He doubtless in his capacity of chief priest knew that Solomon was heir to the throne by divine appointment, so that his conduct was not merely rebellion against his earthly king. It was rebellion against God.

2. Solomon's triumph. Vs. 26, 32, 33. Adonijah in his list of guests made some important omissions. Solomon, the lawful heir, was not called. So the lodge is very careful not to invite Christ to its gatherings, even forbidding the mention of his name. Nor does it desire the presence of those among his followers whose fidelity it can have no hope of corrupting. King David calls the very men whose faithfulness had been proved by the slight put upon them by Adonijah and entrusts them with the honors of his son's coronation. It is Christ's faithful ones alone whom God will choose to crown him in his day of final victory. The news of Solomon's triumphant accession brought dismay to the company of drunken revellers (v. 49); so in the abjectness of selfish terror those who have given their allegiance to another king in the secret chambers of the lodge will say with the rumseller, the murderer and the thief, to the mountains and roeks, "Fall on us and hide us from the face of him who sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What will be the doom of those who choose another king than Christ? Luke 19: 27. What kind of men did Ezekiel see in the secret lodge at Jerusalem? Ez. 8: 11. Did the fact that they had a priest to lead their secret worship make it less or more abominable?

OTHER NOTES.

"They told the king." The highest officers of the courts, even the prophets, did not venture into his presence without previous announcement; when they did enter, it was with the profoundest obeisance and prostration. The Jewish court seems to have been very ceremonious and stately (1 Sam. 24: 8; 2 Sam. 19: 24). The king was the representative of heaven.—Spence.

"He is gone down," etc. The Orientals are fond of enjoying festive repasts in the open air, at places which command the advantage of shade, water and verdure; and those fetes champetres are not cold collations, but magnificent entertainments, the animals being killed and dressed on the spot. Adonijah's feast at Enrogel was one of this Oriental description, and it was on a large scale (2 Sam. 3: 2–5; 5: 14–16; 1 Chron. 14: 1–7).—J., F. and B.

"Zadok the priest." There is some difficulty in understanding how Zadok and Abiathar came to be both priests at this time, and in what relation they stood to one another. The best explanation seems to be that Abiathar was the real high priest, and officiated at the sanctuary containing the ark of the covenant in Zion, while Zadok performed the offices of chief priest at the tabernacle of witness at Gibeon (1 Chron. 16: 39).—Cook. Zadok had been high priest under David, joining him at first in the wilderness, while Saul was reigning and Zadok was his high priest.

"And the king sware, and said." David does not stagger irresolutely hither and thither like a sick, feeble old man, without any will of his own, but as if he were still the strong hero, the undismayed, determined, energetic man, such as in his best days he had so often shown himself; amid dangers and in critical situations he raises himself from his sick-bed, swears to observe his word, issues his orders, and puts them into immediate execution.—Lange.

PRACTICAL.

Nathan is the type of a true man of God. (1) Faithful to his trust; (2) holding communion with God, listening to his voice; (3) speaking boldly what God bids him to speak; (4) reproving sin, even in a king; (5) helping others to good works; (6) aiding in the establishing of the true king; (7) earnest, courageous, wise, gentle.

Joab is the type of a worldly man. (1) Bold and self-willed; (2) ready to serve the successful side, whichever it may be; (3) a brave soldier; (4) strong-minded and skilful; (5) reaping a good measure of worldly success;

(6) forgetful of David's past benefits to him; (7) leaving no positive influence for good upon the nation.

Types and Shadows. 1. The kingdom of Solomon foreshadowed Christ's reign. 2. The opposition to Solomon's rule prefigures the resistance of the powers of this world to Christ. 3. The course of Adonijah's conspiracy foreshadows (1) the brief success and (2) the sudden overthrow of the powers of evil. 4. The duration of the conspiracy prefigures (1) the brief rejection, and (2) the eternal reign of Christ.—Rev. Jos. Hammond.

WHEN STATESMEN, ETC.

When "statesmen" stoop to Masonry,
And yet get nothing for their pains,
How soon they turn to "good old rye,"
As all the solace that remains!

But that can't soothe their melancholy,
Nor give their gnawing grief the dodge:
They find too late the utter folly
Of having trusted to the lodge.

For Anti-masons will reveal
All the sharp tricks that Masons play;
No oaths can their sly game conceal;
No rum can drive their grief away.
SO MOTE IT BE!

A PROPER MEMORIAL.

LYDIA E. RAWSON.

The Faith Missionary, of Oberlin, gives an account of a memorial meeting and reminiscences of the late Lydia E. Rawson, of that place. A Sunday evening service commenced at her home about 1854, and a Tuesday evening meeting about 1858. They both continued up to the time of Miss Rawson's death, last spring. The latter of the two "acquired the more distinctive character of a meeting for holiness." The editor of the Harvester at one time attended this meeting. Miss R. was led into the experience of holiness in some measure by the reading of Phœbe Palmer's works, and attendance at the New York Tuesday meetings. Mr. Finney is said to have favored the continuance of the Oberlin meetings. It was a special power for good among the students.

Mr. Waters, writing to the memorial meetings, refers to her spiritual enlargement, and says: "One important part of this was, in those 'burdens' or 'agonies,' as she sometimes called them, of prayer. I think she had known but little of this experience before 1854. She soon came to regard it as a special and very important part of her work. These prayers were often very remarkably answered. These praying burdens of Miss Rawson's were little understood or appreciated then, in general, in Oberlin, and I fear are less so in the churches at large. But Mr. Finney, I know, used to be often asking Miss R. how much spirit of prayer she had, or how much encouragement in praying; she was a good sptritual barometer."

This species of "burden" or "agony" in prayer was full of faith, and must be carefully separated from the imitative, which is practically devoid of faith. The true kind, by looking for it—and sometimes without at the time looking for it—comes directly from God. The false kind is where great attention, and even alarming physical exertion, is given, but there is a spirit of unyielding to God, that prevents real faith and realization. Persons get into an "agony" in looking for salvation from their sins, or from inbred sin, and receive nothing, because they do not thoroughly repent, or thoroughly give up inbred sin; the "shore-lines" are not all cut. But where God himself gives us a special burden of prayer for any specific object, we instantly feel that there is a willingness on his part of bestowal; and yet we are compelled to hold on, with a tenacity which involves spirit, mind, and body, under a kind of pressure—from Satan or some other source—until finally it is all lifted, and assurance is made sure. Sometimes these burdens are physically light, and sometimes heavy; but they always involve tenacity of purpose and faith, until there is an uplift into a free and gladsome spiritual atmosphere of assurance. The coming of these burdens always means a special willingness on the part of God to do something valuable; and after a tenacious holding on, the uplift means that God will actually do something valuable—probably the very thing asked for. Miss Rawson, with all successful laborers, had these burdens, succeeded by wonderful answers to her prayers.—Christian Harvester.

PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1884.

THE CYNOSURE does not make an unreasonable requcst of its friends in asking them to redouble their efforts to increase the list this fall. The earth has brought forth abundantly and the small expense of a subscription is more easily borne than for years. The strife of politics need not be in the way. Men are gathering more often and give opportunity for a canvasser. The paper speaks for itself week by week. Read the present number through, with its contributions from India, from the Bible Conference, from a former member of the Temple of Honor, and from an associate of Frederick Douglass; with its notes and sketches of political and reform life and work—it is a paper the masses should be reading. Let every friend of our holy cause help to get it into their hands. The trial rate, eight copies for 25 cents, will.help.

THE "INSURANCE" LODGES.

The Burlington Hawkeye (Iowa) of the 16th inst. contains an able editorial from which we take the following, warning the people against spurious "Beneficiary Societies." It names these among others:

The Masons, Odd-fellows, Red Men, Foresters, Knights of Pythias, Druids, and the rest of time-honored secret societies created endowment and life insurance branches. The Royal Arcanum, American Legion of Honor, Knights of St. George, Home Circle, and a score of other societies organized councils, lodges and circles all over the country, and almost every day new organizations are being formed, until the people are heartily sick and tired of a plan, which, if kept within reasonable bounds, would have been a benefit.

The Pine Bluff, Kansas Republican contains a similar condemnation of these societies of the business world. Fifty miles from Cairo up the Mississippi that river's shifting channels and floating islands are called "The Grave-yard." They are the purgatory of pilots. Their changes are so rapid, and the waters so dark, that the craft which was in deep channel yesterday, runs hard aground to-day on the same spot. One used to these islands of Circe, can easily foretell changes by the "dropping in of the banks." These "orders" are the Mississippi Grave-yards of our home commerce.

These papers foreshadow a great and speedy revulsion of popular sentiment against the present fashionable secret swindling societies. We read in the Revelation, "The kings of the earth hated the whore and burnt her flesh as with fire." That time is now dawning, as these papers show, when public sentiment will loathe these strumpets of religion and commerce. Let us see to it that they be replaced by business intcgrity and faith in Christ.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Sept. 15, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I preached here yesterday in the Free Methodist church to a large congregation. Rev. Dr. Salter of the Congregational church was in the pulpit and shared the services. I preached for prohibition and against the lodge, of which notice had been given in several churches. I told the congregation I was speaking for St. John and Daniel. When I got to the church a crowd was at the door. We met a mother and two little girls, sobbing and crying through the crowd.

"What is the matter?" I asked.

"O their dada has been drinking," the mother answered. The man, whose name was Davenport, had come into the meeting drunk; threw his hat and coat on the seat and sat down on both of them, and then began to babble. He rose and went through the crowd, scized his little boy, who struggled and shrieked, and cried, "I won't; I won't." They were hustled off in the crowd.

I said to the people before sermon, alluding to the above: "I would rather live the most toil-worn, degraded life of hunger and hard work than the life of him who sold that wretched man liquor, or who gave, or voted to give the license to sell it." A suppressed applause ran through the house.

A Methodist man who runs a factory said, "Blaine is my choice for a statesman, but I will not vote for a man who shirks the Prohibition vote in his own State, while pretending to be a Prohibitionist. If there is a St. John electoral ticket run in Iowa, I shall vote it."

As I stopped in Aurora, Ill., to make connections, I saw about a thousand Republicans in torchlight procession. They crowded the depot; fine-looking, able-bodied men from surrounding towns. I saw more men half and whole drunk among them, and heard more coarse blasphemies than in ten years before, all put together. One man with cap and oil-cloth cape on was circulating a flask of whisky, but so drunk that he spilled the whisky out of the mouths to which he put his bottle!

I go hence to-day en route to College Springs and Kansas, but I shall stop a little to see old friends in this city.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Iowa, Sept. 20, 1884.—It is Saturday. I have agreed to speak here in the United Presbyterian and Congregational churches to-morrow, and address a political meeting on Monday evening. Then I hope to go to Kansas.

There were but four known St. John and Daniel men here. Now already there are fifty registered. Friends here have large hopes for Monday evening. They think the largest house will be crowded. Brethren Hall, Johnston, Avery and Dodd in the ministry, and Dea. Adams, with Father Leuty and their battalion are in excellent spirits.

The Prohibition issue is stupendous; but the lodge serpent lies hid under it as he did under slavery, and out-weighs all other evils as Satan exceeds all lesser devils. No man can be an American statesman who has not learned that the "Beast and the False Prophet" are the last foes to Christian civilization to go down before the angel of reform.

I will write more of this interesting College town when our meetings are past. J. B.

STARRY MOBBED.

Just as we were getting ready for press Monday evening, a dispatch from Bro. P. S. Feemster reports a mob at Dunlap, Kansas, in which S. E. Starry was seriously, but not dangerously hurt. Bro. Feemster urges that Secretary Stoddard, who is now at Bloomington, Ill., hasten to Lawrence to the assistance of the Kansas brethren. We hope that further word will come of Bro. Starry's recovery. As for the poor devotees of the lodge, inspired by its god, the devil, to such deeds, may their hearts be made penitent; but for the infamous system which intoxicates them with heathenish fury, may such work only dig its grave the deeper.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman is in Connecticut assisting in getting up a good interest throughout the State before the convention at Willimantic.

—Bro. F. G. Houck, for some years connected with the N. C. A. work in this city, is president of the eleventh ward prohibition club of Chicago.

—S. M. Good of Des Moines, Iowa, who has had more experience in Masonry than perhaps any other seceder, has been spending the season in California for his health.

—Elder D. P. Rathbun, we learn, has been chosen State agent for Iowa the coming year. The State convention recommended the appointment, but the State executive committee has not yet published their action.

—The convention noticed elsewhere to be held in Marshalltown, Iowa, Oct. 1st, we are assured by E. B. Howard of Albion, a Friend, is called to endorse the American nominations made at Washington, and add strength and influence to the ticket by a prohibition ratification.

—We are glad to see the editorial on Dr. Hayes' address before the Presbyterian General Assembly reprinted in the Lever of this city. It is an argument that honors the truth anywhere, but the Lever does not honor itself in acknowledging from whence it borrowed.

—The Kalamazoo, Mich., Daily Telegraph, says with a sneer at the American party and a slander upon the noblest of the present candidates: "St. John is keeping quiet about the fact that he is a member of the Masonic order." St. John is no liar like the Telegraph. He does not conceal the fact of his lodge membership or that he has left Masonry forever.

—The death of E. C. Larned, and eloquent lawyer and Christian gentleman, a resident of this city since 1847, was lamented last week. He was an earnest opponent of slavery, and spoke powerfully against that institution in the days of its regnancy. He has in later years been identified with many of the public interests of the city and measures for sanitary and educational improvement.

—Thursday morning, after a long decline, Mrs. H. W. Pettengill fell asleep at her home in Peoria to wake only at the resurrection. Less than a year ago her husband, Dea. Moses Pettengill, passed on before; and as in their continued labors for the poor, for the church and for Christian reform they were not divided, so their deaths have been but briefly separated. Mrs. J. Blanchard, with her son, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, attended the funeral, the former having waited by the bedside of her sister for more than two months, and left for home and rest only a week before her death.

—One of our most esteemed contributors, who rightly holds that humility is one of the first of Christian virtues, objects at the arrangement in the Cynosure of putting his name prominently after the title of his contributions. The Cynosure must ask pardon of the brother, and take advantage of his willingness that his communications should be used "to the very best advantage to serve the cause we love." Most readers like to know all the accessories of an article possible before they read it, and to look to the end to find whose thoughts they are reading is an inconvenience. Besides it gives a page a better appearance. It's only a matter of taste and convenience, and if the Cynosure is therefore made a more attractive paper, the brother and all others of like mind will submit gracefully to the editorial notion.

—The India Methodist Watchman, published by Bro. Ward in India, advertises a list of books against the lodge which he has for sale, and says editorially: "We have a large stock of anti-secrecy tracts and books we purpose to scatter through this empire. We shall sell them, give them away and ask others to help us do it. Let some brother who knows what an evil Secret Society —ism is, give us Rs. 100 to put a lot of these tracts in the hands of all the Christian workers in India. Friends unable to buy can send and we will supply them for the postage simply on their promise to read and distribute them. Every Christian in India ought to have some of these tracts. God's word is 'publish on the house top.' Christ did 'nothing in secret.' We as his followers have no need to do so either."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Halifax Evening Mail of August 14th says: "The color question, which split the Good Templars' association some years ago, has arisen among the Odd-fellows. At the last session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge a motion to permit foreign jurisdiction to admit persons of color was supported by the general representatives of this jurisdiction, and the Ontario grand body has instructed in favor of the movement to open wide the doors of the order to all persons of all races. After a lengthy debate in the Grand Lodge of the Lower Provinces last night, a motion declaring that the admission of colored persons to the order would be detrimental to its interests in this jurisdiction was negatived by a close vote. The question may arise again."

—The 45th annual meeting of the Illinois Grand Lodge of Freemasons meets in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Oct. 7th. The Grand Chapter of the Eastern Star, or kitchen degree for women, meets on the same day in Germania Hall.

—The report of L. L. Munn, Grand Secretary of Illinois Masons, shows that there were 115 indefinite suspensions among the lodges of this State during the three months ending Aug. 31st, 1884. During the same time there were fifteen reinstated, making a loss of 100 members for this cause.

—It was an evidence that Odd-fellowship as a system is not incompatible with Mormonism, any more than Masonry when the Grand Lodge of Nevada passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That no polygamist, or any one holding that faith, shall be permitted to become an Odd-fellow; and that any member holding to such faith or custom shall be expelled from the order; and that subordinate lodges be required to enforce this resolution.

—There is a falling off in interest among the high-toned Knight Templar Masons. The grand excursion which was to leave Chicago on the Sabbath for Mackinaw fell through because so few would go; and the same thing happened last month in Wisconsin. Owing to the inability of Grand Commander Benzenberg to secure the promise of a sufficiently large attendance, the proposed State encampment of Knights Templar at the Monona Lake assembly grounds was abandoned.

—The following is the latest table of Masonic membership in North America we have seen. We do not know its origin, but it appears in the lodge column of a local paper:

	Templars.	Royal Arch.	Master Masons.	Percentage of Temp's to M. M.'s
1870.....	49,924	128,196	582,586	8.5
1880.....	50,681	127,025	573,137	8.84
1881.....	53,734	127,105	567,128	9.47½
1882.....	55,186	128,557	566,149	9.75
1883.....	59,835	131,751	579,726	10.32

—The Masonic Advocate of Indianapolis, Ind., calls attention to the fact that the "Order of Service, appointed by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island, for the laying the foundation stone of Freemason's Hall, Providence, June 8, 1884," contains the expression, "through Jesus Christ, our Lord;" also, "In the faith of Him who is the Chief Corner Stone hewn from the mountain without hands, we lay this foundation stone in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The Advocate is honestly angry at this violation of Masonic landmarks, for it presents the lodge as a "sectarian" institution.

REFORM NEWS.

CONNECTICUT STATE MEETING.

The Connecticut Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will (D. V.) meet in Mission Hall, Bank Building, Willimantic, Conn., on Tuesday, Oct. 7th, at seven o'clock P. M. An American party convention will be held at the same place on the 8th. A full attendance of the anti-secrecy and temperance reformers is earnestly desired.

J. A. CONANT, Pres.

KANSAS STATE MEETING.

The Kansas State Christian Association will hold its annual meeting at Lawrence, Kansas, commencing Sept. 29th, 1884, at 7:30 P. M. Delegates convene at United Presbyterian church at 7 P. M.

W. W. MCMILLAN,
Sec. State Christian Association.

The annual meeting of the Kansas Christian Associa- will occur in Lawrence on Monday evening, Sept. 29th, and continue its sessions through Tuesday and Wednesday, closing Wednesday evening. Rev. J. P. Stoddard and S. E. Starry will be there; and business of vital importance to the cause in Kansas will come before the meeting. Friends in Kansas, come and help us.

P. S. FEEMSTER, Ag't K. C. A.

THE NEW YORK BATTLE LINE UNBROKEN.

DALE, N. Y., Sept. 12th, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Perhaps some friends begin to think that we are either dead or asleep in New York, as we have not recently sounded the bugle for battle. But we can assure them that such is not the case. The cause we all love is marching right along here as elsewhere. Christ's kingdom is coming and his will is being done in spite of the devil. We feel that while there are many obstacles in our way, yet the sun never shone brighter than to-day.

We look for a good round vote for St. John and Daniel in the coming election. State, county, and town meetings are being held, clubs organized, etc. In many towns there are clubs with from forty to sixty members. We have been attending a Wesleyan camp meeting at Yorkshire Center, Cattaraugus county, this past week, which was conducted after the good old Methodistic plan, and feel greatly encouraged to press on until victory is ours. We need not say to those who are acquainted with these brethren that they are in hearty sympathy with every true reform. The Spirit of the Lord was present in mighty power. Sinners were converted and saints built up. Sometimes a dozen or more were on their feet at once to give in their testimonies. Would God there were more such testimonies. We felt it was indeed good to be there.

Bro. Mosher, chairman of the meeting, kindly opened the way for us to present our work. We send you herewith forty trial subscriptions as a testimony from the brethren to their interest in this cause. In short, we praise God from whom all blessings flow, and press onward and upward. Yours for work,

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE WISCONSIN AGENT.

I held services last Sabbath twice in a Wesleyan church in Shamrock; had a first-class meeting both morning and evening. I spoke in the evening from Lev. 5:4 and 5, God's law against secret societies. When I got done an old man got up and asked leave to speak. I gave him leave, and he stated that he had been an Odd-fellow for several years; that he was sorry that he had ever taken their obligations; and that he forever renounced all allegiance to the order from this on forever. Another said that he had been a Mason, Odd-fellow, and also that he had belonged to two or three temperance secret societies, and that he had quit them all.

They gave me a very pressing invitation to come again and give them two or three lectures. I think I shall acceed to their request. I feel considerably encouraged in my work; am doing some good I hope.

Yours as ever, I. BANCROFT.

—Rev. D. S. Kinney, agent of the Wesleyan Publishing House in Syracuse, was compelled to return home from the Illinois conference at Marengo on account of the sickness of his wife. W. J. Houghton will attend to his business in the Kansas conference.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEMOCRATIC RATIFICATION MEETING.

The local events of the past week of most interest were the Democratic ratification meeting on the evening of the 11th, and the annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of the District on the 11th and 12th. It was apparent to all that attended these meetings that the latter represented the best and the former the worst elements of society. But, truly, the Democratic show was a large affair. It was held in front of the city hall, which, with the adjoining buildings, was profusely decorated with flags, Chinese lanterns and electric lights. There were some fine fire-works, music by the Marine Band, booming of cannon, and an orderly procession of about five thousand persons.

Precisely at eight o'clock the meeting was called to order and a president and a long list of vice-presidents were named. After some common-place remarks by the president, who had been "a Democrat for sixty years, he introduced Hon. J. H. Murphy of Iowa, who had misrepresented that State in the Forty-sixth Congress.

It will be remembered that Mr. Murphy was and is a prominent member of the Personal Liberty League, and some months since in a convention in Lincoln Hall, the objects of the League were defined to be freedom to desecrate the Sabbath and to sell whisky, whenever, wherever, and to whomsoever the seller may choose. On that occasion Mr. Murphy said he was ashamed of his State of Iowa, and that it was "the Egypt of temperance fanaticism."

His speech here was on the same line. Beyond some vague prophesies, and some charges against Mr. Blaine that he had the best house in Washington, it was wholly made up of a plea for whisky. He "would give the German his beer, the Frenchman his wine, and the Irishman his whisky. He believed that all men had a right to use these articles whenever and wherever they chose. The inference that he wished the audience to draw, was, that the free right to use, implies equal freedom in the right to manufacture, buy and sell, and he charges on the Republican party that it invaded these national rights. He was interrupted by some one in the crowd who asked about prohibition in Maryland, which prevails only in the Democratic counties; but he did not answer. There were some in the great crowd that would cheer such utterances.

Mr. Murphy's argument was like the horse that had two faults. It (the horse) was bad to catch, and when caught it was good for nothing. So, too, this free whisky argument starts out with false premises, and draws an illogical conclusion. It is not true that men have a right to eat and drink whatever, whenever, and wheresoever they choose; and if it were true, it would not follow that all men have a right to sell all things that all other men may wish to buy. All personal rights are subordinate to the public good. In all civilized countries drunkenness is held to be a crime. An habitual drunkard may be restrained from the purchase of alcohol without any invasion of his natural rights. The business of drunkard-making is a crime against society, and in self-protection should be prohibited; and if a crime against society, no man has a moral right to be accessory to such a crime by purchasing of the dramseller. I do not say that it would be wise to legally prohibit such purchase, but until it can be proved that men have a right to do wrong, no one ought to complain of such prohibition, whether express or implied. Prohibitory laws invade not national liberty. In those States and districts in which prohibition prevails, there is no restriction of natural rights. Home is not less sacred, nor is public or private prosperity diminished. All these are only better protected and conserved; and the plea of Mr. Murphy is not only false and illogical, but is addressed to the worst passions of the worst men.

Not so the meeting of the W. T. C. U. Its success was not in booming cannon or grand processions, but in the moral grandeur of those who composed it and in the earnest appeal to the noblest and most Christian sentiments. It is not in the nature of things that such a meeting should greatly enthuse the masses of the people, though the attendance was good, the interest deep, and the impression left, excellent. Among the able speakers who were present were Mrs. Chapin of South Carolina, and Frances E. Willard of Illinois. Mrs. Chapin's address was mainly a statement of the incidents of her work and was of thrilling interest. The progress of the temperance cause in the South and the growing interest in prohibition is a matter of profound gratulation.

On Friday evening Miss Willard spoke to a crowded house. To say that it was able and eloquent, rich in scientific statement, and all aglow with religious fervor, is to accord it faint praise. Though the W. C. T. U. of this District is non-political, yet she had the courage of her convictions and made an earnest plea for political action for prohibition and woman suffrage, yet so skillfully presented as to disarm opposition.

Among the excellent people of Washington that are devoted to every good work are Bro. Isaac Keeler and wife, editors and publishers of The Banner of Love, of Scripture mottos on temperance and kindred reforms. They are distributing a large amount of pure Christian literature, much of it gratuitously. Their paper and general work is well worthy of the support of the subscribers of the Cynosure, and is cheerfully commended. Their address is 1533 Fifth street, N. W.

I go to Willimantic, Conn., to spend a little time in the cause in that State. H. H. HINMAN.

LITERATURE.

Ogilvie's Handy Book of Useful Information, is the title of a modest little book of 128 pages, which contains a wonderful amount of information of practical value. It contains statistical tables of practical use for every department of human effort; it simplifies the art of reckoning, and shows at a glance, the correct answer to nearly 100,000 business examples in all questions of grain, stock, hay, coal, cotton, merchandise, interest, wages, etc. The political, historical, and biographical information alone, is worth double the price of the book. It is bound in handsome leatherette, flexible covers, and will be sent by mail for 25 cents; J. S. Ogilvie & Co., Publishers, New York.

The Social Emancipation of the Gypsies is an appeal in pamphlet for the removal of the social restrictions and ostracism that are still maintained toward these wandering people. It is a kind of supplement to the History of the Gypsies published in New York in 1865. The original manuscript of this history, it is said, was written at the frequent and urgent request of Sir Walter Scott and William Blackwood, and was brought to America after the death of its author, in 1851. The present publication exhibits the subject under its final aspect—that of a very numerous body of people, of various mixtures of blood and conditions in life, living pretty much everywhere, and often exactly like other people. Price 25 cents. Thos. R. Knox & Co., New York.

The Century will begin with the November number a series of separate papers, the object of which is to set forth, in clear and graphic manner, the life and spirit of the most important of modern military conflicts—the War for the Union. The main portion of the scheme will be papers of a popular character on the great engagements of the war, by general officers high in command at the time, either upon the Union or the Confederate side. In many instances the contributor will be the officer of first command, and in every instance a participant in the engagements under consideration. For instance, the battles of Shiloh and Vicksburg will be described by General U. S. Grant, who will contribute four papers to the series; General Beauregard will write of the first Bull Run; McClellan, of Antietam, etc. The Passage of the Forts below New Orleans will be described by Admiral Porter, and the Western Gunboat Service by Rear-Admiral Walke, and the fight between the Monitor and the Merrimac by Colonel John Taylor Wood, the senior surviving officer of the latter vessel. Other prominent Confederate generals have engaged to contribute, and some of these contributions will be hardly less notable than those above mentioned. In conjunction will appear from time to time a number of brief sketches, entitled "Recollections of a Private," reflecting, with interesting and life-like details, the experiences of the common soldier from the time of enlistment to the muster-out: the drill, the march, the bivouac, the skirmish, the charge, the pursuit, the retreat, etc., etc. The illustrations of the scheme will receive the most careful attention, and in this particular it is thought that the series will possess an unequalled historical interest.

The North American Review for October, in giving to the country the paper of President Julius H. Seelye, of Amherst College, on "Moral Character in Politics," makes us willing to be patient with some of the short-comings of that magazine. His exposition of the ethical principles involved in the election of the prominent candidates and his philosophical analysis of the position of the two great parties should be read by all thinking men. We are glad to see that the better sort of political journals, like the Inter Ocean, are reprinting the paper. In "Evils of the Tariff System," John Roach, Prof. R. E. Thompson and Nelson Dingley, Jr., advocate the policy of protection of American industries with great ingenuity of reasoning and abundant citations of statistical facts. The Review introduces another covert attack on Christianity by O. B. Frothingham, a writer of ability but an infidel, who has more frequent access to the pages of the Review than any other single writer. He discusses "The Philosophy of Conversion", of which he understands as much as a Fiji Islander does of managing a Cunard ship. "Why I Wish to Visit America"; "The Origin of Yellow Fever"; "Shall the Jury System be Abolished?" "The Genesis of Tennyson's Maud", and "The Development of Machine Guns", are other articles.

Travel is a handsome monthly published by the American Exchange Traveler's Bureau, 162 Broadway, New York, which is of special value to every one who contemplates an extended journey either in this country or foreign lands. Fine maps and numerous plans of routes to points of interest are a valuable feature of the magazine.

THE HOME.

"HARVEST."

The reapers sang in the shaded lane,
And the laden wagons came creaking slow
While the kind farm mother her table spread;
For the field was bare and the sun was low—
The sun was low and the day was gone—
The toil was over and harvest done.

I looked and sighed, as the yellow store
Was borne away to the yawning mow,
And I thought of the brimming garner floor,
And the harvester's tanned and sweating brow,
Till I sighed again in the faded light,
While the tired world slept in the lap of night.

I sighed for the tender plant that died
When the cold north wind untimely blew;
I sighed for the grain that never swelled,
For the blighted sheaf that never grew,
I sighed for the harvest days that seem Like the waking mockery of a dream.

I knelt in the dim sweet summer night,
And whispered a prayer of trembling faith,
That He (who nurseth the sleeping grain Till life comes smiling from the darkest death)
Would not scorn the scant sheaves I had won,
When life was over and harvest done.

PRAYING FOR WHAT WE DO NOT EXPECT.

I happened once to be staying with a gentleman—a long way from here—and a very religious kind of a man he was. In the morning he began the day with a long family prayer that he might be kept from sin, and might have a Christlike spirit, and the mind that was also in Christ Jesus; and that we might have the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us. A good prayer it was, and I thought, "What a good kind of a man you must be!" But about an hour after I happened to be coming along the farm, and I heard him hallooing, and scolding, and going on finding fault with everybody and everything. And when I came into the house with him he began again. Nothing was right, and he was so impatient and so quick tempered.

"'Tis very provoking to be annoyed in this way, Daniel. I don't know what servants in these times are good for but to worry and vex one with their idle, slovenly ways!"

I did not say anything for a minute or two. And then I said, "You must be very much disappointed sir?"

"How so, Daniel—disappointed?"

"I thought you were expecting to receive a very valuable present this morning, sir, and I see it has not come."

"Present, Daniel?"—and he scratched his head as much as to say, "Whatever can the man be talking about?"

"I certainly heard you talking about it, sir," I said, coolly.

"Heard me speak of a valuable present! Why, Daniel, you must be dreaming. I've never thought of such a thing."

"Perhaps not, sir; but you've talked about it; and I hoped it would come whilst I was here, for I would dearly love to see it."

He was getting angry with me now, so I thought I would explain.

"You know, sir, this morning you prayed for a Christlike spirit, and the mind that was in Jesus, and the love of God shed abroad in your heart."

"O, that's what you mean, is it?" and he spoke as if that weren't anything at all.

"Now, sir, wouldn't you be rather surprised if your prayer was to be answered?—if you were to feel a nice, gentle, loving kind of spirit coming down upon you, all patient, and forgiving and kind? Why, sir, wouldn't you come to be quite frightened like? and you'd come in and sit all in a faint, and reckon as you must be a going to die, because you felt heavenly minded."

"He didn't like it very much," said Daniel, "but I delivered my testimony, and learned a lesson for myself, too. You are right, Captain Joe, you are right. We should stare very often if the Lord was to answer our prayer."—Daniel Quorm and his Religious Notions.

"WE MUST BE HOLY."

If we hope to dwell with God forever in the life to come, we must endeavor to be like him in the life that now is. We must not only admire holiness, and wish for holiness; we must be holy.

We must be holy, because God in the Bible plainly commands it. "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation. Because it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy." I Peter 1: 15, 16.

We must be holy, because this is one great end for which Christ came into the world. "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." 2 Cor. 5:15.

We must be holy, because this is the only sound evidence that we have a saving faith in Christ. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." "As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." James 2: 17, 26.

We must be holy, because this is the only proof that we love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. What can be more plain than our Lord's own words—"If ye love me, keep my commandments;" "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me?" John 14: 15, 21.

We must be holy, because this is the only sound evidence that we are God's children. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God." Rom. 8: 14; 1 John 3: 10.

Lastly, we must be holy, because without holiness on earth we shall never be prepared and meet for heaven. It is written of the heavenly glory, "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." Rev. 21: 27. St. Paul says expressly, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12: 14.—J. C. Ryle.

TRACT CIRCULATION.

What is a tract? A tract is a seed, a vital particle, that, deposited and diffused, will produce appropriate fruit. It is not truth in a great mass, but it follows all the analogies of nature in all departments of her operations. A tract is not too weighty to be carried; it is not too bulky to be deposited; it may be carried anywhere; it may be deposited almost anywhere. We know that the seeds of plants and of flowers are carried by the birds of the air, are carried even by the breezes of heaven from one island and from one continent to another; they are deposited in most unlikely places,—in crevices of rocks, on mountain-sides, in places untrodden by the foot of man,—and so an unsuspected vegetation springs up in places that have received no ministry from human hand. Well, so it is with tracts. A little child may be their minister; you may drop them from the window of a carriage; you may leave them in a railway train; you may give them to a passing traveler. No man who is not very shallow, who is not very ignorant, will disparage the power of littles. We know in manifold departments of human life how little things are operating, and with what mighty power they operate. The Bible itself is simply a collection of tracts; it is made up of tracts written by men whose names are all held in the greatest reverence; and its power is due, perhaps, very largely to the fact that its different compositions are so short, so portable; because we can read a letter of Paul, or one of the Gospels, in so short a space of time.—Dr. Henry Allon.

AMONG THE POTS.

[Though ye have lien among the pots, yet ye shall be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold.—Ps. 68:13.]

This text has been a sealed passage for ages. Bishop Lowth declared it "unintelligible." In the latest work on the Psalms, "The Treasury of David," Mr. Spurgeon calls it "a hard passage, a difficult nut to crack." But new light is constantly breaking out of the Scriptures. Miss Whately, traveling in the East, observed a fact which gives us the lost key to this text, and unlocks its beautiful imagery. In her work entitled "Ragged Life in Egypt," she thus speaks concerning the flat roofs of the houses: "They are usually in a state of great litter; were it not that an occasional clearance is made, they would assuredly give way under the accumulation of rubbish. One thing seems never cleared away, however, and that is the heap of old broken pitchers, sherds and pots that are piled up in some corner. A little before sunset, numberless pigeons (or doves) suddenly emerge from behind the pitchers and pots and other rubbish where they have been sleeping in the heat of the day, or pecking about to find food. They dart upward and career through the air in large circles—their outspread wings catching the glow of the sun's slanting rays, so that they really resemble 'yellow gold;' then, as they wheel round and are seen against the light, they appear as if turned into molten silver, most of them being pure white or else very light-colored. This may seem fanciful, but the effect of light in these regions can scarcely be described to those who have not seen it. Evening after evening we watched the circling flight of doves, and always observed the same appearance." "Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

This beautiful passage is thus illuminated for the first time in modern days. It is a precious, comforting truth to the children of God. The doctrine unfolded is the promise of God, that a holy character may be maintained in this sinful world, despite unfavorable surroundings. From among the pots, covered with dust and dirt, these beautiful doves rise clean and unsoiled, to soar into the heavens, flashing their wings covered with silver and their feathers glistening like yellow gold.

Many Christians find their lot cast amid the dust and grime of the pots, but they need not be soiled thereby. Out of such conditions they may soar unsoiled, on wings of faith gleaming like silver and clothed in beatitudes shining like burnished gold.

No honorable business will grime the soul. The machinist, mechanic, artisan and laborer may have grimy work to do, but he can be clean as a dove in character. Your character is not cheapened because your work is in the kitchen or at the forge, nor is it ennobled because you handle diamonds, write poems, thrill breathless auditors, or sit behind mahogany office desks. There are men in coal mines with souls like the wings of a dove; and there are men in decorated mansions with souls sooty and black with sin as the miner's face with coal-dust. One has the soot on his face, the other on his soul.—Dr. J. O. Peck, in Homiletic.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

SOME OF THE SAYINGS OF JESUS ALPHABETICALLY ARRANGED.

Ask, and it shall be given you.
Believe ye that I am able to do this?
Come unto me . . . . and I will give you rest.
Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire.
Enter ye in at the strait gate.
Fear not. I am the first and the last.
Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.
Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.
If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it.
Judge not according to appearance.
Keep them from the evil.
Lo, I am with you alway.
My sheep hear my voice, and I know them.
Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter.
O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee, even as thou wilt.
Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto thee.
Quickeneth whom he will.
Receive ye the Holy Ghost.
Suffer the little children to come unto me.
That they all may be one, even as we are one.
Use not vain repetitions as the heathen do.
Verily I say unto you, ye must be born again.
Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work.
Except a man be born again, he cannot see.
Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life.
Be zealous therefore, and repent.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE MERCY SEAT. Read Exod. 25: 1–22.

There I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims. Exod. 25: 22.

1. Where were the tables of the law kept? 1 Kings 8: 9.
2. Where was the mercy-seat? Exod. 25: 17–21.
3. What did it typify? Heb. 4: 16; Rom. 3: 25.
4. Why was the mercy-seat placed above the tables of the law? Rom. 10: 4; Col. 2: 14.
5. What did God's meeting with his people at the mercy-seat point out? John 14: 16.—Notes for Bible Study.

HOW FRANK AND WILL ESCAPED.

"Here, Frank! I say, Frank Leslie, come here a minute!" shouted Jim Haley rather imperatively, as little Frank Leslie and his cousin, Will Carter, were running past the engine house, Jim's usual lounging place, on their way home from school."

"That's Jim Haley calling you! Are you going to speak to him? Your father will scold you if you do—but Jim'll hit you if you don't," was Will's whispered remark to Frank.

"Well, what's wanted?" answered Frank, halting, but not exactly standing still. He was afraid of his father's reprimand, and equally afraid not to answer Jim.

This Jim Haley and his half dozen intimate friends were the worst boys in the whole town; they were always avoided by any one who respected himself.

"Why, Pat O'Conner, here, says that that big dog of Tom Kelley's used to belong to your father. Is that the truth?" asked Jim, quite peaceably.

"Mr. Kelley's dog Carlo, do you mean? Yes, indeed, my father raised him from a pup; he had hardly got his eyes open when my father brought him home." And in their eagerness to "talk dog," a topic beloved by every boy, Frank and Will quite unintentionally drew a little nearer to the forbidden group.

"How many times did he bite any of you?"

"Not once!" exclaimed Frank, with enthusiasm. "He's a tip-top watch dog, but he never harms any one he knows. Mr. Kelley says he's never had a chicken or an apple stolen since he had Carlo."

"That's what I told Pat, and he bet me a dollar against a dime, that he was as cross to you two fellows as he is to us."

"It's no such thing!"

"Of course, I can take your word for it, but that will not settle our bet. Look here; let's settle it now. We fellows will go along as far as old Kelley's front gate, and then you call Carlo and prove to Pat that he isn't cross to you."

In cooler moments Frank would have declined the proposal; he knew that dinner would be ready in five minutes, and as punctuality to meals was rigidly enforced by Mr. Leslie, he could truthfully have excused himself from thus dallying on the way.

In a few moments, Frank, Will, and the group of half-grown loafers, stood in front of Mr. Kelley's gate; a whistle from Will was enough to bring Carlo bounding to the side of his old master; he was unfeignedly glad to see them, and not only offered no resistance to their caresses, but had plenty of his own to bestow.

"Didn't I tell you so?" shouted Frank, with glee.

"It's all very well, out here in the street, but you know he would act very differently if he was in the garden," grumbled Pat.

Indeed he wouldn't! Just come in the garden and see."

So, into the garden they trooped. Will and Frank were so busy fondling Carlo that they did not notice four of the other boys slip away, one after another. The first thing that disturbed them was a yell and a scuffling of feet, as three or four of them took to their heels, and a sudden grip on their collars, which was not at all comfortable.

Three stalwart policemen surrounded what was left of the party, including Jim Haley, Pat O'Connor, and one of the worst of their congenial spirits, as well as Frank and Will.

"Caught in the act this time!" one of the policemen exclaimed. "I heard that you were planning a robbery here, and we've had our eyes on you all day. I think Judge Anderson will have a word for you, you young thieves!"

Frightened as they were, Frank and Will now saw that the other three boys had their hands and pockets full of Mr. Kelley's rarest plants, some torn up by the roots, others only broken and crushed.

"Please, Mr. Policeman, let Will and me go? We didn't touch the flowers, we are not thieves! We were only playing with dear old Carlo—wasn't that all, Jim?" cried Frank.

There is not always "honor among thieves;" neither Jim nor Pat uttered a word of denial when the policeman said:

"Oh! only playing with the dog, eh? only keeping the dog quiet while your accomplices robbed the garden? To Judge Anderson you'll go this minute, and if I don't miss my guess you'll have a nice ride in the Black Maria before long!"

No tears or persuasion availed the least, and in a few moments the boys were before the judge. It happened to be a very dull day in the police court, so Judge Anderson listened at once to the policeman's story.

"Caught in the act, were they?" the judge said. "I am not sorry to have a short interview with these young scamps, they've been the terror of the neighborhood long enough. As for you, Jim Haley and Pat O'Connor, I have little mercy for you, you have been up before me too often, and I promise you a few weeks where you can't study any more poisonous dime novels. And you—why, bless my soul! policeman, you've surely made a mistake! Little Will Carter is in my daughter's Sunday-school class; and it it is not a month since I myself saw our minister present Frank Leslie with a prize for being the best behaved boy in our Sunday-school. What are they here for?"

"Sure, sir, there's no mistake; birds of a feather flock together, and I caught them all together," was the reply.

A few questions from the judge elicited the whole story, even a confession from Jim that the two little boys were used by him as an innocent trap for Carlo, to keep the dog still while the others stole the plants.

"Knowing your previous reputation as I do, Frank and Will, I dismiss your case at once. But bear this in mind: you cannot touch pitch without being defiled, and a man (or boy) is apt to be judged by the company he keeps. I must say I am surprised that your fathers have not warned you to have nothing to do with such boys as Jim Haley—"

"Please, judge, he has! He has told us never to be seen with them," Frank cried; and Will added:

"My father told me never to even speak to them; but we forgot. And then all of us little fellows are afraid of those big boys; they lick us if we are not civil to them."

"Next time one of them troubles you, just let me know! But, after all, which is the worst, to disobey your father or run the risk of a 'licking?' The latter hurts worst just now; but, boys, each disobedience, small as it may be, makes the next one come easier and easier, and no one knows where it may lead to. My colleague, Judge Brown, is a stranger to you; suppose he had been acting in my place to-day? Your story might have not been believed by him, and think what a disgraceful punishment your disobedience would have brought to you if you had been sent down with these rogues! Go home now and hereafter choose your company a little more carefully; your good character clears you now, see that it remains with you through life."—S. S. Times.

TOBACCO TOILERS OF CHICAGO.

[Chicago Times, Nov. 12, 1881.]

The business of the manufacture of cigars and tobacco of all kinds gives employment to over four thousand people of both sexes in Chicago. In the manufacture of cigars alone there are 553 factories, employing 2,866 persons, of whom 1,689 are males and 1,177 females. The others are employed by the four large tobacco factories and in the twenty-nine stores where only smoking, chewing, and leaf tobacco is kept. The lover of the fragrant weed—made fragrant by sweetened decoctions—and the admirer of the juicy plug or fine-cut would experience a revulsion for their hobby after an examination of many of the factories from which the tobacco comes. The manufacture of tobacco and cigars, it is well known, is a source of great profit to the capitalist; but, with the usual greed for the almighty dollar, many of the firms in the business recklessly increase the capacity of their establishments, without regard to the comfort of their employes or the cleanliness of their methods. It is said that in New York the methods are even worse than they are here, and if this is so, the smokers of New York

ARE TO BE PITIED

sincerely. Of the cigars manufactured in New York, it is said that five eighths are manufactured in the reeking tenement-houses, where great numbers of filthy and ignorant foreigners are crowded into the small, ill ventilated rooms, and where whole families eat, live and sleep in the same room in which they manufacture the cigars. Although there are no tenement-house cigar factories in Chicago, there are several hundred places where tobacco and cigars are handled and manufactured which are hardly in any better condition than the tenement-houses of New York. If the Chicago club man could see people who live there making the cigars for which he pays fifteen or twenty cents, and which he boasts of as Havanas, out of Wisconsiu seedings, he would naturally look with suspicion on the Havana or any other cigar forever after. But good cigars or bad ones call for the same amount of work on each, and but few of the smokers ever think with how much trouble and pain the thin, delicate fingers of the sickly children twisted and rolled and pressed the cigar which he into thin air. He little thinks that every whiff he blows from his lips means a groan from the soul of a workman, and for every puff he enjoys there has been an unheard sigh from the heart of some poor girl. A walk down any of the large thoroughfares between six and seven o'clock in the morning and evening will discover among the dense mass of the city's workers, on their way to their daily task, a large number of females from ten to sixty years of age, dressed so much poorer than their sisters of the bindery and tailor-shops as to attract attention and raise the inquiry, "Who are they?" These are the tobacco women. Their unhealthy, sallow complexions, their high cheek-bones and staring eyes, together with their miserable dresses, show that their calling must be one of great discomfort and privation. And so it is.

The average time of the tobacco-workers is nine hours daily, but in some factories they are at work eleven or twelve hours, with only an hour or half an hour intermission for lunch.

THE WOMEN IN THE BUSINESS

are nearly all Bohemians or Poles, while many of the men are Germans, with a few Italians, Poles, and Greeks. The great mass of the workers are unable to speak English, and are "bossed" by people of their own kind. Whole families may be found working together in the same factory, and in one case the father, mother, and three children were found in a down-town cigar factory, working at the same bench. These factories are generally located in large old buildings near the river, or in the wholesale districts near Wabash avenue or Lake street. The rooms are large enough for an ordinary number of people to work in comfortably, but in these cases sixty and one hundred persons are often found working in rooms scarcely large enough to accommodate twenty-five people with any degree of comfort. The upper story of the building is generally used for drying purposes, and the other floors, in their order down, contain the machines and workers through whose hands the tobacco passes, from the raw material until it is cased for shipping or sale. On entering any of the factories the first thing that strikes the observer is the strong probably used in the manufacture of the celebrated "Chlora d'Limas," or the well-known brand of "Stinkahs." The first process much of the cigar tobacco passes through is the resweating, or coloring. The weed, when unpacked, is set out to dry, and, according to the number of dark or light cigars needed, certain bales are put in the "sweaters"—huge zinc cans—in which they are heated and dampened by steam until they assume the right shade. It is then given to the strippers. These are girls, all the way from ten to twenty years of age, who stand all day long about tables and strip the tobacco, or pull out the stem. In a factory visited yesterday there were sixty-five strippers in a room about twice the size of a street-car, and with just about the same accommodations. They were mostly Bohemians, and nearly all under sixteen years of age. They were poorly dressed in plain, rough dresses, many of them very ragged, and are covered with stains and reeking with the stench of the vile weed they are handling. Almost all were without shoes or stockings, and it was ascertained that during the summer most of them came to work in that condition, and without shawl or other covering for the head.

THE STENCH IN THE ROOM

was terrible, and every window was closed lest the tobacco should become moist by contact with the outside air. So strong was the smell of the tobacco, and so thoroughly was the air impregnated with the fine dust from the dry weeds, that a stranger can stay but a few minutes in the rooms without feeling sick at the stomach as well as at heart. The fine particles of tobacco seem to enter every pore of the skin; they penetrate far into the nostrils and settle on the lungs; they enter the ears; the eyes become inflamed, and one coughs incessantly while in the room. The tobacco men say that the women and children get used to it, and it was evident that they do, as the emaciated forms, the hollow voices and the sunken eyes attest. A certain part of the tobacco for cigars is spread upon the floors to dry, and over this the bare-footed girls tramp backward and forward during the day. It would be well to remember this when one is leisurely rolling his cigar in his mouth. The strippers work incessantly over their tables for at least nine hours each day. The work is

CONFINING AND UNHEALTHY.

They work by the piece, and are paid from two to six cents per pound. It is claimed that the strippers in Chicago make more money than those in the East, because here the tobacco, especially for plug, fine-cut, and fine-cut smoking, is dampened with a decoction of sugar and licorice, instead of water, as in the East, thus making it heavier, with less stems to the pound.

Leaving the stripping-room with its half-clad occupants, the observer enters the rooms where the tobacco is received from the strippers, and where another lot of females spread out the leaves to their fullest extent, and separate them according to grade, into half pounds, and give them to the cigar men. These workmen are of two classes, the "hand rollers" and "machine-men." They average from $8 to $18 per week; they are paid by the piece, the rates being $6, $11, $12, and $13 per thousand. The cigars are by them rolled, pressed, and filled, and then given to the packers and boxers, who put them in shape for the market.

An average factory will use from $75 to $150 worth of revenue stamps per day, and produce 50,000 cigars per week.

In the manufacture of fine-cut chewing and smoking tobacco, nearly the same process, as far as drying and preparing is concerned, is gone through with. A large down-town factory employs in its sorting-room, selecting the various grades of tobacco, and putting up lots of the weed, containing a few leaves of each grade. Its stemming-room contains 125 girls, who are paid two and a half cents per pound, and who are in about the same condition as the strippers or stemmers already mentioned. They are all young, and work constantly in an atmosphere of not less than 80 degrees of temperature, made suffocating by the terrible stench of tobacco. Some factories use machines for pressing their tobacco. The leaves, after being dipped in a decoction of sugar, water and licorice, are passed between rubber rollers, and fall through an opening to the floor below, and are there cut up immediately for smoking or fine-cut. The sweet syrup falls back from the machines to the trough, and is used again and again to dampen and sweeten other bunches. Fine-cut tobacco is made by passing the leaves into a common cutter supplied with a hopper and run by steam. It is then dried in revolving cylinders over a furnace, and packed in pails. The smoking is cut in a coarser machine, and passes in tubes to the floor beneath, where, guided by girls, it falls into packages of different sizes, which are sealed by another set of girls, and stamped by still another set. Eight or ten men are constantly employed in the shipping department of this large factory, which ships its goods to all parts of the country.

If the workers in the large factories are in poor circumstances, the cigar-makers who work at home are still. It is estimated that there are one thousand persons thus employed. They are found in all parts of the city, and the shops produce from one thousand to ten thousand cigars per week. In most cases all the workers in a small factory belong to one family, and that family is very often Bohemian or German. In many cases these small factories procure their material from larger ones, and are paid a stated sum per thousand for their work, but most of these establishments buy their own material and have a few customers in their neighborhood, or oftener still do a small retail business of their own. A number of these factories were visited, and the manufacture of cigars was found to be according to the tenement-house plan, on a small scale. In many instances the family ate and slept in the room where the tobacco was dried or the cigars molded. Children played upon the drying weeds on the floor, and the leaves were carelessly mixed with the accumulated dirt of the house and the refuse from the table. Children were born and persons died in the same room or rooms adjacent to those in which the work was done, and it was with but little surprise that the reporter found that children, in two of these shops, were

RECOVERING FROM SCARLET FEVER.

It is, of course, not to be supposed that every tobacco-factory in the city allows its work to be done in such filthy rooms, or in such a slovenly manner, but that a large percentage of the tobacco manufactured here is made in a careless, not to say filthy, manner, at the expense of human blood, intellect, and independence, and in places scarcely fit for human beings to inhabit, is true. In quite a number of factories the proprietors were found to be intelligent gentlemen, who regarded all their employes as equals, and not as beings devoid of feeling or brains, and accordingly paid them fair salaries, and provided decent workrooms, well lighted, and well ventilated, where it was a pleasure to visit and a comfort to work. The industry is growing every year, and within the last twelve months two large factories have been established here, giving employment to several hundred persons. The handling of tobacco for manufacture will be unhealthy under any circumstances, and it does not need the addition of filthy rooms in fire-trap buildings, devoid of ventilation, to debase the natures and benumb the intellect of the masses of Chicago's poor who are obliged to slave there for their living.

THE CHURCHES.

—The Itinerant of Harrisburg, Pa., speaks of the visit of Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist and chairman of the N. C. A. Board, to Philadelphia. He preached in the Grace United Brethren church. The Itinerant thinks the sermon "one of the best we ever listened to. Such pulpit ministrations cannot fail to lead the church aright and lift it to a high plane of religious life."

—The noon meetings in Lower Farwell Hall, Chicago, have of late been of deep interest, there being an earnest seeking for the fullness of the Spirit's presence and blessing, for personal holiness and for power to lead men to Christ.

—Major D. W. Whittle, Mr. Moody's co-worker, is now in Chicago, and began this week a series of Bible readings every afternoon with a Gospel meeting for the conversion of the impenitent every evening. Much prayer is offered up for a blessing upon these meetings.

—Upon the opening of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary in this city lately, the Interior volunteered the following wholesome and breezy advice: "Some time ago we remarked that there were Presbyterian ministers with whom we would not, if we could help it, sit at the dining-table. Thereupon some of our exchanges said that the Interior was a 'dude.' Well, now, we have seen students' rooms—theological students' rooms, too—in which the furniture was defaced, the carpets stiffened with tobacco and slop, the drapery saturated with the fumes of old pipes, and the walls soiled with greasy heads, and marked with the nails of boot-heels, and vandalism and heathenism in general displayed. We do not say that this is wrong, because we do not like to be called a 'dude;' we merely say that if any such thing occurs in the theological palace which you are about to occupy, we trust the janitor—who is, we believe, a Scotch-Irishman—will take the offender by the ear, lead him to the front door, and give him a new start in life."

—The twenty-seventh anniversary of the Fulton Street Prayer-Meeting will be held on Tuesday, September 23d, at noon in the Middle Dutch Church, Lafayette place and 4th street.

—The Christians of London are looking after the converts of the Moody and Sankey Mission. To one Young Men's Christian Association the names of 320 were sent. The reports returned were of the most cheering character. The secretary writes: "In only two cases, out of a large number reported on, have we heard that the impressions made at the meetings were of no lasting character.

—The Russians are a very religious people in the observance of outward forms. Their religion consists chiefly in lighting candles, blessing holy images, bowing to the floor and making the sign of the cross over and over again. Holy images are found not only in the churches, but in houses, on public places, in railroad stations and telegraph offices, and no devout Russian passes them without bowing and making the sign of the cross.

—Robert Hirsch, a cigar maker of Chicago, was the defendant in a case before Justice Brayton, wherein he was charged with having attempted to break up several Methodist open-air meetings near the corner of Milwaukee avenue and Powell streets a few nights ago. The trial was by jury. It was proven that the defendant had blown smoke in the faces of many of those present at the meeting, and had declared his intention of breaking up the meeting. A fine of $75 was imposed, and an appeal taken.

—There is a unique and useful organization in West Philadelphia, known as the Band of Mercy. Twelve thousand children belong to the organization in the city. Its beginning was due to a lady and gentleman who were extremely annoyed by the blasphemy and obscene language of a crowd of boys who congregated in a vacant lot opposite their residence every evening. This lady and gentleman concluded that they would try and win this crowd from the streets. They removed the furniture from the parlor, furnished it suitably for such children as they knew could be gathered there from the street, and invited the boys to spend the evening. Since that time the parlors have been open every evening, books are furnished, and two or three times a week entertainments are given. Instruction is given on two or three evenings, but no attempt is made to give the rooms the appearance of school, or to conduct the exercises in such a way as to give the impression that it is a school. The result has been most beneficial to the boys, and the good results following were so evident that it has resulted in the establishment of similar institutions in various parts of the city.— Christian Union.

—Rev. W. R. Goodwin, of the Quincy district, said last week in the Illinois M. E. conference, that no preacher in his district used tobacco, and every one would vote the prohibition ticket.

—Jerry McAuley, the famous New York missionary, died Thursday at his Cremorne mission, in 32d street, of lung troubles. McAuley was once the chief of the river thieves, and was known in Water street as "the terror of the 4th ward." He was converted while serving fifteen years in Sing Sing for highway robbery, and has since been a missionary among thieves and fallen women. He was born in Ireland in 1839.

PASTOR SEGUIN IN POLO.

POLO, Ill., Sept. 19, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. P. A. Seguin, pastor of the French Evangelical Tabernacle of Chicago, is here since last Monday, interesting the people of this section of the State in the grand work he is doing among the French Catholics of this country.

It was our privilege last Monday evening to listen to a very interesting account of his conversion from Romanism to Christianity. He told us what tribulations and oppositions he had to go through even from the part of so-called Christian people, to become what he is to-day, "a true, honest and earnest reformer." His lecture was good to us all.

Tuesday evening he spoke to us on the revolting, cruel and unchristian error of sending the souls to purgatory, as taught in the church of Rome. The church was packed to the overflow. He held the audience spell-bound for nearly an hour and a half. The lecture on purgatory was most assuredly a sound one; many Catholics were present. Contrary to their habits, they were very quiet and no disturbance was offered.

Wednesday afternoon, at 2: 30, we had the pleasure to know from his lips something of the abominations of the confessional box, where the priest sits between man and wife as the devil did in the garden of Eden. Wednesday evening it was our glorious privilege to know the difference of education such as given by Protestants and Catholics.

Thursday evening, Bro. Seguin told us that there was as much difference between the Romish mass of our day and that as described by Justin the martyr, who lived in the second century, that there is between light and darkness.

Brother Seguin goes to-day to Savanna, Illinois, to lecture during four days. We wish to express our sincere thanks to him through the columns of the Christian Cynosure for his able lectures on Romanism. We feel that all should be interested in this great work of reform. It is a question of momentous interest to us as American people, that we preserve the principles of the Gospel as taught by our forefathers. Brother Seguin, who has the experience of a Romish priest and a minister of the pure Gospel, since he has accepted of Christ as his personal Saviour and hope, is certainly one of those called by God to help us to keep pure the Gospel of our Puritan fathers: why, then, should we not help him in his glorious and noble work of reform. It is a necessary and very important one. Let all the brethren rise up as one man and go to his aid. (REV.) J. A. HEATH.

THE HEATHENISM OF INDIA.

A correspondent of the Christian of Boston, at West Berar, India, writes of the scenes among the false worshipers of that dark land:

It is very noisy in a native house, for there is a succession of weddings and funerals at this season, and a constant tum-tumming, frightful to listen to. We are so well out of the village that we escape these sounds, except a slight echo now and then.

I wish I could begin to tell you of the customs and practices of heathenism. Soon after our arrival they celebrated a religious festival called Holee. This is an obscene saturnalia in honor of a female demon whom any man may burn in effigy at his own bonfire. During this feast no decent Hindoo, even, will appear in the streets, for they go about throwing a red or yellow-white powder upon the clothing of everybody. These colors are made to represent most indecent things, and are worn by devotees until the garment is in rags. We could hear the yelling, drumming, and screeching very plainly, and I could think of nothing but demons howling. At the festival in honor of Mahadee, until recently, women were in the habit of swinging themselves by means of iron hooks fastened into their flesh. Men also drew carts by means of iron hooks fastened into their bodies. The particulars of this celebration are too indecent for me to write. All parties have a firm belief in the return of departed spirits, and of course the devil has full play. They call the spirit of a child who had never worn the sacred thread—a thread put about the neck of a Brahmin at seven years—a Jhoting; a child who had been invested with the thread, but who died before marriage, is called a Munja, and is said to cause the death of one child after another who is named after him; and the father will call his next child a blockhead or a dung-heap rather than displease the dear departed. If a man has so far forgotten himself as to name his infant after the Munja, and this child becomes sick, he will tie a silken cord around the child's waist, and make an offering of lime, betel-nut, cocoanut, dates, and red lead; then at night he will call in an exorcist, who will bring with him a dehak, or drum. After worshiping the drum, the exorcist will accompany himself while he sings invocations to the ghost of each unmarried man who has died in that family. The evil spirit, after being sufficiently cross-questioned, will then explain who he is, and how he entered in, and promise to go if proper offerings are made to him. The proper thing to do is to take an old shoe between the teeth and go to the house where the dead sons lived, and from there to the pipal tree, at the foot of which the disease is arrested. If, however, the spirit has lied, then the conjuror tries to shut him up in a bottle which is buried deep under the ground.

The worship of the cobra is more theoretical than practical. That is to say, the genuine reptile, ready for a bite, is not adapted to such close proximity as their heaps of stones covered with red paint, or red rags hanging from some branch, admit. Therefore, they usually substitute the wooden or metal image of a cobra, or perhaps fashion one out of clay. An ant-hill is a favorable locality for cobra worship, and twigs of the nimb tree are stuck about the ant-heap. A yellow thread is wound around them, and milk, juari, and other grains are offered. Sometimes only milk is poured upon the hill, and occasionally a real cobra, though a tame one, is worshiped. But I must not write more at this time concerning these practices. The cobra is not worshiped, so far as I am able to learn, by the higher class; the lower class worship snakes.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the FACTS FOR FARMERS.

—Don't keep an unprofitable cow.

—Sheep poisoned by cating laurel can be saved by giving each a gill of strong green tea. One farmer saved the lives of hundreds of animals with this remedy.

—If sheep lose wool, the irritation which causes the trouble can be relieved by giving the animals half-ounce doses of a mixture of equal parts of sulphur and cream of tartar.

—Stephen Powers writes The Ohio Farmer that he reclaimed a meadow pretty well seeded to plaintain by plowing it up, planting it to potatoes, and then seeding it to timothy and clover.

—It is a great mistake to leave barley until dead ripe before cutting. If the stem is green not only the barley will be plumper, but less liable to injury from rains. A heavy dew will often stain barley.

—There are 15,000,000 cows in this country, or a little more than one cow for every four persons. This indicates pretty clearly that butter is lacking on many tables in many parts of the country, which is the fact.

—Vegetable matter in the soil is absolutely essential to the growth of the higher order of vegetation. When this is wanting commercial manures may be added in any quantity with no appreciable result in benefiting crops.

—It is essential that the soil be rich, free from weeds, and the season hot to insure a good crop of Hungarian grass. With these conditions it will make a large crop of hay, and the seed from it will more than pay the expense of growing and harvesting.

—Buttercups possess a poisonous property, which disappears when the flowers are dried in hay; no cow will feed upon them while in blossom. So caustic are the petals that they will sometimes inflame the skin of tender fingers. Every child should be cautioned against eating them.

—Good hen manure from fowls which have been liberally fed is worth as much as guano. It should be put into barrels as soon as taken up from the chicken-house, kept in a dry place till wanted, a little plaster mixed with it, and before using pounded up fine. Apply it the same as guano.

—Raspberries, if well and annually pruned, with enriched soil and good and shallow culture, will continue to afford good crops six or eight years, and sometimes, much longer, the red varieties lasting longer than caps. Currant and gooseberry bushes, properly cultivated and pruned, will last a lifetime.

—Contents of grain bins.—An easy rule for determining the contents of bins or rooms in bushels, may be carried in one's mind. Take the length, breadth and height and multiply them together to get the cubic feet. Divide the product by fifty-six and multiply the quotient by forty-five, and the result will show the contents in bushels, struck measure.

—A wash for trees.—It is a mistake to suppose that ordinary whitewash, so much used, is the best tree-wash. Soft soap reduced to a paint-like consistency with water, and to which has been added a strong solution of washing soda, is better for one. A wash made by dissolving one pound of stove potash in three gallons of water is also considered superior to the lime wash.

—It is said a larger crop of apples is raised when a hive of bees is stationed in the orchard. The bees visit every flower, busily flying from one to another, and then passing to an adjoining tree. The pollen on their bodies is rubbed against the pistils of myriads of flowers, which become fertilized in this way. Many of the strange modifications in the form of flowers are due to insects, the transfer of pollen from different varieties resulting in hybrids. Darwin remarks that all experimenters have been struck with the wonderful vigor, height, size, tenacity of life, and hardiness of their hybrid productions." He was the first to show that from a flower fertilized by pollen from a different plant the seedlings were much stronger than from its own pollen. The wind and insects are nature's great agents in performing this act of cross-fertilization.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scriptnre, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees" 304 pages; cloth, $1.

REASONS FOR THE AMERICAN PARTY.

CHARLES SUMNER, letter Jan. 13, 1854.—I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, letter March 18, 1880.—Every Freemason swears to break the law, commit the greatest crimes, and repudiate Christianity. History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.—It is my deliberate opinion that the Anti-masonic party ought not to subside, or to suspend its exertions, till Freemasonry shall have ceased to exist in this country.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, letter March 28, 1880.—This [the Secret Empire] is the next Great Question this Nation must take up and decide.

THE CENTURY, May 1884.—The great political need of this country at the present time would seem to be a party of progress, a party that would pursue a policy of reform from love of reform itself, and not merely in obedience to popular clamor. Reforms of various kinds are now urgently needed, and they can be properly dealt with only by a party earnestly devoted to the work. * * * A party whose leaders take no interest in reforms, and will not take a step in advance until driven by public opinion to do so, is wholly inadequate to the work.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE.—In my sermon of last Sabbath, while reprehending the political parties of this day for their present degradation, I said that the two great political parties had done their work, and that we should, before long, have a new party. The Republican party was formed to kill slavery. Slavery is dead and damned. The Republican party, having achieved what it started for, had better pass out of existence. The Democratic party was founded by Thomas Jefferson to oppose the adoption of laws of primogeniture by which the oldest son got all the inheritance, and to drive out of the land all foreign titles, and to give equal rights to all classes of people. Having fully accomplished that work, its mission seems ended. We are now ready for a party organized for new, particular, supreme God-given work. Such a party first of all must acknowledge God in its platforms, in its ensigns, in its plans and purposes; that it must also be the foe of national wastefulness and the friend of national economy.

GEN. J. W. PHELPS, Brattleboro, Vt.—A party which in its wanton fondness for subtle secret power has chartered the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia, thus establishing a religion, should be made to give place to some other party that will have more respect for the Constitution.

CHICAGO TIMES, June 23, 1884.—There is one party in this country which has, or imagines it has, a reason to be, that is something different from that of getting possession of the offices and enjoying the spoils thereof. This party with an object in life calls itself the American party.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, President of the National W. C. T. U.—That your party is in hearty sympathy with prohibition and woman's hallot we know, and greatly honor you for this attitude toward what we deem the chief living issues of the day.

THE NEWS, of Sandy Lake, Pa.—No other party takes such broad, comprehensive, statesman-like position on the living issues of the times. This party is young, strong and active, and, though little known by the masses, from whom its doings are concealed by the big and little political papers of other parties, by simply saying nothing about it, is just as sure to make its mark and yet be felt in political circles as that truth is truth or that right will finally reign. It is the only political party that distinctly acknowledges the existence and authority of God, and the duty of civil governments to submit to his law.

EVANGELICAL REPOSITORY, Pittsburgh.—Is it not time that the Christian people of the country should exert themselves to obtain a President of pronounced Christian views and sympathies? Have they not the power if they will use it, to bring forward a Christian statesman and elect him?—one who will give the whole influence of the executive office against Sabbath desecration by the several departments of the government; against Mormonism, or rather Mormon polygamy; against the abominable liquor traffic; against all those secret anti-republican organizations which are now a potent factor in American politics; and who would stand fairly on such a platform as has been adopted by the "American party?" If the Christian people of the country will demand such a platform as the above and back their demand by the power they are capable of wielding, this will be the platform of the grandest political organization that has ever sought the control of the government.

FREE METHODIST, Chicago, July 2d.—This is a platform of moral issues. True there may be a plank or two upon which all will not agree, but we challenge its compeer, as an expression of sound moral and political sentiment, and as providing for the real needs of the people. It is not ours to argue the points involved; if they do not in the main commend themselves to our readers, there let it rest. We see in it substantially the platform that must be adopted to save this nation from moral ruin and miserable overthrow. It ought to have the hearty support of the thinking, independent, honest voters of this republic.

CHRISTIAN WORKER (Friends' paper), Chicago.—The American party held their National convention in this city on the 20th inst. This is the party whose distinctive principles are, the recognition of God and the Bible in our National Constitution and laws, and opposition to all secret societies. In harmony with some other parties they favor prohibition, international arbitration and other needed reforms. The party embraces some of the strongest, purest and most courageous men in the nation, and in the convention which met here there was exhibited much ability and great sincerity and earnestness.

REV. N. E. GARDNER, in the Richmond, Ind., Star.—It is the purest, wisest, and best political platform ever before the American people.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Imitations and counterfeits have again appeared. Be sure that the word "HORSFORD'S" is on the wrapper. None are genuine without it.

An Old Friend with a New Face.

"My dear Rose," said Miss MacIver, "where did you acquire that brilliant complexion? It seems to me that you are still the beautiful girl of eighteen whom I knew twenty years ago." "My friend," replied the lady addressed, "it is not me your are complimenting, but 'Glenn's Sulphur Soap.' Have you never before witnessed its effect? There is nothing impossible to its powers as a beautifier." Beware of counterfeits. See that "C.N. CRITTENTON, Proprietor," is printed on each packet, without which none is genuine. Sold by druggists and fancy goods dealers.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument
4. The great letter of Thurlow We[illegible] and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Human; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

IN BRIEF.

One of the proposals submitted for a change in the French Constitution provides for the payment of voters for the time lost at the polls.

Pulmonary consumption is the cause of one death in twelve in New York State, and the State Board of Health has laid the cause to the bad ventilation of school rooms.

Mrs. Jennings, a very old lady, living near Athens, Ga., lately had a couple of bushels of wheat of different kinds that she wanted to save for seed. The two bushels got mixed together, and she separated it by picking it out a grain at a time.

According to the latest census the people of the United States engaged in active business pursuits are thus employed: In agriculture, 22,000,000; professional and personal service, 12,000,000; manufacturing and mining, 11,000,000; trade and transportation, 5,000,000.

The mortality of the globe, as given by a continental journal which has made the computation, is as follows: Per minute, 67; per diem, 97,790, and per annum, 35,639,835; whereas the births are 36,792,000 per annum, 100,000 per diem, and 70 per minute.

The consumption of sugar in this country has increased wonderfully during the past few years, which is attributed by a Pittsburgh paper "to the price at which the article has been selling, which never before has been so low." The amount consumed in the United States has advanced from 63,074 tons a month in 1880, to 90,501 in 1884, or 43 per cent, while the population has grown only 12 per cent.

An office has just been opened close to the British Museum for the purpose of affording information upon any subject, especially such as require careful research. The fee is only a shilling, with postage added. The answers will be authoritative, some of the most distinguished savants having promised their co-operation for the pleasure of aiding so useful a work. It is called the Universal Information Office.

A remarkable fact is that while steel will melt in heat that does not affect platinum, if lead be put in the crucible with the latter metal, both will melt at the low temperature at which lead liquefies. Fire clay will melt before platinum, and yet lead cannot be melted in a platinum crucible, for as soon as the lead melts the platinum with which it comes in contact melts also and the crucible is destroyed.

Speaking of the use of the word "telepheme" to express a telephone dispatch or message, the Syracuse Standard says: "The word 'telepheme' was, we believe, first used two years ago by Mr. Charles W. Balestier, then a writer for the Rochester Post-Express, and since known as the author of two or three charming little romances, and as a compiler of a 'Life of Blaine.' It is perhaps worthy of note that it was Mr. Balestier's grandfather, the late E. Peshine Smith of Rochester, who, while an editor of the Albany Journal, coined the word 'telegram.'"

THE COST OF SICKNESS.

I think, then, that we cannot escape from the reason to believe that we lose in England and Wales, every year, in consequence of sickness, 20,000,000 week's work; or, say, as much work as 20,000,000 healthy people would do in a week.

The number is easily grasped by the mind. It is equal to about one fortieth part of the work done each year by the whole population between fifteen and sixty-five years old. Or, try to think of it in money. Rather more than half of it is lost by those whom the Registrar-General names the domestic, the agricultural and the industrial classes. These are more than 7,500,000 in number, and they lose about 11,000,000 weeks; say, for easy reckoning, at £1 a week; and here is a loss of £11,000,000 sterling from what should be the annual wealth of the country. For the other classes, who are estimated as losing the other 9,000,000 weeks' work, it would be hard and unfair to make a guess in any known coin; for these include our great merchants, our judges and lawyers and medical men, our statesmen and chief legislators; they include our poets and writers of all kinds, musicians, painters, and philosophers and our princes, who certainly do more for the wealth and welfare of the country than can be told in money.—Sir James Paget, in Popular Science Monthly.

Naturalists urge that bumble bees' nests should be carefully preserved, the insect being the most valuable we have in the fertilization of fruits and other crops, their tongues being longer than those of honey bees, and therefore better adapted to securing pollen and depositing it on other blossoms.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—Hon. Cassius M. Clay, the veteran Abolitionist of Kentucky, spoke to 3,000 people in Richmond, Ind., Saturday, urging the danger of the South getting control of the government.

—One hundred representatives of the equal rights party gathered last night at a farm in Prince George's county, Maryland, to ratify the nomination of Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood for the Presidency of the United States. The candidate spoke on the necessity of woman suffrage and the evils of monopolies.

—The St. John movement having assumed formidable proportions in New York State, the Buffalo News (Independent) estimates the probable vote, based principally on the membership of clubs with pledged voters. The returns are complete from all counties of Western New York, or about one-seventh of the State. The figures are as follows: Erie county (including Buffalo), 1,800; Niagara (including Lockport), 2,000; Monroe (including Rochester), 1,600; Genesee, 400; Cattaraugus, 5,000; Chautauqua, 2,000; Allegany, 3,500; Wyoming, 1,000, and Orleans, 1,500, a total of 18,800 in these counties. The same ratio in other counties would give him 70,000 to 85,000 in November.

COUNTRY.

—Hail to the depth of three inches fell Saturday morning at Erie, Pa., the storm being very violent. Glass was broken in quantities and grape and fruit vines ruined.

— Saturday evening at Carlinville, Ill., a boy playfully pointed a revolver at the Rev. T. W. Green, when the weapon was discharged and Mr. Green is supposed to be fatally hurt.

—A malady which puzzles veterenarians is killing off horses in Ogle and Stephenson counties, Ill. They first appear to have a cold, then the lungs become affected, a fever follows, and death speedily results.

—A freight and passenger train on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Road were in collision Saturday morning eleven miles south of Albuquerque, N. M., one passenger and three train employes being killed.

—Mrs. Joseph Stevens, of Hollisterville, Pennsylvania, who was for years in the habit of eating raw ham, suffers so terribly from trichiniasis that she constantly pleads with her friends to kill her. The worms keep her flesh in perpetual motion, and frequently twist out from the muscles in wriggling masses.

—Isaac Jacobson, convicted of the murder of George Bedell in April last, was hung in the county jail, Chicago, last Friday, a few minutes after 12 o'clock.

—The Sheriff was bound and gagged in the Watertown (N. Y.) jail Thursday night by five prisoners, who then made their escape. One of the prisoners returned voluntarily, and said he was forced into the conspiracy.

—Rindskopf Bros. & Co, clothiers, at New York, made an assignment Friday, giving preferences for $886,980. Their liabilities were estimated at $900,000 while the actual assets are said to amount to $1,000,000.

—The "Molly Maguire" Society is said to be again in operation in sections of Pennsylvania, and the names of citizens, mine operators, and bosses are alleged to have been placed on the death-list of the organization. The assassination of two Hungarians recently and the burning of colliery property is the accredited work of the "Mollics."

—The New York Journal of Commerce publishes answers from 113 mills, representing 963 sets of cards, showing an actual lessening in production of 13,000,000 yards or 2,000,000 suits of men's clothing.

—Twenty miles below Camden, N. J., Friday night a freight train dashed into an accommodation train at a crossing, demolishing one car occupied by workmen, eleven of whom were badly and some fatally wounded.

— Forest fires threaten Port Huron, and the people have deserted the Huronia Beach district. Unless rain falls speedily the town will be destroyed. The village of Pinconning is also surrounded by fires, and all places of business are closed. The smoke from forest fires was so dense Thursday night in Saginaw Bay that the steambarge C. P. Curtis grounded on Point Lookout.

—Eight thousand coal miners are engaged in the strike in Pennsylvania, and not more than 1,000 men are at work. The women have organized a "tin-pan brigade," and greet the non-unionist with a serenade on pans, kettles, etc., when they leave work in the evening.

—Near Farmer City, Ill., early Wednesday morning a passenger train was derailed and a number of persons injured, one or two fatally. Ex-Governor Hendricks, of Indiana, who was on the train en route to Peoria, escaped with a few slight bruises. Editor John C. Shoemaker, of the Indianapolis Sentinel, (defendant in the Blaine libel suit), was injured internally and returned home.

—Washington is disturbed at the news that farmers in Virginia and Maryland, whose hogs are dying of cholera by scores, are throwing the dead carcasses into the Potomac River, which furnishes Washington its water supply. Canalboatmen report that the stench from the festering hogs is unbearable in portions of the upper river.

—Between 2: 15 and 3 o'clock Friday afternoon several towns in Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana were shaken by an earthquake of a few seconds' duration, the oscillations being more perceptible in the upper stories of structures. Table ware was dashed to the floor, furniture disturbed, and windows wrecked, alarming the inmates, who, in many instances, fled panic stricken to the streets. At Detroit the quake was severely felt, and the river rose some inches. The Methodist Conference and Ladies' Missionary Society, in session at Defiance, Ohio, hastily quitted the building which they occupied; and the disturbance almost caused a panic at a re-union in Ottawa, Ohio. Children in the schools at Indianapolis became alarmed, and occupants of railroad depots in the sections visited imagined that a locomotive had collided with the buildings. A rumbling sound was heard in some places, resembling a distant explosion. Tremors were also felt in portions of Canada, Kentucky, and West Virginia, and were so severe in the suburbs of Cincinnati as to terrify the children in the schools.

FOREIGN.

—The Panama Canal Company has signed a contract with the New York Dredging Company for the cutting of the last section of the canal. The contract provides that the work shall be finished in 1887.

—The Catholic missionary authorities in Paris have received advices from Hong Kong stating the Chinese have destroyed the Catholic chapels in the Province of Canton and that six thousand Christians in that province are homeless.

—A Paris journal announces that Prime Minister Ferry is willing to forego pressing the indemnity claims upon China provided the latter shall cede to France for ninety-nine years the port of Ke-Lung.

—The Grand Trunk car works at London, Ont., burned. Perhaps 400 men will be thrown out of employment. Most of the men lost their tools. The loss is estimated at $400,000, but the insurance is not known.

—The Times, London, ably states that the cholera still remains in the rural districts of Southern France, where—notably in the Department of Ardeche, which lies on the river Rhone, just north of Gard—little hamlets have been suddenly stricken with the epidemic after it had apparently left the department. Some fifteen new villages have been visited during the week.

—The Mudir of Dongola telegraphs the authorities that messengers from General Gordon brought eighteen dispatches. Two of them were for the Sheikh of the Kabbabish tribe, which were delivered. Two other dispatches were directed to the son-in-law of the Sheikh, who, however, had been previously publicly executed by order of the Mahdi's Ameer in order to overawe the people and compel them to join the Mahdi. The Ameer, with many chiefs, was afterward killed in battle. The messenger who brought the dispatches reports that on the 24th of July General Gordon's troops slaughtered the rebel army which had been sent against him from Kordofan. Another battle was fought the 30th of August, which resulted in General Gordon's forcing the rebels to raise the siege of Khartoum, and during which Sheikh Sidi, his son and followers were killed. The above reports are confirmed by Khatem Elmoos Bey, who is holding Halfiyeh with Egyptian soldiers. The Shaggieh and other tribes have come in and tendered their submission. Sennaar is now in perfect security.

Much of the success made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neighborhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

SPEECH OF HON. S. C. POMEROY.

"The Mission of the American Nation to Mankind," 18 pp., including John Quincy Adams on the Duty of American Voters, 4 pp. Twenty-five copies of this pamphlet of 22 pages will be sent during the campaign for fifty cents. 25 copies, postpaid, 50 cents.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

This twelve-page pamphlet is now issued in a new and attractive style, with a neat cover. The orders for it which more than exhausted the first edition testify to its popularity.

"AMERICANS HAVE NO CONFLICTING INTERESTS RESPECTING SECRET SOCIETIES. WE SHALL HAVE BUT ONE OPINION WHEN WE UNDERSTAND THEM."

Thus opens an exposition of the relation of the Secret Empire to Civil Government, which will remain of great and permanent value to every citizen until the triumph of the American party shall have put the secret lodge system under the ban of law. SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS.

It is said that more money is invested in firearms in Alabama than in hogs, sheep and farm implements. This statement, if true, reveals a state of society bordering on barbarism. A savage or a Hottentot makes more account of his weapons for slaying men than of his domestic affairs. Into such a state of society it is of little use to begin schools alone, there must be a more abounding share of the preaching of a Gospel of peace. The question of disarmament ought to be a leading one in Alabama politics.

When in 1840 and 1857 England forced the opium trade upon China, and, to the disastrous effects of the opium habit, added the cruelties of war and the robbery of $21,000,000, it was hardly brought into the reckoning that one of the richest and most important colonies of the victorious nation would ever suffer from the same deleterious habit. But it is reported that the use of opium is so rapidly spreading from the Chinese to the whites in Australia that legislation against the po isonous drug is demanded.

The complications over the fertile strip of sand-fenced valley on either side the Nile is the paramount topic in Europe. In suspending payments to the sinking fund of the Egyptian debt, England is standing alone against Europe. In the impoverished condition of the country the measure seems one of simple humanity, which the European bond-holders should allow with as good grace as possible. His party stands firmly by Gladstone in this measure. The expedition for the relief of Khartoum will soon be under way either across the desert or up the Nile. The original plan will be adhered to, Gordon will be rescued and the Soudan abandoned. In the opportunity for conquest open to England it is a noble stand that her great premier has taken against aggressive war. No wonder France, in the midst of her rapine is mad at him. The reports from General Gordon continue to be satisfactory. The siege he has sustained in Khartoum has been no child's play. Though depending only on his black troops he has kept off the Arabs and finally beaten them, recapturing Berber; and if General Wolseley delays he may yet march safely away from Khartoum with his Egyptians and Europeans, thus adding another distinguished honor to those he already and meekly bears.

The Milwaukee brewers' are sorely troubling the politicians. The Democrats have all along drawn heavily on the brewers' for funds. But so soon as it was understood that Mr. Fratt, the Democratic nominee for governor had, as president of the State Agricultural Association, invited Governor St. John to speak at the State Fair, the brewers' would put up no more money. The party managers squirmed and fumed. Some of them wrote to the brewers that they would organize a party in opposition to their business, but the latter are firm; they propose to help the Cleveland vote, but will pay their dollars to help elect the Republican State ticket.

Mr. Moody, it is reported, does not expect to return to England, but will devote his remaining energies to people less under the influence of the Gospel. It is an interesting confirmation of his estimate of the character of that people, that a London association, formed for the purpose, posts neatly printed texts of Scripture in the street cars of London, which, as they carry 75,000,000 people a year, preach daily to larger congregations than Spurgeon or Talmage. In this country the Bible Society has for a number of years placed Bibles in the railway cars, but it is reported that the practice will be discontinued. The officers say that out of a thousand Bibles distributed they believe but ten were read, while three hundred were so mutilated as to be worthless and four hundred were stolen.

The old Know-Nothing movement yet shows a flickering light in a society known as the "American Protestant Association," a secret society, half religious, half political. The organ of this society is the American Protestant, a starveling sheet lately removed from Boston to Washington. This order has a party which comes up under a new alias every Presidential election. This year it is known as the American Political Alliance, and on Saturday it nominated William L. Ellsworth of Pennsylvania, for President. This nomination is of little moment, but the final sentence from the order issued by the "National Council" of this lodge party announces that "by action of the Grand Council of the United States the oath of the order has been repealed." If there is any significance in this announcement it is certainly encouraging to those who labor for the overthrow of the secret lodge. However insignificant the body that gives up its secret oaths it is a matter of rejoicing as a proof that the truth conquers still.

An important conference of the friends of the Indian race was held last week at Lake Mohawk, N. Y. Five of the Indian Commissioners were present, and such educators as Captain Pratt of the training school at Carlisle, Pa., Presidents Caldwell of Vassar College, Gales of Rutgers, and others. The bill passed by the Senate last winter now waiting the action of the House was discussed, and while its imperfections were acknowledged, it was regarded as a great advance. It was chiefly objected to because it recognized the tribal relation, tied up reservations for twenty-five years, and required a two-thirds vote of members of the tribe before the lands could be allotted in severality. The resolutions of the conference were adopted with substantial unanimity earnestly opposing any recognition by the government of tribal relations, favoring the allotting of lands in severality as speedily as possible, the lands to be inalienable for not less than ten nor more than twenty-five years; the right of suffrage to be given all adults by a process analogous to naturalization on evidence presented before the proper court of adequate intellectual and moral qualifications, and the endorsement of the Senate bill.

The journey of Mr. Blaine and his company through the country is attended with a popular ovation which must be extremely flattering to that gentleman and his backers. With due allowance for partisan exaggerations the multitudes that crowded to do honor to General Grant in 1879 hardly equal in number and enthusiasm those that grace the trip of Mr. Blaine. From Philadelphia to Cleveland, where he halted over Sabbath, the papers report the bulk of the population along the route upon the streets to see him pass. If it were because of great sacrifices for the nation, or great measures for the public good originated or brought to pass by his effort, that this manifestation of popular favor was shown, there would be more satisfaction in the fact. But in the absence of anything but "personal magnetism" to attract the people we fear Mr. Blaine may yet live to cower under the reproaches as he now fattens upon the adulation of the crowd. Let him remember the words of Fitz-James:

"Thou many-headed monster thing,
O, who would wish to be thy king!"

"THE NEW MOVEMENT."

A late number of the Congregationalist says, "A Boston minister is said to be looking for some one who can tell him, in ten words, what is the 'new movement,' in theology." He is evidently looking for what is often called "the Andover movement," whose chief hobby, just now, is "probation after death." Now it need not take "ten words," nor even two, to answer his question. One word tells the story, and that word is PAGANISM.

This theory of a "continued probation," is nothing more or less than a revival of one of the most conspicuous dogmas in the old Babylonian mythology, which, "first concocted in Babylon, and thence conveyed to the ends of the earth, has been modified and diluted, in different ages and countries," and is now found nearly pure and entire, in the church of Rome.

Says Hislop (Two Babylons, p. 273): "Go wherever we may, in ancient or modern times, we shall find that paganism leaves hope after death for sinners who, at the time of their departure, were consciously unfit for the abodes of the blest." This statement is fully corroborated by the history of ancient paganism, and by the pagan teachings and customs of our own time.

In Egypt, "whose lizards were her deities, whose monkeys, dogs and cats were gods"—a belief in this dogma was universal.

According to Wilkinson (vol. 2, p. 14) upon the death of an Egyptian, "numerous demands were made upon the estate of the deceased for the celebration of prayer and other services, for the soul." On such occasions (vol. 5, pp. 383–4), "the relations and friends being present, as mourners, . . . joined their prayers with those of the priest."

These facts certainly show a belief in a state of probation after death, as otherwise there could be no occasion for "prayer, or the services for the soul."

"Prayers . . . for the soul!" Just this very thing is now taught by the apostles of the "new movement," alias "the new orthodoxy," as at least "a good and wholesome thing." Thus "we go toward Rome!"

Greece and Rome, who both received their paganism from Egypt, learned of her this same doctrine, and taught it as a part of that paganism. They may have amplified, or at least have modified it, somewhat in details, but its substance remained unchanged. They taught that there is "a middle state, in which, by means of purgatorial pains, the soul is freed from the defilement incurred by a life of sin on earth and fitted for the abodes of the blest. This place, or state of purgation was called "Tartarus." The other, its opposite, was called "Elysium."

Plato, the great Grecian moralist and philosopher, says, "Those who have lived justly and virtuously, when they die, pass into the regions of blessed souls, where they are far removed from the wicked and enjoy all manner of delights; but those who have lived unjustly and wickedly, they are cast into a prison of punishment, called Tartarus." "Those who are judged for the greatness of their sins—as sacrilege, murders—to be incurable, are immediately cast into the lowest place in hell, out of which they shall never be delivered." Others who have lived in a middle way, are carried along the Acheron, to a fenny place, where they are purged and absolved, by suffering grievous torments; and being delivered thence, they are rewarded with honors according to the merit and dignity of their good works." (Stopford's translations, in Pagano, Papismus, p.p 106–7.) Thus Plato teaches both the purgatory of the Roman church, and the post mortem "ministry of woe," in "the new" (Andoverian) "orthodoxy!"

Virgil, the great Roman poet, attunes his lyre to his sweetest symphonies, as he sings of this, to him, sublimest feature in his theology. (Eneid, lib. 6, by Symmons.) Hear him:

"Not e'en when death dissolves the mortal ties,
The gross contagion with the body dies;
But on the soul, the growth of sensual years,
By nature's strict necessity inheres.
Hence we are sentenced to atoning pains,
Till just infliction shall erase our stains.
Some are suspended on the viewless wind;
Some, deep in roaring waters are confined;
And some are exersised by fire's sharp power—
Each soul must tarry its expecting hour.
Then are we sent to range Elysia's sweets,
And few we are, who gain those blissful seats,
Till, his full orb complete, long toiling Time
Has cleansed the foulness of concreted crime,
And left, in all its native radience bright,
The ethereal sense of elemental light."

There is certainly, very great rhetorieal beauty in these lines, but that beauty is eclipsed, vanishes even, before the faet that they teach falsehood, they "prophesy deceit." No authority for them is even pretended, for the excellent reason that he had none.

Plato does indeed say of his own statements, "These things I have heard, and believe them to be true;" but a simple matter of "belief" in his case, can be no more authority, than in that of any other. Both his words, and those of Virgil, were but the statement of their individual opinions, and of the current theology of their own time and people. Yet, as such, and from such men, they furnish evidence, unimpeachable, that this corner stone of "the New Movement," is an equally fundamental element, or principle, of that old Babylonian superstition, idolatry and blashemy—the poisoned, deadly "wine" of Babylon's "golden cup," which for long ages has deceived, corrupted and "maddened the millions." (Jer. 50:7).

Such, therefore, is "the New Movement," a part of that paganism, against which the thunders of Divine denunciation roll through and through the Old Testament, and which are taken up, and with equal majesty and terribleness reiterated in the New. "What agreement, hath the temple of God with idols?" "Wherefore . . . be ye seperate, saith the Lord?"

No wonder that such a "movement" is called "revolutionary!" It is a direct assault upon Christianity itself; the most dangerous, because the most insidious that has been made since the great apostaey in the early ages of the Christian era.

"O my soul, come not thou into their secret, unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united."

WEEK DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"I have been thinking about the pearls of Scripture,—these wonderful expressions such as 'the just shall live by faith,' 'enduring as seeing him who is invisible,' 'the great cloud of witnesses;'—and then those others which describe the life beyond, 'the river whose streams make glad the city of God,' the 'sea of crystal,' the 'streets of gold,' the 'foundation of jasper.' They have seemed to pass before me in an endless procession. What is their use? What are they put in the Bible for? Why, they are there for us to live by. Now what is a Christian's life?"

Did the reader ever teach a Sunday school class, and notice a curious difficulty in answering such questions? It is as hard to define faith or hope, for instance, as it is air or water. You may give the chemists analysis of those elements. You may state their properties, and after all you have not truly defined them. You have not pictured the blue sunlighted ether above our heads; the glory of the dawn, the shadows of eventide, the infinity of the night. You have not made the hearer see water, rolling over rocky lee shores in long stretches of thunderous surf, leaping heavenward in the spray of fountains, dimpling in wayside brooks, falling in the shower, dropping in the dew, sparkling in the cup. And furthermore you cannot, while you are mortal and speak the language of mortals. So after Mrs. F. had put the question I felt for an instant an odd sense of shame, almost a doubt whether after all I could know much about it, or else I should find it easier to reply, but there suddenly came into my head one of those blessed texts with which the pen of inspiration helps our feeble human understanding when we try to grasp a mystery too high for us.

"Your life is hid with Christ in God."

"Yes," Mrs. F. answered quickly; "it is a hidden life, and these pearls are for his hidden ones. They are not to be cast before swine. They are not to be locked up and only looked at once in a while. They are for our every-day using. They are to live by, but more than that they are to grow by."

I have thought her words over since. What a grand mistake to treat these wonderful texts, many-sided and many-hued—the precious stones of our earthly New Jerusalem—as some people do their silver and their best china! What are they for but to bring, not for one day in seven but through all the six working days, the glory of heaven into the lives of toiling men and women? Take as a mere instance one special text, "the great cloud of witnesses." It was Mrs. Siddons, if we remember right, who became so used to the applause of the stage that she found it difficult even to read to a small circle of friends without the customary stimulus. We may call it weakness, but it was a very human weakness. Don't we all play our part in life a little better or a little worse according as the spectators show approval or disapproval? God knew when he put this desire of approbation into the human soul what he was about, and has provided a way as he does to every legitimate desire, to gratify it without sin.

Dear toiling brothers and sisters, you have used all manner of petty self-denials, and fulfilled a thousand disagreeable duties, but the world takes it quite as a matter of course and never thinks to praise you for them. You answer, "I do not do these things for praise," and it is said sincerely, too, yet there are moments when you feel as if new spirit would be poured into you to hear somebody say, "That was grand, that was heroic; no one could do better." Remember that somebody is saying this, a great many somebodies who once trod the thorny paths of this working day world and know all about it—the weariness of hand and heart and brain. In the workshop and on the farm and in the kitchen applause goes up that you don't hear. Yet how many of us in the round of our daily duties stop to take the comfort of the thought?

The pearls of Scripture are for every-day wear. Let us not lock them away in treasure caskets but keep them continually before our eyes, for a joy, for a rest;—"to live and grow by."

GOD'S PART IN THE POLITICAL JUMBLE.

BY REV J. C. M'FEETERS.

A long time ago, an aged bard was heard singing the following lines, while his skillful fingers made music flow from his harp:

"I to the foolish people said,
Do not deal foolishly;
And unto those that wicked are,
Lift not your horn on high.

Lift not your horn on high, nor speak
With stuhhorn neck; hut know
That not from east, nor west, nor south,
Promotion doth flow.

But God is Judge; he puts down one,
And sets another up.
For in the hand of God most high
Of red wine is a cup:

'Tis full of mixture, he pours forth,
And makes the wicked all
Wring out the hitter dregs thereof;
Yea, and they drink them shall."

David, the swcet singer of Israel, saw the presence of God in the changes that occurred throughout the nation. The complexion of politics varied in color, as God blew his breath upon it. Wicked men got into power, when God said so; and he said so, when the nation deserved such a curse, and righteous men got into power, when God said so; and he said so, when the nation deserved such a blessing. Promotion comes not from the points of the compass, but from the throne of God; it is not earth-born, but heaven-given; moves not along a horizontal line, but comes down, thus the old king of Israel thought, and his thoughts were given him on this subject by the Holy Ghost.

God's power is a factor in politics; and it is the controlling factor. It is the factor that will utilize the good and bad elements for the best practical purposes. Then let not the foolish deal foolishly. It is folly for a great party to bid for the temperance vote, and whisky vote, by "silence" in their platform. Though no beer plank be there, yet the attempt is made to float the whole platform on a sea of beer; a beer tide is counted on to send the craft into power. But God can commission St. John to nullify the unrighteous expedient.

Let not the wicked lift their horn on high. It is wicked to exalt wickedness. And the other great party may ignore decency, morality, and religion, and push the embodiment of licentiousness towards the seat of power, but God can let the wickedness appear in its deep flagrance, that the nation will turn away with nausea from it; this last dose may be an emetic which will cast the party out of the body politic.

God is moving amidst the political commotions, and he is arranging and carrying forward his will. He is causing his hand to be felt, and his power to be wished. His supreme authority is beginning to touch the public conscience; the kingly glory of his Son is beginning to ramify politics; and his name is coming near to the rulers. The day is spreading its light on the tops of the mountains, and the glory of the Lord shall yet fill our land.

The Prohibition party has become a magnetic focus, and it is rapidly arranging around it the good and great elements of the nation; the eause of the Lord is at its heart; and the glory of the Lord is on its banner. And the time is not far away when Christian voters will refuse to beeome responsible for immoral men in office; responsible before Christ the Judge for Christless rulers, eleeted by their suffrage. And when that day eomes truth shall have gained her victory; holiness shall be on the horses' bells; Christ, the King of kings, and Lord of lords shall be on the nation's banner.

FRAGMENTS FROM CATECHUMEN.

1. The "Mother of Harlots" of Revelation has a plurality of daughters. Was one of these born in "Apple-tree tavern," June, 1717?

2. Does the letter G in Freemasonry mean "God and Geometry?" or rather Going to Gehenna? If the former, we are led to conjecture that the G. A. O. T. U. of the fraternity is a synonym of geometry; i. e., the Masonic d. i. t. has the honor to be an important branch of mathematies. As that cannot be the God of the Bible, who gave the Son of his bosom to win us to holiness and heaven, the craft is consistent in rejecting Emanuel as the way to be saved. Well, consistency is a jewel, but the craft sink that as they go down in degrees where they play "Red Cross."

3. Masonry, being the "universal religion" and intensely repugnant to sects and sect-makers, and so opposed to Emanuel, ought to be the most liberal, in terms of admission, of all religions. Yet it is the most circumscribed religion in its terms of initiation of any on our globe! What other system, in its terms of membership exeludes nine-tenths of the human family? Here we are puzzled again. Sovereign Grand Inspeetor General of the Royal thirty-third degree, help us out. Pleasc do.

4. Another similar problem troubles us. As the craft subsists to combat sectarian creeds and holds its religion entirely sufficient to save our race, in ease it is lived up (?) to, provided they take the intensely Christian degree of Knights Templar, we cannot see why so large a part of their members insist on belonging to other religious sects which antagonize, in every fundamental principle, the Mason religion. Is there another sect that insists on belonging to two distinct and opposite religions? Dear Magnus, teach us.

5. Will his reverence teach us which, the Masonic religion or Jesuitism, is nearest in harmony with the Christian's Bible? Both are secret religions. Also, how does the Masonic religion compare with the religion of Jo. Smith, who was a Mason?

6. We submit to his Masonic erudition whether the Masonic d. i. t., the G. A. O. T. U., ever heard of the Divine Logos of John 1st? Will our Magnus grant us the honor of introducing his d. i. t. of the lodge to the Deity of the Bible? Such acquaintance may possibly elevate its character. Catechumen.

FIFTY REASONS AGAINST THE LODGE.

[From the Review and Herald, Battle Creek, Mich., March 20, 1883.]

Some men may be much better than the evil organizations of which they are members; but their connection with such organizations is to be deplored, and it should be candidly considered and abandoned. The following are believed to be correct, and not uncharitable, statements of facts concerning secret societies:

1. They cannot bear the light, but curtain and guard their lodge-rooms, shade their councils with otahs and obligations of secrecy, and endeavor to avoid and suppress candid discussions of their merits. 2. They promote guilefulness, slyness, and cunning, and are opposed to openness, candor, and simplicity of character and conduct. 3. Their work is underhanded, and tends to promote unfairness and underhandedness. 4. Their general tendency is to promote their ends by indirect and insincere words and acts, and this inclines to disciplined deception and dishonesty. 5. They are conspiracies against society, proposing to promote the interests of their own members at the expense of those who are not members of those orders. 6. They not only promote clans and rings, but are themselves clans and rings of a very objectionable order.

7. Professing the reverse, they administer obligations and impose "duties" which practically conflict with the duties of their members to themselves, to their families, to the church, and to the state. 8. While the family, the church, and the state are ordained of God, and sanctioned by his Word, these orders and their methods are not ordained of God, but are contrary to the precepts of the Bible. 9. They swear their candidates in advance to do, or not to do, things not yet made known to them, which is expressly forbidden in the Holy Scriptures. Lev. 5:4–6.

10. Their initiatory ceremonies are degrading to the candidate initiated. 11. They resort to put-up terrors and devices to frighten or bewilder those they initiate, and to public show, for effect. 12. They invade the most sacred relations of the family, requiring of the husband obligations, and furnishing him with plans and conversations, which his oath forbids his making known to his wife, thus building up, even without the consent of the wife, a middle wall of partition between wedded souls. 13. They promote a sense of irresponsibility to public opinion, and to the church of Christ, by hiding under oath-bars a considerable part of the lives of their members. 14. The obligations they impose, and the preecpts they inculeate, cause their members to resort to dodges, pretense, and even falsehood to conceal facts relating to these orders, which they are sworn to conceal. 15. Their obligations, ceremonies, and ritual have been published to the world and attested by many good witnesses,—and in the case of Freemasonry, by many good men of national reputation, and by thousands of seceding and adhering members of the lodge,—yet these orders pretend to sell their degrees as secrets, thus cheating the credulous and swindling the uninformed.

16. The titles used by secret orders are generally anti-Christian and anti-republican. 17. Their brotherhoods, confessedly composed largely of the unbelieving and profane, and even of vile men, are profane brotherhoods. 18. In these orders, men of fraud and craft flourish and govern, while merit and straightforwardness among their own members, are at a discount and sink into subjection.

19. These orders feign piety, yet—except in the papal degrees of Freemasonry; as, Knights Templar, etc.—their authorized forms of prayer purposely exclude the name of Jesus Christ, to satisfy and gratify Jews, deists, and other enemies of Christ and his holy religion, so that the authorized worship of these orders in general is either papal or deistic, and all other is illegal, and ean be tolerated in the lodge in the absence only, or by the consent, of unbelievers of Christianity. 20. They are almost as ritualistic as paganism or papacy. 21. They unblushingly pretend to benevolence, though often they do not expend even one-third of the tax exacted of their members for initiation, dues, etc., in the relief of their sick and unfortunate, their widows and orphans; so that much of this paid-for benevolence is expended otherwise. 22. They claim to give donations to relieve the suffering; but some of the wholesale liquor firms of Chicago donated somewhat liberally for the relief of the storm-swept New Ulm sufferers in Minnesota, not limiting their relief to their own craft, as secret societies often do. Can the donations of the liquor-dealers sanctify the liquor traffic?

23. They pervert history and the Holy Scriptures in their lectures and legends. 24. They are full of imposture. 25. They pervert their own history, feigning to be either more ancient or more honorable than they really are, in their origin and progress. 26. Their really pious members are such as have been insnared by lodge tricks, bound by impious oaths or obligations; and they only remain in the lodge from fear of its frowns and persecutions, or from inattention and obliviousness to its real character and operations, or from latitudinous judgment and conscience, just as some really pious men have, for some reason, continued in the communion of corrupt, sacrilegious Rome. 27. Their zealous, active members—if also members of evangelical churches—are generally observed to be lukewarm, backslidden, or entire strangers to piety, and are often reputed to be tricky.

28. Really, there seems to be a close relation between the joining of secret orders, by church members, and their backsliding. 29. Deep, thorough conversion often leads the most intelligent and conscientious to abandon, and even renounee, seeret societies; and full conseeration and deep piety, if attended with thoughtfulness and good judgment, are always averse to them. 30. Revivals, attended by intense spirituality, have been observed to follow the declension and abandonment of the lodge. Secret orders are powerful engines for the destruction of souls.

32. Secret orders dupe and tax their "mudsills" to bountify and luxuriate their magnates. 33. They waste large sums of money. 34. They waste much precious time. 35. The state of the church does not suffer when secret orders decline, nor advance with their prosperity; but the very reverse is true. 36. These orders, though clans, often aspire to represent the church or the nation in laying the corner-stones of church buildings and of State and national edifices. 37. These orders often dispense office and place in a republic, and even in the church of God. 38. They influence the courts of justice. 39. They very generally muzzle the press, secular and religious.

40. Their literature is spread-eagle and bombastic, glorifying the darkness of the lodge, "calling evil good, and good evil," putting "darkness for light and light for darkness," and "bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!" Isa. 5:40. 41. Their literature fails to meet, or even clearly contradict, the ample exposures of the orders made by reliable men and attested by numerous witnesses of truth and veracity. 42. Such failure to vindicate or deny explicitly, was, in the case of Freemasonry, seen even though forty-five thousand, out of fifty thousand, members of the lodge abandoned it, after the abduction and murder of William Morgan.

43. Secret orders impair confidence and beget distrust in society; these effects, of themselves, begin great evils. 44. They do not generally succeed in entrapping men of conscious ability and worth, unless at an age when their merit and independence are as yet unrealized. 45. These orders are most proscriptive; for while men may expose error and trickery in State and national affairs, or errors and abuses in the church, or even attack the most sacred faith of the people without molestation, secretists, filled with rage, will vilify and abuse those who attack and expose secret orders, and often proceed to violence, thereby confessing that they cannot rely on truth and argument for the defense of their cause. 46. They resort to threats, persecutions, and even violence in many cases, to silence argument, stop exposure, or to punish those who have seceded from their ranks, however just the argument, eorrect the exposure, or conscientious the defection from their ranks may be.

47. Each secret order, by sanctioning the principle of secretism, gives countenance and aid to other secret societies, though of unknown, pernicious, or most dangerous principles. 48. The upper degrees of a secret order control the lower ones, and the major orders the minor ones—through cunning managers, who creep into them for that purpose;—and thus is built up a vast tyrannical empire of secretism, the chief despot of which is generally a wicked man, often an enemy of God and a seourge of men; for Freemasonry generally places at its head bold, bad men like Albert G. Pike, the butcher of Fort Pillow, or prodigal, self-indulgent men like the Prinee of Wales. 49. The seeret orders become, to many, a substitute for the church, and attendance on lodge meetings, even by ministers and church members, is often preferred to the most spiritual and interesting services of the church; and the "duties" of the lodge are preferred to duty to Christ and the church. 50. The power of secret orders to make really good men do evil and abominable things, is one of the most shocking features of the lodge; henee, there is the greatest reason why the church should require its members to come out of fellowship with those deceitful, profane, underhanded, and deistic orders, that they be not partakers of their abominations.

Many of the propositions contained in the foregoing are either self-evident, or they are attested by the observation of the candid and intelligent reader. While it may be true that some of the propositions are not applicable to every secret soeiety, many of them are thus applicable, and most of them apply to most of the orders, and others to many of them.

THE KU-KLUX OATHS.

The recent sketch of the origin and apology for the horrible history of the Masonic assassins of the South known as the Ku-Klux Klan, which appeared in the Century magazine, will make the following from the Washington Chronicle of December, 1871, of speeial but melancholy interest:

Captain J. G. Hester, deputy marshal, and one of the most zealous and useful officers the government has, reached Raleigh, North Carolina, a day or two since, from Sampson county, in that State, with several prisoners arrested for murder, and with some of the paraphernalia of the Ku-Klux dens of that country, including a human skull used in swearing in members. The persons arrested are the murderers of Menus Herring, a colored man who was waylaid and killed because he was a witness in eourt against these same Ku-Klux. The evidence obtained by Captain Hester implicates several hundred persons in crimes, many of which are murders. But for the enforcement act and the interposition of national authority, these crimes would have continued, for the local courts were entirely powerless to suppress them. The Democrats of Samson county were having a good time, taking terrible oaths on the Bible and on human skulls, whipping and killing loyal men when it pleased them to do so, until the national government stepped in and put a check upon them. There are leaders in this county who ought to be reached, but as they are appointed by a higher power than the dens, it is difficult to trace them. These leaders move in respectable circles, are educated men, and pass for gentlemen! But the blood of murder is on their garments. They will be known after awhile. "Murder will out."

The writer of this has known for some time that in well-appointed Ku-Klux dens there was a vial of blood of some slain human victim and a human skull, on which the oath was taken. These dens, is seems, are more atrocious than the others, as, for example, the Sampson and Moore county dens. In the latter county, in February, 1869, the house of Daniel Blue, colored, was entered by Ku-Klux. He escaped. His wife and five children were murdered. The wife was pregnant, and was shot through her body and through the unborn child. The youngest child, a year or two old, was thrown on the floor and its head ground under the boot-heel of one of the Ku-Klux. The cabin was then fired and the bodies consumed with it. Daniel Blue's only crime was—hear it ye people!—that he was a Republican. This is one of the hundreds of eases that moved Governor Holden to pursue the course he did in North Carolina in July, 1870.

The following is the oath of the dens in Sampson county, N. C.:

FIRST OATH.

I, A. B., do solemnly swear before Almighty God, and in the presenee of these my friends here assembled, that I will truly and faithfully keep seeret, even unto death, the plans and movements of this society. I do furthermore swear that I will come at the calling of the first G. C. (Grand Council) of the Mask Multitude at any hour of the morn; that I will rattle the dead bones; that I will follow upon the track of the scalawag's blood. Do you swear that in ease of our being interrupted in any civil government in which we may he operating that you will regard no oath that will convict one of its members, but under all circumstances stand by the order in oath, death, and blood? In testimony of your faith do you herenpon take upon yourself this most solemn and binding obligation, in presenee of three or more honorable and accepted members here present? [Those being put through kiss the Bible.]

SECOND OATH.

The chief says: Brethren, this man (or these men) now kneel at the altar of our faith, and ask to he bound to our fortunes by the solemn and mysterious provisions of our order; must I swear them (or him) by the oath that shall forever hind, and never he broken? The brethren lay their hands on their left breast and say: Swear them. The party or parties are then sworn as follows:

I, A. B., do solemnly swear before Almighty God, and in the presenee of these my friends here assembled, being fully and seriously impressed with the sacredness of the act, that I never will make known, either by word, sign, or deed, my knowledge of its existenee. I swear that the enemies of the white man's race and of the white man's government, and the friends of nigger equality, are now, and forever shall be, my enemies. I swear to obey the chief in all his constitutional orders, and all the orders which he may issne by the direction of this society. I swear to kill any member of this society who shall prove false to this oath. I swear to visit and comfort the members in sickness; I swear to defend the life of every member of this society—even at the risk of my own—should I ever see it in danger; I swear to give my patronage and support to the members of this society in preference to all others; and lastly, I swear by this Bible, this skull, and this blood, that shall I ever prove untrue in any one partieular to the obligations I have here taken, unreservedly, voluntarily, I hope to become an outcast, an alien to my friends, my country, and my God. All of which so help me God.

During the taking of these oaths the brethren are usually disguised, and draw their pistols, knives, etc., presenting them in close proximity to the heads of those being initiated; in the second oath, the right hand rests on a Bible, the left on a human skull.

THE WICKEDNESS OF FRANCE.

On the whole, I think that the Spiritual Wickednesses in High Places would award the prize to France. Pretending to be Christian, she is pagan to the core. Her gods are Pleasure and Glory. Between the two she has brought herself to a stand-still in population, and is sinking out of the circle of the Great Powers. It is characteristic of her that, when the substance is slipping from her enervated hand, she should hysterically grasp at the shadow. She is seeking to repair her tattered glory and to salve her wounded pride by a systematic bullying of weaker peoples, and by an absurd attempt to rival the colonial greatness of England. It is impossible to find a redeeming feature in the present aggression upon China or to understand it except as a determination to force herself upon the notice of the great commercial and Christian powers by imperiling their trade and their missions. It is something ghastly and should give pause to the genial optimist, to see a nation which calls itself Christian thus going into all the world and shooting all nations in the name of the world, the flesh and the devil. —Intelligencer.

It is stated that there is not a single Sunday newspaper published in Canada. We wish this could be said of our own country. We are confident the morals of any community will be better where the Sunday paper is not circulated. Christians should discourage these papers, and labor to introduce a better class of reading than is furnished by the secular dailies.—Selected.

DESTROY THE WORKS OF THE DEVIL.

THE WORK OF FAITH IN SOUTH AFRICA.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." 1 John 3:8.

Some years ago, while being yet in Holland, my native country, I had a remarkable experience in connection with the above passage. While I heard a minister, R. Duiker, preach on these words, I seemed to see a vision in the upper part of the church, consisting of two classes of people, separated by a partition, on the one side of which being those who were still in the power of the devil, while those on the other were delivered out of his power, among whom I found myself; moreover, the Lord showed me that he would make me instrumental in delivering many out of the power of the devil. I told this event to the minister, which surprised him very much.

From my childhood I had prayed the Lord to enable me to preach the Gospel, which then already was very precious to my soul. From this event I dated my divine call to the ministry, and commenced immediately to study for that purpose. The devil, however, was also aware of this my call, and accordingly paid me a special visit two weeks afterwards, in order to persuade me to give up my plan. At first he told me I was not fit at all for such a work as the ministry, but after being told that this was none of his business, and that God who had called me for it, would also qualify me, he threatened to kill me; yet the Lord Jesus also was present, and I told the devil that he was unable to kill me, since the Lord himself had come to my aid. After this he appeared to me as a raging lion, and I conceived plainly the miserable condition of those who are in his power. I never again had such experiences.

Some who claim the name of Christians deny the existence of the devil, which they could never do if he had appeared to them in the same manner as he has done to me. It would be a cause of joy if any could get rid of the works of the devil simply by denying his existence, but it seems to me that such deniers can never share in the destruction of the works of the devil, which John attributes to the Son of God.

During the five years I was minister of the Dutch Reformed church in America, my labors were not entirely in vain, yet in that way the promise of God formerly made to me could hardly be realized. About three years, however, before I entered the ministry, God showed me that he intended to use me yet in South Africa, to which I gave at once my consent, if such might be his will. From this date I always felt perfectly sure that I had to go to Africa, even in a time of sickness when the doctor almost despaired of my recovery. Finally, while being minister at Passaic, New Jersey, the desire arose in my soul to be more generally useful, upon which God told me I had to leave America for South Africa, which I did soon after with wife and one child.

While on board ship the Lord made it plain to me that we had to preach the Gospel to the Mohammedans in Cape Town, of whom there are several thousands here. These people are especially in the power of the devil by means of their false religion. After we had labored among the Mohammedans for some time, my attention became very much attracted to the subject of faith healing, while being healed myself from consumption by the prayer of faith, at my arrival in America, and reading repeatedly of faith-healing in America and Europe, and perceiving how great a blessing this might be in South Africa. I prayed for light on this subject, and it was granted to me, so that I commenced this work among Mohammedans and Christians with great success. In regard to bodily sickness, and the manner in which people try to get rid of it, the devil has also very great power, so that the promise of God, as to using me to destroy the works of the devil may be largely fulfilled in the line of healing the sick by the prayer of faith. Christ plainly teaches that sickness belongs to the works of the devil, first by leading men to sin, of which sickness is the chastisement inflicted by the devil at divine permission, and the general endeavor of the sick to be delivered of this chastisement by means of poisonous medicines, may also be considered as invented by the devil, because many bodies are thereby destroyed, and great spiritual blessings are thereby forfeited, which would be enjoyed in case the sick confessed their sins before God, and applied directly and immediately to him for physical healing.

Freemasonry no doubt is a stronghold of the devil, as experience amply teaches, yet I believe that the common practice of resorting in sickness to the use of medicine, instead of resorting to God alone as James enjoins, is a much greater work of Satan. In the Satanic bonds of Freemasonry comparatively few are entangled, being thus confined to males alone, and of them commonly the worst kind; but almost all classes of all ages are suffering from the wiles of Satan, by endeavoring to destroy his works in regard to their bodies, by means of drugs. I can say to the glory of God, that I have been lately very successful in teaching the people in South Africa that the will of God is, that we shall apply to him directly for the healing of the body.

During my last tour through the country, which lasted about four months, I prayed at least for 250 sick persons, of whom many have been either entirely or partly, either immediately or gradually, healed. Several have been healed of otherwise incurable diseases, as cancer, heart disease, cases of neuralgia of years' standing, paralysis, asthma, and consumption.

I have lately been preaching in several churches of the Dutch Reformed church on the subject of healing by faith, by means of which many have become convinced that faith is the only means appointed by God for the healing of our bodies as well as our souls, which teaching was the more effectual by means of the miracles of healing which Christ more or less at every place performed, in the healing of the sick.

The healing was also a powerful means of converting the sinners and of sanctifying the saints. The mouths of the healed were often filled with the praise of the Lord, as it was when Christ and his apostles cured the sick. A woman, for instance, was quickly healed of cancer in the breast, for which doctors knew no means but cutting it off. A farmer was immediately cured of asthma, who, as he said, would not endure it one night for £50, or $250. Such things confirm the doctrine. My wife accompanied me, and helped me at several places, and the blessings which God gave upon our labors for the healing of soul and body were very great, as we held also special Gospel services. Many have testified publicly to either bodily healing or conversion, and some to both. Recently we received an invitation from the O. V. S. to pray for the sick, whence we hope soon to go.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN,

of Kansas.

For Vice President,

WILLIAM DANIEL,

of Maryland.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

Iowa Voters.—All parties in Iowa desiring Electoral and State American tickets headed by St. John and Daniel, will address the undersigned, stating number and including postage for return. Persons desiring to contribute to the expense of the same are requested to remit. Now let no one fail of having tickets.

A. W. Hall, College Springs, Iowa.
Chairman State Central Committee.

CAN THE AMERICAN PARTY CONSISTENTLY VOTE FOR ST. JOHN?

The question before us now is not whether it would be wise for the American party to adopt the candidates of the Prohibition party, but it is whether those who were opposed to this move can now consent to vote with the majority. No objection has been raised to William Daniel of Maryland, but very strenuous opposition is made to John P. St. John as the candidate of the American party for President. This opposition was expressed very freely at Chicago, at the time the nomination of Mr. Pomeroy was made. Many of the first and best members of the party threaten to rebel, and numbers fee sad over the result. It was with an eye to these, the staunch, tried, and true, that I suggested in the committee that second question to be put to St. John, for it seemed to me only the sequence of the first,—"Do you consider your Masonic obligation binding?" Of course, if not binding, he would be free to say that the secrets were out.

But none of us care for the form of the question, provided we receive the assurance that St. John is no longer under the despotism of the lodge, that his allegiance is due to the state and not to the "worshipful master." In pushing our inquiries we have need to use caution lest we demand too much. The American party is not a religious organization, it cannot require a religious test. And yet even in that line, let us examine what some would exact of him. It is that he shall publicly break his obligation. Now what church organization would demand this of St. John, if he were knocking at its door? The Wesleyan does, but no other that I know. The United Brethren, United Reformed and Associate Presbyterian, Free Methodist and Friends do not. The query put to any man joining a church is, Do you subscribe to our principles and are you in harmony with us? To discover the sincerity of an individual it is permissible to question further, but only to discover his sincerity.

As an American party we have a declaration of principles, but after all there is only one distinguishing principle, and that is anti-secrecy, and a man may hold contrary views on all the other planks and still be in good standing, and the party may change or repeal its other planks and still remain, but the repeal of the plank on secret societies is its death.

Let us then question this man who is suggested for our suffrage. Do you endorse this plank: "We demand that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law." St. John has expressed his assent. You ask, "Did you once join the Masons? What assurance do you give us that you are no longer one?" "I have not entered a Masonic lodge for seventeen years, I have refused to pay the dues, and I will never darken their doors again."

Still some shake their heads and say, "But the Masons can take him back again." This may be true, but their rules and regulations are not to be the criterion of our conduct. But some still insist that we can vote for him only on the condition that he breaks his obligation.

In our action we are giving notice to others on what terms they will be received into the party. We want all the Freemasons to join us, and who could have the heart to deny them this privilege if they are willing to subscribe to our principles. How long a period of probation shall we require? Five years is sufficient to enable a foreigner to become a citizen. But St. John has been out of the lodge for seventeen years. But some one remarks, "He may return to the lodge." What if he does? He thereby leaves the party. Others have left it before, and others will hereafter, and we must expect to see these changes, but let us not be over-suspicious of those who are willing to subscribe to our principles.

Again, our lecturers have been asserting and endeavoring to prove that Washington had left the Masons. They bring forward the same proof which substantiates the fact that St. John is out of the lodge.

While, therefore, many may think and feel, as I have done, that it was an unwise and premature step; yet that now it has been taken, we need not hold back for fear we are sacrificing our principles.

Requiring a Mason to break his obligation before he is received into fellowship is a custom or rule of the Wesleyan church, and many may think that it would be a good rule for all churches and organizations; but until it is adopted by a formal vote of the American party, we have no right to demand it of the Masons who desire to join our ranks. Of course I admit that we should use extra care to see that our candidates are free from the lodge, and especially one who is put at the head as a standard bearer; but he is free, he is out. Barlow, Rathoun and Browne must admit that. He has not yet ourned the bridge behind him, and I suppose he is afraid o do that for fear the wind will blow the smoke into ome tender eyes and make them smart and make the ears come. There are some Leahs in this day.

We must be careful not to carry the customs or preju-lices of our individual denominations into the American arty. Suppose at Galesburg some one had objected to Dr. Blanchard as candidate for President because he was oo friendly with the Masons and had fellowship with hem in the church. We can imagine the hoary head ising up with fifty odd years of Anti-masonry on it, to ssert that the College church at Wheaton excludes Iasons from their fold. "Yes," this objector would con-inue, "but you go from home and fellowship the Masons n their own churches, in Chicago, Cincinnati aud Wash-ngton; you sit at the communion table with them, and erhaps receive the bread and wine from hands that have inistered at strange altars and have joined in pagan orship." Though all might feel that Dr. Blanchard as hardly consistent in his action, yet it would readily e perceived that it was not allowable for a man to bring he customs or regulations of his own church, however ise they might be, into a political organization, and de-iand that the candidates should conform to their strict-st minutiae.

So if John P. St. John subscribes to the fifth plank of he American platform, he does all that we can consist-ntly require. DR. J. BLANCHARD, DOES HE DO THAT INCERELY? GEORGE WARRINGTON.

MORALITY IN POLITICS.

Pres. Julius H. Seelye of Amherst College contributes n article with the above title to the October North Amer-can Review, which has been widely reprinted, and is one f the ablest analyses of the political situation that has ppeared. The following is a considerable portion:

The American people can not be interested in merely laying at politics; they can not become excited over iake-believes. They demand a real issue, which the Re-ublican and Democratic parties no longer offer. The nes which have separated these two great parties have ecome obliterated; their two platforms are essentially he same. There is no longer any great political princi-le which characteristically distinguishes either from the ther, hence we notice that the platform speakers in the reseut canvass, when they leave the candidates and argue n party grounds for either side, draw their argumcnts om what the party has been, rather than from what it is. There are and can be but two political parties any-here, for there is but one political problem; and to this nly two answers are possible, into which the real issue f all political parties, whatever their name or apparent umber, must be resolved. The great political problem -the hinge of all social movemcnts in all time—is how o marry law and liberty together; in other words, how iall man be governed and yet be free? Government and reedom—liberty and law—are both necessary. If gov-rnment be wanting, liberty becomes license; if freedom ails, law leads to despotism. But how shall the claims f each be settled? In the perfect state, to which tend ll the unformed and unconscious instincts of men, per-ect law and perfect liberty will have complete accord; nd in the imperfect state. so far as it has any living rowth, there will be a constant struggle toward this con-ition—a feeling after, if haply it might find it, though i the darkness. To the question, how can it be found? iere can be, as there has been, only two replies. We an on the one hand set the liberty first, and bring the .w to meet its claims; or, on the other, we can put the .w into the foreground, and let the liberty follow as the .w may lead. Between these two there is a living issue hich can rouse men, and which has actually given rength to all political struggles the world over.

It is quite easy to see that this has been in former times ie exact issue between the Democratic and Republican arties. I do not mean that it has been definitely pro-ounded or even consciously formulated as such (the real iotives in great political actions often reach below the onsciousness of the actors, and are often most powerful hen least perceived), but as one studies the history of iese two parties it can be clearly seen that this issue ives the characteristic marks to both. The Democratic arty has taken its grounds upon liberty; it has made reedom its primary care. Government with it has had ie secondary place, and the consent of the governed the rst. From the outset this party has held everything sub-ervient to its own independent will. It has sought only hat it chose, demanding a self-government, with a clear mphasis of the self. The attempted secession of the outhern States, which claim their right to set up for iemselves because they choose to have it thus, was the onsistent application of the Democratic principle.

THE POSITION OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

as been the exact converse, its eye has been pre-emi-ently on the law. For the Democratic party has sought or a liberty which should determine their law, the Republican party has looked for a law which should maintain their liberty. It has affirmed a law which ought to be obcyed, and which could rightfully command the choices of its subjects, whether originally conformable to those choices or not. It is sound Democratic doctrine that whatever the people will is right, and may be enacted as law. The counter-principle on which the Republican party first took its staud maintains that what is right the people ought to will, and that nothing is lawful or should be chosen unless it has an authority with which men's reason and choice have nothing other to do than to discover and obey. The attitude of the Republican party toward the Southern seccssion, compelling obedience to lawful authority, though the choice of 8,000,000 of people refused to obey, exactly illustrates its original spirit.

I do not need to exemplify at length this difference between these two parties, though nothing would be easier; nor do I wish now to consider at all which of these conflicting claims has the better grouud. The only point I now note is that here is a real and living issue, worthy of the contests that have raged around it, and deserving still to be contended for, only that it is no longer set forth. The Republican party, not formally nor openly—perhaps still unconscious of any change—but obvious to any observing eye, has abandoned its early ground. It makes no more any profession of contending for what is right simply because it is right; it no longer affirms any universal rights of man, nor nor any claim which rests upon nations, and which all nations in universal brotherhood should obey. In its late Chicago convention its platform was built with a single eye to what the choices of the people are, without regard to what they should be. The high ground of its early history, when it set up a standard which the majority were sure to reject, but to which they were nevertheless uncompromisingly summoned, and which at length compelled the choices which were at first refused, has been entirely relinquished. Hence the great issue between the two parties no longer exists. They are contending for no principle. Their only struggle is to obtain possession of the patronage and the power of the government. This explains the lack of enthusiasm in the contest, the shifting of so many from one side to the other of hitherto dividing party lines, and the uncertainty of so many at the present time as to how they shall vote. It explains also the demand, more and more loudly expressed, for a party which shall have some moral convictions and the courage to express them.

For, whatever may be said about the economic questions entering into state policy, and however prominently or even exclusively these may stand out in many minds, the moral relations of the state are nevertheless paramount. Economic questions are wisely determincd only by ethical considerations. Questions of the tariff, taxation, trade, currency, immigration, the rights of labor and of capital, all root themselves in the deeper question of man's organic relationship with his fellow-man, and can only be wisely settled—settled peacefully and permanently—on the great principle that men and nations are all linked together, that we are all fellow-members, one of another, so that if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, and if one member be honored, all the members rejoice together. The state, if not a moral person, represents the highest moral will, and auy policy of the state is advantageous in the line of what may be called material profit and loss, only as it expresses this moral will; in other words, only as it is determined on the broadest principles of rectitude.

Hence the first quality of statesmanship is moral. The statesman needs first of all that he himself be upright. A good will, clear and firm, is his best endowment. He needs, of course, high gifts of intellect—understanding of his times, like the men of Issachar, that he may know what the people ought to do; and we may perhaps conceive of a man so well endowed with intellect, so far-sighted, that he could see the wisdom for a government of a moral attitude which he has never taken for himself, as Goethe, great genius that he was, discerned and accurately described experiences of which he was never conscious; but such geniuses are very rare, and even when found are painfully conscious—as when we compare Goethe with Shakespeare—of the imperfection of the broadest and deepest intellect uninstructed by the inspiration of all-controlling moral purpose. If there be a strong intellect, there is nothing like a will centered on the right to steady and clarify its vision. Only he who is truly willing to do what is right can truly know what is right.

It can never be necessary to vote for an unworthy man. There can always be found candidates who do not solicit the votes of any one, but who are worthy the votes of all. The American people do not lack here. They have never wanted in men fit to lead them. They have found their leaders, sometimes after delays, but in the end with unerring instinct.

It is not wise to take counsel of timid expediency here; votes are not thrown away which are cast for right measures and right men. If they are scattered, lacking organization, as is sometimes likely, and therefore seeming to fail of any immediate result, they have not failed. A ballot which is only a protest may have an all-controlling potency over the future, and this may be far more important than any present end. The exhibition on a great scale of a political force which will not be led by any pretext of expediency against a calm and conscientious judgment will soon secure for itself an efficient organization. A scattered vote in a single election may easily be the controlling vote in the next. Such a vote, if indicative of a high purpose—a purpose which can neither be cajoled nor frightened—carries with it a healthy instruction to political leaders and a healthy inspiration to the people.

A. C. WIGGINS, Footeville, Wis.—Many of my friends are in trouble about the Presidential election. I am losing no sleep over it, but shall vote for good men and good principles, for Congressman, President and Vice-President. But, they say, you can never make a President on your platform. Liquor and secret societies will never be done away, never be conquered in this country. We shall see. I shall vote as I pray, and leave it in the hands of Him who rules earth and heaven.

In the recent State election in Arkansas the Democrats carried the State by nearly 50,000, a larger majority than usual. This is good news to temperance people when it is known that the State temperance convention declined to put a ticket in the field on condition that the Democrats would nominate prohibitionists, which was done. With 50,000 majority in Democratic Arkansas, 70,000 in Republican Maine, and the cause of prohibition gaining ground everywhere, temperance "fanatics" may well "take heart of grace."

The New York Tribune's advice to voters is this: "The best course still open is that of independent, earnest, manly criticism and revision by the people of the acts and decisions of whatever body or bodies shall henceforth assume to provide them with ready made candidates, whether for federal or for State offices. Treat all nominations simply as suggestions, to be followed or resisted as your own judgment shall dictate. A caucus of members of Congress formerly made (in effect) both President and Vice-president, that power was abused, and the people set their heel upon it. National conventions will doubtless in good time travel the same road and encounter a kindred fate. Meantime hear and heed all proper suggestions of candidates: then vote exactly as your own unfettered judgment shall dictate!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PRECIOUS LETTER FROM INDIA.

SECUNDERABAD, India, Aug. 8th, 1884.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Deeply indebted to you and readers I must write. Therefore grace, mercy and peace from God our Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, to all saints in Chicago and America.

All the anti-secret tracts you sent came and many of them are already at work. I find you sent some 4,000 tracts; we shall scatter them over this empire.

I feel deeply moved in sympathy with you in this work against wickedness in secretism. I do from this far-off land extend to you my fullest sympathy and assure you of my prayers. I regard secrecy as: 1, needless; 2, wrong; 3, wicked; 4, often devilish in its character and operations. It is an enemy of holiness, a royal snare of Beelzebub to snare the church of God and defeat infinite love in its attempts to save the world. Men of God cannot maintain their self-respect in the secret of God's presence and humble themselves to the God-dishonoring ceremonies and requirements of secrecy. You do the country and church a service when you point out the secret affiliations of bishops, ministers and public men. You will be hated for it, but the God of open truth will reward you for this sturdy war on this modern heathenism.

I knew many Masonic brethren in the ministry of my (Methodist) church. But I know no marked soul-savers among them. Some of them, like Buckley, Edwards, Fowler, Tiffany, are fine writers and lecturers; but I notice they are not marked as soul-savers. We have to praise God for a wonderful revival of holiness in America during the last twenty years. But active Masons have not been active in this work of God. There have been on the other hand hundreds of Masons taken out of the lodge, never to return, by the experience of entire sanctification. There are hundreds of preachers in the ministry who have been duped in Masonry and whose eyes God has so far opened that they no more visit the lodge, though they do not renounce or denounce it. Others, uot a few, have been made the life-long opponents of secrecy by this blessed experience.

Holiness and secrecy are utterly inimical. A man cannot retain the experience of holiness in the power of God and mix up with men of every dye of moral badness in secret chambers at late hours at night. Honest men cannot intelligently and honestly plead the innocency of secrecy. It is contrary to the spirit of the gospel and in absolute contradiction or opposition to God's word. It cannot be said secrecy don't know Christ, for it does, and with violent hand blasphemously expunges his holy name from God's own word at its pleasure, proving itself hereby to be anti-Christ in character. God's pity rests on secret society Christians; but he hates these works of darkness—so dark that in India, heathen, Mohammedan, Parsee and Buddhist love them and join with so-called Christians in Bacchanalian orgies, week after week till the small hours of the morning.

Cry on and spare not till the church of God be free of this curse. The God of Jacob is your help.

I am, your brother cleansed in the blood,

C. B. WARD

ANOTHER RENUNCIATION.

Seymour Lake, Mich., Sept. 22, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—One year ago the Lord brought me out from Masonic darkness, in which I lived for fifteen years, vainly striving to live a Christian. This may seem strange to one who has not been cable-towed.

Two years ago I promised the Lord I would walk in all the light that shone on my heart. He took me at my word. I was a staunch Mason, going so far as to say if a Mason should break his obligation he ought to suffer the penalty of having his body severed in twain, his bowels burned in the midst, etc.

My experience may be an old story to the readers of the Cynosure, but when God told me that I must renounce Masonry, it was a new story to me. I had made the promise. I obeyed the Lord and he set my poor soul at liberty. He severed the Masonic cord and I was free. All praise to his holy name!

Dear reader, if you value your soul's salvation, never, never get ensnared in the toils of Masonry. It is the work of the devil. There is no good in it. I went as far as Master Mason, and to have continued there would in the end have sent my poor soul to hell. I would to God my miserable experience may save some poor mortal from this awful bondage. Did I say bondage? Yes, more than that, it is destruction to all that is good in man.

How deceptive the Masonic devil is! He led me along step by step; made me believe it was religion, until he got the cable-tow three times around my heart, then there was no escape but by the atoning blood of Christ, whom the Masonic devil denies. I wonder not that the world is full of corruption; that most of the churches are full of corruption; that it is impossible to get justice in our courts.

Before closing I would call the attention of the public to this fact: Masonry, as revealed by Ronayne, Richardson, and others, is true. Also, so long as a man adheres to Masonry, understanding it, it is impossible for him to have the least spark of Bible religion, or get to heaven. These are bold words, but I think the Cynosure will bear me out in them.

There must be something done to put down this monstrous enemy to all mankind, or it will plunge our nation into civil war, and bring greater woes than those spoken of by John the revelator. Dewitt Benjamin,

WILL PREACHING AGAINST MASONRY INJURE A REVIVAL?

When I first commenced to preach the Gospel I knew very little about secret societies. When a child of twelve I had read Morgan's Exposition, and I remember how foolish and silly some of the ceremonies of initiation seemed. After preaching about two years the Lord began to teach me by the baptism of power that I must take the gospel broom and sweep the church floor clean; that I must oppose and expose and preach against all manner of secret societies not excepting even the Good Templars. That society was then in its glory, and superceding all other temperance organizations. I understood the voice of the Spirit, and began to study and look about to see what could be done. I knew that if I opposed an evil, I must have sufficient argument to convince the people. I purchased Bernard's Light on Masonry, and an exposition of Odd-fellowship which I found an excellent text book. I studied the Bible, especially the New Testament, thoroughly, and I found many texts directly opposed to all secret organizations. But one question troubled me. What arguments could I use against the Good Templar organization? At first I could think only that it was a stepping-stone to other and worse secret societies, a sort of Sunday-school for Odd-fellowship and Masonry. It was not long, however, before I found the history of the first secret temperance orders in a book on holiness. There I learned that when Morgan fell a martyr to the truth, public excitement and the wrath and indignation of the people was so great that Masons dare not meet in their lodges. Forty-five thousand Masons north of the Ohio river came out and left the lodge, and Masonry went down.

On one occasion the Lord showed me that I should go to the village of Malta, a few miles west of our home on the railroad, and ask for the Congregational church to preach in and I would get it. I took the train and stopped at the house of Mr. Brundage, a merchant of the place, with whose wife I was aequainted; he was an unconverted man, but a gentleman in every sense of the word. He called on the trustees of the church and engaged it for two evenings. The people desired me to continue the meetings; and for eight months I preached in that church every other Wednesday evening, and held a union prayer-meeting on Thursday evening at private houses. I went from house to house and prayed with the people, until every family in the town had been visited. A revival spirit was with us from first to last and a number of souls were converted. When I had preached only a few sermons the Lord gave me a text against secret societies. Accordingly I announced the subject to the people.

Of course there was excitement, for the devil and his accomplices are always excited when one of their strongholds is to be assailed. A minister of another denomination, a friend of mine, sent word that I had better not preach against Masonry in Malta. "You will get yourself enemies, diminish your congregation, and injure the revival work that is going on there." I thought of what Peter said, "We ought to obey God rather than men"; and moved forward regardless of anything that was said by friends or foes. The congregation that evening was larger than usual, and all were very attentive exeepting one Masonic church member, who stalked angrily out of the church and slammed the door after him. I got enemies, of course, by preaching a whole gospel, because Jesus said to his ministers, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you"; but the result of that sermon was an increase of my congregation, a continuation of the revival spirit, and God was honored and glorified in the declaration of the whole truth.

The idea that preaching against all sin, the Baal worship of Masonry not excepted, will injure a revival is one of the devil's lies, and ought not to be heeded for a moment by one of God's ministers. The circumstance above is only one of many which I might relate if space would permit. Mrs. H. C. Hayden.

PUBLISH THEIR NAMES.

Dear Cynosure:—Would it not be a good thing to give us a list of all the names of the secret soeieties, and to show that each and all of them are based on the one principle so fraught with evil that in the Old and New Testament it is utterly condemned when used either "to do evil or to do good"?—"Whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath and it be hid from him, when he knoweth thereof he shall be guilty and confess that he hath sinned in that thing."

Now it is the same character, whether a man make a solemn promise or swear. He is bound by the law of secretism, before he knows the secrets hid until after his oath or promise. All such oaths are prohibited by Christ's "Swear not at all"; and all such promises equally at variance with true obedience to his command, "Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

These are weighty words for every believer in Christ who desires to obey him and preserve their own true manhood and liberty in the freedom given us in Christ. One of his true heroes can put ten thousand secretists to flight. One ray of light can dispel much darkness. So let no one be discouraged by the number of names by which the subverters of Christ's Gospel and church seek to obstruct the absolute supremacy of his cause in the world. Names, sects, and parties must fall as well as paganism and lodgery, and Christ himself be all in all. Meantime let us beware of the false Christs of the secret chamber against whom we are warned by our Lord himself. (Matt. 24: 26.) T. H.

Note.—Every reader of the Cynosure is invited to send to the editor, separate from other writing, the name of all the secret orders with which he may be acquainted, except those which are very well and generally known. The list will be printed and the additions every month thereafter.—Ed.

—The Good Templars of Wisconsin lost in 1881 twenty-two lodges and 1,313 members; in 1882, sixty-nine lodges and 1,883 members; in 1883, thirty-two lodges and 2,282 members. This is no sign that temperance is declining in that State.

—Twenty-eight thousand Odd-fellows are annually suspended for non-payment of dues. That is the ordinary way to backslide from the order.

—A man in Tucson, Cal., belongs to fourteen different secret societies. He paid $380 in dues last year. In case of sickness he is entitled to the free attendance of twenty-four nurses and twelve doctors.

—A pastor writes that sixty-seven of his church members expend for tobacco $845 in a year, while the entire parish pay but $841 for all religious and benevolent purposes. One member pays $91 for tobaceo and $1 for missions!

LESSON II.—Oct. 12, 1884.—David's Charge to Solomon.—1 Chron. 22: 6-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Arise, therefore, and be doing, and the Lord be with thee.—1 Chron. 22: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The sin of war. Vs. 8, 9. These words are most emphatic proof that whatever worldly glory may crown great military leaders, war and bloodshed are abhorrent to God. David's wars had been in general just, even necessary, yet they debarred him from the honor of building God's house. War in its nature and principles is always the same; no matter how righteous the cause, desolated homes, financial distress, and a general lowering of public morals follow in its train. Says H. H. Hinman, in the American: "The temperance cause was put back more than twenty years by our late civil war. Lotteries and gambling crept not only into civil society, but into the churches. Murders and suicides have been more frequent, and although recovering we have not yet regained the ground we have lost." God's command, "Thou shalt not kill," was intended to be a sacred barrier around every human life not forfeited by crime; but the wars of the French Republic and Empire, counting from 1792 to 1815, destroyed on the battlefield the lives of five and a half millions. To-day the standing armies of Europe, producing nothing but idleness and bad morals, cost the nations five hundred million dollars annually. This money spent towards evangelizing the world would soon bring in the millennial reign of peace and righteousness. "Christians fight not with sword and arquebuse, but with sufferings and with the cross," said Luther. The early Christians believed war to be wrong and sometimes suffered martyrdom for refusing to bear arms. The tenth plank of the American platform brings us back to the principles of the primitive church.

2. Courage is needed in God's work. V. 13. It is dishonoring to God to fear defeat in any work to which he calls us. As the fearful and unbelieving are classed in Revelation with sorcerers, whoremongers murderers, so there is danger that the half-hearted Christian who is afraid to fight liquor and the lodge because, as he says, "they are too strong to be put down," will find himself classed at length with the rumseller and the follower of secret worships.

3. Our debt to former generations. Vs. 14–16. Solomon's work was made much lighter by having the materials for the temple provided for him in such rich abundance; so we can be called to no task for God that is not rendered easier by the labors of saintly men and women who have gone before us. In our work against the lodge especially, we are but entering into the labors of others of a former generation. "In my trouble," reads in the margin, "my poverty." This vast amount of treasure was not the overflow of David's riches, but like the widow's mite was given out of his poverty. So our Puritan forefathers labored and toiled and prayed and bore suffering and privation to give us an open Bible, a Christian Sabbath, and a free government. Not to resist the lodge, the subtle enemy of all three, is to throw away all that they won for us so hardly.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What did Christ say about war? Math. 26: 52. Where else is the same truth taught? Gen. 9: 6; Rev. 13: 10. What chapter shows us something of our debt to the holy men and women who have lived before us? Heb. 11.

OTHER NOTES.

"Then he called for Solomon....and charged him." The earnestness and solemnity of this address creates an impression that it was given a little before the old king's decease. (1) The anxiety of David for the moral and spiritual welfare of his son. David cared first for character, and next for circumstances. He believed that if the heart were right with God, things would of themselves go right with men. (2) The willingness of Solomon to receive such counsels. How different was his spirit from that of Adonijah (1 Kings 1: 5). Though young, high-spirited, of princely rank, and already anointed king, he bows to listen to his aged father. Lessons of reverenee for age and respect to parents are to be drawn from this.—Pulpit Commentary.

"Thou shalt not build an house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood (see Lesson III, 3d Quarter). Not that David sinned in shedding the blood of war, for David's wars were undertaken by God's command, or with his leave, and were attended with his blessing; but partly because David's military employments did for a good while fill his head and hands, and gave him no leisure for temple work; and principally to teach us that the church (whereof the temple was a manifest and illustrious type) should be built by Christ, the Prince of Peace (Isa. 9: 6); and that it should be gathered and built up, not by might or power, or by force of arms, but by God's Spirit (Zech. 4: 6), and by preaching the Gospel of peace.—Pool. The kingdom of God in its essence is a kingdom of peace; and battle, or war, or struggle, are only means for the restoration of peace.—Keil.

Peaceful State of the Kingdom under Solomon. Solomon began his reign under the most favorable circumstanees. Foreign enemies had been conquered by David, and every land from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates did homage to him. At the time of David's death Israel alone numbered about 6,000,000 souls, 1,300,000 "valiant men that drew the sword." The Philistines, formerly an object of special terror to the Israelites, had lost their independence. Neither was there anything more to be feared from the cruel, rapacious Amalekites. The possession of the mountainous district of Idumea, whose inhabitants were famous for their valor, was seed by garrisons. The land of the abites offered great advantages by its h flocks, of which a considerable num- was given as tribute. The warlike mmonites who had pressed the Israelites hard during the period of the Judges, re held in subjection by the circum- nce that the Israelites had possession of e fortress Rabbah in the centre of the d. All the conquered nations were butary, and paid heavy taxes; they re so completely subdued by David, l the military power of the Israelites s in so good a condition, that it was possible for them to think of rebelling. ternally there was a well-ordered consti- ion. But what was the principal ng, true fear of God prevailed through- t the land.—Hengstenberg.

"Only the Lord give thee wisdom and derstanding." Comp. Ps. 72: 1. And the fulfilment of this prayer, see 1 ngs 3: 12; 2 Chron. 1: 12. No work quires more wisdom than the Lord's rk. And only he can give the true sdom. But he giveth that wisdom lib- lly to all who ask him (James 1: 5).— loubet.

"Be strong and of good courage. David dresses Solomon in the very same words a somewhat later period (see chap. 28:). He adopts as exactly fitting the two casions the words of Moses to the Isra- tes (Deut. 31: 6), and to Joshua (Deut. : 7) shortly before his death. Words t very different were addressed to Josh- by God himself shortly after Moses' ath (see Josh. 1: 6, 7). Doing God's rk in God's way we have no need to be couraged. There will be obstacles and emies and trials, but faith and courage d obedience will overcome them all.— ok.

"A hundred thousand talents of gold." talent of gold = $26,280 00.—Schaff. we reckon the talents of silver at 3,000 ekels of silver (each worth $0.5474) cording to the usual Mosaic or sacred lue, and if the gold shekel be sixteen nes that of silver, the gold and silver us gathered by David would amount to 89,500,000, or $4,270,500,000; a sum credibly high for the requirements of rship at that time. On the contrary, if assume with Keil, that the present ekel is not the sacred (Mosaic) but the vil so-called shekel, after the king's ight, and that these royal shekels were ly half so weighty as the others, and so ual in weight and value to the bekah or saic half-shekel (Ex. 38: 26), an as- mption that seems to be corroborated the comparison of 1 Kings 10: 17, th 2 Chron. 9: 16, the sum named is duced by at least a half to about $2,- 0,000,000.—Lange. This inconceiva- sum, however, is obtained by estimat- g the value of the talent by the Jewish ndard. But the Book of Chronicles, which the figures are given, was writ- n after the Babylonish captivity, and it s been thought probable that hence the aldean talent is implied. This would duce the amount to £600,000,000. But the Syrian talent was in the mind of e sacred writer the value would only be 120,000,000.—Geikie.

THE GREAT CONVOCATION. The peo- e nobly answered the king's exhorta- on, and followed his example. They ntributed very largely of gold and sil- r, brass and iron, and precious stones, that the people rejoiced "because with rfect heart they offered willingly to the rd, and David the king also rejoiced ith great joy" (1 Chron. 29: 9). The casion of such a great gathering of the eads of the nation seems to have been ed for a second and more public conse- ation of Solomon as king. Great sac- fices followed, and then a grand corona- on feast, at which the whole assembly, representing the nation, hailed Solo- on as the king of their choice, and he as anointed before them a second time. —Geikie.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } Editors.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1884.

FROM NOW TILL NOVEMBER.

Well, St. John is nominated. Our press did not wait to see what the party would do; but did what it knew they should and would do. When Senator Pomeroy, like a sensible man and patriot, saw St. John standing on our platform, he expressed the wish to retire; the party and its national committee acquiesced, the Monmouth convention has voted, and the American battalion is finely wheeling into line. If we had a year instead of a few weeks to fight, we would elect St. John President of the United States, and send the liquor and lodge fiends howling to their native abyss. But though the time be short, something may be done. When the only Anti-masonic President, John Quincy Adams, was elected in 1824, there were, as now, four candidates. Then they were Clay, Crauford, Adams and Jackson. Mutual hatred in the other three elected Adams, who was a minority President. Now we have Blaine, Cleveland, Butler and St. John. Let us but give St. John enough electoral votes to send the election into the House, and we may have another President who fears God and loves men; who hates darkness, and loves light as did Adams, "The old man eloquent."

What we now have to do is to work, work, and pray to God. Organize St. John and Daniel clubs, wherever "two or three are met together" in Christ's name, which the lodge scouts. Subscribe for and circulate campaign papers. Buy and circulate Nast's cartoons of the national fox. Let there be conventions of women and children whose husbands and fathers are drunkards. Let them march in procession barefooted and in their rags, bearing banners with the inscription, "Father sold our shoes and clothes for liquor." Let an American battalion march as their guard to protect them from insult, with arms reversed and drums muffled: and when the voting day comes, let it be ushered in with prayer. Let every old man, and every young man, and every sick man, who owns a ballot—aye, and the women, too, of Wyoming and Washington, march meekly, yet gladly up to the ballot-box, and in the words of our Halleck, slightly adapted to the occasion,

> "Vote till the last dark lodge expires,
> Vote till the liquor crime retires,
> Vote for our altars and our fires
> God and our native land."

"LIFE OF JAMES W. GRIMES."

This is a book compiled and written by Dr. Wm. Salter, pastor of the First Congregational church, Burlington, Iowa, some eight or ten years ago. It has lately fallen into our hands, and we wish our readers to know of it. It is a large octavo of 400 pages, and is a volume of national interest. It is discrectly compiled, made up almost entirely of letters and speeches of Mr. Grimes himself, written and spoken when the political heavens and earth were shaking and stars were falling from American skies. The Vallandighams were open, undisguised traitors; the Lees drew the swords bought and given them by the American people at West Point, against their National mother's throat; Sumner was striken down by a contemptible Southern Cataline in the middle of his grand Ciceronean sentences; and even Lincoln was suppressing the bugle-calls of Fremont and Phelps to the Southern Othellos, and saving the "Union with slavery if he could."

In that terrible hour every one of Grimes' letters was like a blast from Roderick Dhu to his mountaineers. "When it was reported," he wrote to Fessenden, "that Fremont was suspended, cold chills began to run up and down people's backs; they bit their lips, and said nothing; but refused to enlist!" "The people are all with Fremont" in his call for colored troops. Grimes was enraged that the Hallecks and Butlers of the army were sending back patriot slaves who fled to us with tidings, to work on Southern forts and strengthen rebel forces.

If we should insert all of his letters, which thrill every nerve of an American heart, we should nearly insert the volume. A far inland Senator, he was put in charge of our navy, and his speeches on its material and the achievements of "The Western Flotilla," created the resplendent powers which they describe; and Du Pont, and Foote, and Farragut, took lessons, and borrowed fire from a plainly dressed civilian who lived on the upper Mississippi. And when the Great Rebellion grows blue and dim with distance, American orators and statesmen will turn to these memoirs of Senator Grimes for material to thrill the memory, instruct the mind, and fire the patriotism of American youth.

Mr. Grimes, though not a church member, was a constant worshiper of God. He was driven from "orthodoxy" by the slavery which orthodoxy shattered. But when fifteen years old, he declares, in a letter to his parents, his conversion to Christ, and he never went back on that conversion; and there is inimitable beauty in his Scripture allusion to the gentle and noble woman, his mentor and his inspiration through the war, when speaking mournfully of the defection of many: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

College Springs, Iowa, }
Tuesday, Sept. 22, 1884. }

Dear Cynosure:—I spoke on Sabbath morning in the Wesleyan church; in the evening to the large U. P. church full, and last night we had the Congregational church full for a political meeting. A fine enthusiasm filled the crowd. Dr. Johnston followed me in a brief, but clear and forcible speech, declaring his farewell to Blaine, and his purpose to vote for St. John and Daniel. The skies threatened a general storm of wind and rain; and, as this village had a cyclone a few weeks ago which tore out one end of the college building and twisted off large tree-trunks, the bulk of the crowd went home after the speaking closed, to see that things did not blow away. Yet a goodly number staid, and formed a St. John and Daniel club of 30, which may easily be increased to two or three hundred. There were five or six hundred out on Sabbath evening. Some old men came six miles to hear a single discourse against the lodge. Rev. A. W. Hall was made president, Rev. Henry Avery secretary, and a strong executive committee was appointed, also a soliciting committee, and the next meeting appointed the last of this same week.

A delegate was also appointed to attend a meeting at Marshalltown, in Marshall county, Oct. 1st, to revise the American electoral ticket and combine the regular Prohibitionists and Americans together.

Another saint, I see, is gone to heaven.

MRS. MOSES PETTENGILL, late of Peoria, Ill., came out from Vermont to Cincinnatti, a pale and interesting young girl. She was always an Abolitionist yet Kentuckians loved her. She taught in an academy in Brookville, Indiana, the birth-place of St John; married a Christian gentleman and merchant, Mr. Silas Tyner; buried children, and finally her husband. She afterward married the widely known and loved Moses Pettengill of Peoria, Ill., and has now followed her husband to the rest of the blessed. Her son, Blanchard T. Pettengill, remains at the head of their extensive business. He inherits the goodness of both parents and has a young and interesting family of his own.

Mrs. Pettengill was an extraordinary woman of a very superior race. Her grandmother, the niece and adopted daughter of Samuel Adams, the father of the American Revolution, is mentioned in the memoirs of that great man, and has tinged all her descendants with her own great qualities.

Birmingham, Iowa, at Dr. J. N. Norris's, Sept. 26, 1884.—Yours reaches me here, enclosing Rev. Mr. Warrington's article. He, with others, mistakes my relations to Freemasons. I never received one to the church or received the communion from a Mason's hands, so far as my knowledge and belief extends. The first year I came to Illinois (1846) the State Congregational Association, on my motion, voted unanimously to exhort (we could not command) our churches to disfellowship secret societies; a vote which was reaffirmed in different parts of the State for thirty years. All ministers who have received Masons into their churches, and all Masons who have communed in Congregational churches in Illinois, during those years, have done so against the law and testimony of the denomination. Many such there be. But I have not fellowshiped Masons in our churches, or rats in my house, though I knew there were rats in the house. They were there against the rules of the house—clandestinely.

Gov. St. John has said once and again before witnesses, that he stands on every plank of the American platform! I do not doubt his sincerity in the least.

I am expecting to speak here in Birmingham; and a St. John and Daniel ratification meeting is called by printed bills, in Fairfield court house, the home of Senator Wilson, on Monday evening. I expect to go thence to Marshalltown. J. B.

REMEMBER the trial subscribers for the Cynosure at every political meeting. Eight weeks for 25 cents.

MORALS AND POLITICS.

Aside from the conventions of the American party in Chicago and of the Prohibitionists in Pittsburgh, among the most remarkable features of the present campaign are the paper of President Seelye, from which we make a large extract on another page, and the position of the New York Independent. President Seelye has been a careful student of politics from all sides. His election to Congress a few years ago gave him an experience which adds great weight to his opinions, no less than the high position he holds among the most intelligent of American circles. His profound and searching analysis of the work of the two great parties and of the principles of their action will be read with satisfaction by thinking, candid men of all parties. His description of the men Americans do not want, fairly describes the two leading candidates, and the final paragraphs of his article, which we do not print, hold up before the American people examples of lofty patriotism and true statesmanship united with sincere moral and religious convictions. The whole is a powerful argument for the reform parties who have named St. John as their candidate.

Hardly less significant is the position of the Independent, the leading religious journal in the land, whose work in the days of anti-slavery was a power among the churches and in politics. The Independent has its trials this year. It could not support Blaine, and in attempting to carry the Cleveland banner it suffered a sore disappointment. It turns now to St. John and in an editorial September 17th, after stating why it cannot support Blaine, Cleveland or Butler, thus speaks for the candidate of reform:

"Ex-Governor St. John is not the man we would select above all others in the nation for the office of President. But better far, ten thousand times better, it would be to have him as our Chief Magistrate, than James G. Blaine. Gov. St. John is a sound, intelligent, conscientious, patriotic citizen. He is a man who can be trusted, and is the kind of timber now specially wanted in a national ruler. He would fearlessly administer the laws in New York, California, or Utah, and would be a terror to evildoers everywhere. Such a man very likely might not suit the wire-pullers and secret managers of any party, but he would surely "turn the rascals out" of office, and try to put good men in their places. In view of these facts, and other reasons which might be stated, we say plainly that, if the Republican party shall neglect or refuse to withdraw the name of James G. Blaine and substitute another, by all means then let the people organize and work for, and, in November, vote for Ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, for President.

"In the name of all that is pure in the family, just and honest in politics, and of good report among the nations, we call upon good men now and everywhere to do their duty to the country in the fear of God and not of men. The door to success seems to be opening wider and wider daily. God's hand seems to be in it, while the councils of the wicked seem to be coming to naught. If men of principle refuse or neglect now to work, to be consistent, their mouths should be shut and sealed as against all unrighteousness and impurity. But such must not be the case. Let the people now have a chance to work as they feel and to vote as they pray: 'Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.'"

—Elder D. P. Rathbun begins his work as State agent in Iowa during next week. His post office address is Wayne, Henry county, in the south-eastern part of the State.

—Rev. H. A. Day, the Michigan State agent, has taken a charge at Ingham, as appears from the report of the Michigan Wesleyan conference. We have not learned whether he designs resigning the State agency or no.

—Elder Browne spoke at Galesburg on the evening of September 23d. The audience was small because of a storm. At Normal the meetings last week closed well, though small at the beginning. At the close, Elder Browne went to Bracken county, Kentucky, to visit the Cabin Creek church, with which he labored a year, before returning to Berea.

—Secretary Stoddard assisted at the meetings in Normal, Ill., and started for Lawrence, Kansas, Friday morning, to attend the State convention which opens on Monday evening.

—Word from Kansas Monday morning was encouraging. Bro. Starry is improving, and was expected at the State convention at Lawrence, which opened Monday evening. Kansas should be made to ring again with protests against the murdering lodge, until the people who have nobly met and conquered the saloon shall deal its twin evil a death-blow.

—The New Orleans Exposition next December will present an opportunity for tract distribution on a larger scale, which might have been happily improved at hundreds of fairs this fall. The stand in the Centennial Exhibition was worth what it cost, and as much, at least, should be said of New Orleans. Mrs. M. A. Tapley of Columbus, Miss., writes endorsing the plan most heartily.

—The name of the defaulting bank cashier in Monmouth, of whose Masonic escape the Cynosure made notice lately was Hubbard, not Hulbert. He was arrested at Monmouth about the middle of September on a warrant issued July 1.

—The letter from South Africa on another page will be read with interest after its five weeks of travel to reach our shores. Bro. Hazenberg's faith work may appear to some as mixed with credulity; but the other day in the Chicago noon prayer-meeting, Col. George C. Clarke, a cool-headed business man, so long associated with the celebrated Pacific Garden mission, spoke of the continued meetings held in the mission, how souls were being converted day by day, and that the special character of the meetings was that of prayer for the healing of the sick. In many cases faith had prevailed to bring this blessing. Bro. Hazenberg does not neglect to speak as occasion offers against the lodge. His work in this respect is somewhat limited, as among the Dutch farmers in the country Freemasonry has almost no supporters.

—Bro. George Warrington of Birmingham, Iowa, gives an additional fact respecting the murder of David Brownlee at Little York, Ill., which we do not remember of before hearing. A further mutilation of the body beside the throat-cutting was in the cutting off and thrusting the ears into the mouth. The body, when left by the Masonic murderers, was so soon discovered that it was not yet cold.

—Prof. Henry L. Boltwood, formerly of Princeton, now principal of Evanston High school, says in a respectful note that Dr. Bateman of Knox College never said anything to him on the subject of Masonry; but that Prof. Wm. M. Baker of Champaign did advise him to join the Masons, for "they are a power in Illinois." The Cynosure published the statement on the authority of an old and respected Congregational minister.

—Pastor Seguin of the French Mission in this city returned last week from the western part of Illinois, where he spoke several evenings in Polo and Savanna. At Polo the Catholics were so enraged that they followed him to the friend's house who showed him hospitality. Some twenty men accompanied him as a guard, but as they reached the house they were assailed by a volley of eggs. At Savanna there were no riotous demonstrations, but large numbers of Catholics surrounded the church. The windows were thrown open and they had the benefit of the address.

—Mr. Seguin is much encouraged in his work in this city by the recent renunciation of Romanism by an Irish priest named Knox. The organ of this interesting movement, La Trompette Evangelique, is now printed in handsome style at 102 Madison St., Chicago. The subscription remains the same, $1.00 per year, or $1.25 in Chicago. Address P. A. Seguin, 102 Madison St.

The action of Mr. Pomeroy in declining the nomination of the National American party in favor of Mr. St. John, and the action of the national committee of the American party in putting St. John's name at the head of their ticket, appears to give very general satisfaction to our people, as far as we are able to judge. It is enthusing to come in contact with the entbusiasm of our people on the probibition question. If the discussion of the question and the election of a President to represent the issue were left with the Free Metbodist people, we judge it would be as one-sided as a jug-handle.—Free Methodist.

—The completion of the McCormick Hall, in connection with the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the Northwest, is to be celebrated by a dedicatory service on Tuesday evening, Oct. 14. The building is a model one of its kind. Its erection was undertaken by the late Hon. C. H. McCormick, and carried to completion by his estate at a cost of $75,000. The Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, has engaged to be present at the dedication, and will deliver an address on the occasion.

—However we differ in politics or religion, in one thing most right-thinking men are agreed, viz., that there is no work of a benevolent character that pays so well as that which is given for the children. For sixty years the American Sunday-school Union has been systematically gathering the neglected children, who are reached by no other agency, into Sunday-schools, and placing a pure and healthful literature in their hands. The past year has been one of marked success in the operations of this society. One thousand nine hundred and seventy-nine new schools have been formed, containing 8,681 teachers and 71,624 scholars, and besides this, aid has been given in 4,410 instances, where 30,174 teachers were giving instruction to 294,748 scholars. More than 16,000 Bibles and Testaments were given to the destitute, and many more thousand dollars' worth of religious literature distributed to the schools.

CONNECTICUT STATE MEETING.

The Connecticut Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will (D. V.) meet in Mission Hall, Bank Building, Willimantic, Conn., on Tuesday, Oct. 7th, at seven o'clock P. M. An American party convention will be held at the same place on the 8th. A full attendance of the anti-secrecy and temperance reformers is earnestly desired.

EGGS, STONES AND PISTOLS.

STARRY'S LIFE SOUGHT BY A KANSAS MOB LED BY A METHODIST PREACHER AND A SCHOOL-TEACHER.

Americus, Kan., Sept. 22, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—Brother Starry and I were billed for work at Dunlap, Morris county, Kansas, on Friday, Saturday and Sabbath last. The meetings occurred in the Freedmen's Academy, where the Associate Presbyterians are conducting a mission among the colored people. There is a large colony of colored people there from Mississippi and other Southern States. The meeting was gotten up mostly by them, but all were invited and all colors came.

On the first evening the house was filled and more than filled. The lodgemen were very boisterous; so much so that a justice of the peace who was present was appealed to to keep the peace, but he replied that he was not running that meeting. When the eggs began to fly through the window the Masonic justice arose and fled. The degree was finished, but could only be seen.

On the second evening the constable was sought, but could not be found. The crowd gathered around the building larger and fiercer than before. Work on the third degree had scarcely begun when the attack was made. Eggs were thrown and pistols fired, but stones were the weapons that told. They beat down the heavy blackboard which was nailed over the window. This gave them a clear view of Mr. Starry, who was standing just before the window. One stone of nearly half pound weight, aimed with deadly skill, struck him on the cheekbone and fell at his feet. Mr. Starry reeled and sunk to a seat near by. The mob, no doubt seeing all and believing that their work of death was done, stopped the attack and retired. Mr. Starry was taken to an upper room in an unconscious condition. A physician examined and dressed the wound, and anxious friends did all that human hands could do to promote his comfort and his recovery.

No further demonstrations were made by the Masons until just about daybreak, when an ugly looking stranger came to the stairway, inquired for Starry, and when he learned that he was there and doing reasonably well, he said he wished to see him, and began to climb the stairway. When he found that the guards would not allow him to enter be retired as mysteriously as he came.

Threats of the mob on the streets were so loud that Mr. Starry would not leave Dunlap alive, that it was thought best not to remain there over Sabbath night. Mr. Starry, after two nights and a day, is up and around. He is not likely to experience any permanent injury from his wound except a slight scar on his face. His greatest difficulty now is that the soreness makes it impossible to move his jaw and so he is compelled to subsist on liquid food.

It is noticeable that the mob were all white, and they were inspired and directed by the principal of the white public school and by a local Methodist preacher. The colored people time and again exclaimed, "This is worse than the South." "This beats Mississippi," etc.

It remains now to be seen whether Kansas will do better than the South in bringing the offenders to justice.

—Amity College, located in College Springs, Iowa, opened this fall with about 100 students, and with the increased facilities afforded by a new building, containing four fine recitation rooms, and a chapel with seating capacity for about 400 persons. Rev. T. J. Kennedy, D. D., President, Miss Nettie Scott, of Monmouth, Ill., Prof. S. S. Maxwell in the preparatory department, and Prof. W. J. Whiteman in the Conservatory of Music represent the United Presbyterian church in faculty. Rev. Henry Avery, pastor of the Congregational church, and Prof. A. R. Dodd, a graduate of Wheaton, are also of the faculty.

—Mrs. Letitia Faurot, widow of Elder R. Faurot, is still actively connected with the Southern Christian Institute at Edwards, Miss., for which he gave the last years of his life.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The Knights of Malta closed their convocation at Philadelphia Wednesday, and installed Charles McClintock as Most Eminent Grand Commander. Before the breaking out of the war, a secret political society, in favor of secession like the Knights of the Golden Circle, was known as Knigbts of Malta. There is also a Commandery degree in the American Masonic rite of the same name. The latter is always subordinate to the Knight Templar, and it would appear that the above is a new lodge.

—The "Right Worthy Grand Council of Good Samaritans and Daughters of Samaria" held the other day their thirty-sixth National convention at Pittsburgh. The order, with headquarters at Baltimore, is composed of 300 lodges and 10,000 members. This is a colored society.

—There are 250 members of the secret order of "Elks" reported in Chicago. The initials of the order are B. P. O. E. This lodge is supposed to be for the benefit of theatrical performers.

—The woman's department of the National Tribune, a Washington paper devoted to perpetuating the memories of the war, is conducted by Mrs. Sherwood, who is at the head of the female annex to the Grand Army of the Republic, known as the "Woman's Relief Corps."

—The special objects of the Woman's Relief Corps, according to the Inter Ocean, are to aid and assist the Grand Army in caring for the widows and orphans and to perpetuate the memory of the heroic dead; to inculcate lessons of patriotism and love of country, not only among its membership, but among their children. The mothers, wives, daughters, and sisters of the soldiers, sailors and marines of the Union army and all loyal women are eligible to membership. The work is ritualistic and modeled in all its forms after that of the Grand Army. The special work of all subordinate corps is in connection with the posts to which they are auxiliary. Beside this the department and National organizations work for the establishment of a relief fund in aid of army nurses and other loyal workers, friendless and without that recognition they richly deserve from the government for which they have labored.

—The annual convention of the National Council of the Order of United American Mechanics was opened September 23. The membership of the order is 19,337, a gain since last year of 1,533. The National treasurer's report showed receipts for the year of $134,251; disbursements (in benefits and relief money), $61,268. Balance in treasuries of various subordinate councils, $389,234. This is claimed as a purely benevolent and benefit society. But it seems that less than one-half its funds are used to secure the objects advertised, and it is heaping up money like any other insurance company. If a church spent more than half the money it raised in running a cheese factory, what would become of its religion?

—John W. Orr, former publisher of an Odd-fellow journal in New York, has started the Fraternity Magazine, devoted to the interests of the Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and Royal Arcanum.

—The Good Templar Grand Lodge voted $500 to the order in Maine to help carry the constitutional amendment and then sent Finch, its "Grand Templar," to use up the money.

—The newly elected officers of the Good Templar Supreme Grand Lodge are as follows: R. W. G. Templar, John B. Finch, Lincoln, Nebraska; R. W. G. Counsellor, Dr. Oronhyatekha, London, Ontario; R. W. G. Vice-Templar, Mrs. S. A. Leonard, Boston, Mass.; R. W. G. Secretary, D. P. Sagendorph, Charlotte, Mich.; R. W. G. Treasurer, Uriah Copp, Jr., Loda, Ill.; R. W. G. Chaplain, Rev. H. F. Chreitzberg, Sumter, S. C.; R. G. W. M., P. J. Chisholm, Truro, Nova Scotia; R. W. G. D. M., Ella S. Mason, Biddeford, Me.; R. W. G. I. G., Sallie T. Embrie, Marshallton, Pa.; R. W. G. O. G., W. T. Greenwood, Baltimore, Md.; Past R. W. G. T., Geo. B. Katzenstein, Sacramento, Cal.

—The Sons of Temperance yet hold on to life, though in so many quarters they are dead that they have been thought so everywhere. But an International Division was held September 9-11, in Halifax. The delegates numbered 125, and the reports showed a net increase of membership for 1883 of 10,707, and for the past three years of 19,152. The following are the officers-elect. M. W. P., B. F. Dennison, Pennsylvania; M. W. A., Chas. A. Everett, New Brunswick; M. W. S., Rev. R. A. Temple, Nova Scotia; M. W. T., Wm. A. Duff, Pennsylvania; M. W. Chaplain, Rev. C. H. Mead, New York; M. W. Conductor, Mrs. G. L. Sanford, Connecticut; M. W. S., J. S. Bliss, Manitoba. The next meeting will be held at Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, July 8, 1885.

—The National Freemason on the Gipsies as a secret society: "The Freemasons have a language, words, and signs peculiar to themselves: so have the Gipsies. A Freemason has in every country a friend, and in every climate a home, secured to him by the mystic influence of that worldwide association to which he belongs; similar are the privileges of the Gipsy. Gipsyism, we fear, has been a source of constant trouble and inconvenience to European nations. The interest, therefore, which as Masons we may evince in the Gipsies arises principally, we may say wholly, from the fact of their being a secret society, and also from the fact that many of them are enrolled in our lodges. There are in the United Kingdom a vast multitude of mixed Gipsies, differing very little in outward appearance, manners, and customs from ordinary Britons; but in heart thorough Gipsies, as carefully and jealously guarding their language and secrets, as we do the secrets of the Masonic order."

"WHO SHALL ROLL THE STONE AWAY?"

"And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away." Mark 16: 3, 4.

What poor weeping ones were saying,
Eighteen hundred years ago,
We, the same weak faith betraying,
Say in our sad hours of woe;
Looking at some trouble lying
In the dark and dread unknown,
We too often, ask with sighing,
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

Thus with care our spirits crushing,
When they might from care be free,
And in joyous song outgushing,
Rise, with rapture, Lord, to thee—
For before the way was ended,
Oft we've had with joy to own,
Angels have from heaven descended,
And have rolled away the stone.

Many a storm cloud sweeping o'er us,
Never pours on us its rain;
Many a grief we see before us,
Never comes to cause us pain;
Oft times in the feared to-morrow,
Sunshine comes—the cloud has flown—
Ask not then in foolish sorrow,
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

Burden not thy soul with sadness,
Make a wiser, better choice;
Drink the wine of life with gladness—
God doth bid thy heart rejoice,
In to-day's bright sunshine basking,
Leave to-morrow's fears alone;
Spoil not present joys by asking,
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

ALARMING INSANITY!

BY REV. GEO. THOMPSON.

Enlarge the lunatic asylums! Where?

In every city and town; and through the country generally.

The lunatics are seen, and met on the street. They appear in the churches, and all public places of resort. They are east and west and north and south, in a large majority of families!

"Why, this is strange, I have not seen them." Then you are either blind, or blinded, or crazy yourself. One cannot step abroad without seeing the evidences of this wide-spread hallucination.

It is more especially manifested in the female portion of the people, though often seen in many of the other sex.

The signs of this mania appear largely in the disheveled hair, arranged in fantastic, frightful forms, both unnatural and heathenish, (so that an intelligent lady lately said, "they look like heathen idols,") giving them a wild aspect, not very unlike the appearance of heathen African women in various parts, altogether very disgusting.

A Chicago lady with her frizzly "bangs" asked me, "Do not the Africans have curly hair?" I said, "Much like yours." Others are in imitation of our wild Indians, quite covering the noble forehead, as those heathens do. They seem to make themselves as far unlike nature as possible, as if they were ashamed of their Maker's arrangements for them. Shame on our women, old and young, who thus distort nature, and try to make themselves look ridiculous.

A thoughtful young man said to some "banged" young ladies, "If God had made you thus you would feel very badly about it." Yes, if women were as deformed as they make themselves there would be much mourning and great mortification.

And the time spent in this frizzling, and curling, and arranging the hair to attract attention, and "hunt souls," is an immense robbery of God, who will call us to an account for the improvement of our moments.

Another sign of the mania is seen in the headdress, which is not for comfort and health; but to attract notice! Hence the multiplicity of artificial flowers, birds' wings and tails, stuffed birds, and ostrich feathers; and a profuse display of ribbons, etc.

Why all this expense and display? Said one, lately (and it is ofter said), "There is no harm in it, if the person is not proud of them." I answer, "The sign over the door indicates what is within. The sign would not be hung out, if the goods were not kept inside."

Says another, "I don't think of these things." You do, or you would not be at so much trouble and expense. Here is a common mark of insanity. The insane rarely admit their insanity.

This insanity is seen again in the "rag-tag and bobtail" style of their dresses, so generally worn. O! how sickening, and disgusting to behold them! It is such an unmistakable evidence of the dethronement of reason, or the deadness, or disregard of conscience; and of contempt for the heavenly directory, given for our guidance on earth!

They take pride in proclaiming their folly! And vie with each other in wasting time, and money and thoughts and in making themselves as ludicrous as possible; and then insanely expect that men will admire and worship such monstrosities!

Their every look, their walk, and whole demeanor plainly declare the vanity of mind, which says, "Now look at me. Don't you think I am pretty? Who can surpass this? Take care, you poor creature, don't come too near me!" O! Such bags of wind! How pitiable they are! An Indian boy said they were "like the yellow butterflies around a mud-puddle. They seemed to be something, but when you caught one, there was nothing of it."

Would that they could see themselves as others see them; but especially as God sees them.

"Would you have them despise all beauty?" Not at all. But prefer what the Bible calls beauty. "The ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which, in the sight of God is of great price." (See 1 Tim., 2: 9, 10.)

But these vain butterflies seem to think the more wrinkles and plaits and tucks, and bags, and camel humps, and furbelows, and curious shapes they can get on their dresses, the more worthy they are of honor, and the higher their claims to respect! But the feeling of the thoughtful and sensible is, "What a pity! Such vanity and pride, rendering them obnoxious to God, and worthy to be shut out of society! How utterly outrageous that teachers and leaders of youth should set such an example!"

Such a course in any, much less in persons of influence, is neither rational, sensible, nor Christian; but is a plain mark of insanity not excusable, and unavoidable, but willful. And if they will not heed the instructions of the Bible, and the responsibilities resting upon them at large, should they not be sent to an asylum, where they may be led to reflect on their folly, and turn from the desire and effort to "be conformed to the world," to being "transformed by the renewing of the mind?"

Whence come these ridiculous fashions? From the vain, low and carnal, and those who "have no fear of God before their eyes." Shall Christians, and respectable people follow such leaders?

"But many of our best church members conform to these fashions." All the more shame! They dishonor Christ, and disgrace the cause they profess to love; and are a stumbling block in the way of the wicked, who well know they act very inconsistently-contrary to their profession, and to the Bible.

The outward evidence that they are Christians is all against them, inasmuch as they follow the world, instead of Christ; and are governed by fashion plates and magazines, and not by the Bible. They say, "Lord, Lord, and do not the things that he says."

While they are commanded to be "patterns of good works," "an example" worthy of imitation, they follow the lead of the ungodly and foolish." "These things ought not so to be."

"WHO'LL WAKE ME?"

A little girl in San Francisco was recently run over by a street car. When removed, it was found that one of her limbs was nearly severed from the body, besides other serious injuries. She was carried to the hospital, and the disjointed member taken off. The little girl bore the operation remarkably well. As there appeared to be little chance for her recovery, the surgeons concluded to let the other limb, also badly damaged, remain.

The mother was with the child immediately, and did for her all that a mother could do. The little one was under the influence of anodynes most of the time, and of course slept a great deal. The day following the accident as she was dropping off, she exclaimed, "I'm going to sleep." Then noticing the temporary absence of her mother, she added, "but who'll wake me?" It turned out to be her last sleep—a sleep that will finally lock in its embrace all the living.

The query of this child was a natural one. On a broad sense, it is the one great question of life. Upon the return of the dawn, we go about our daily duties and pleasures until it is time to retire. We shut our eyes to sleep with no anxiety but what they will open when we have had the needed rest. This is confidence—we have tried the experiment, and it has never failed; therefore we believe when resigning ourselves to sleep that we shall wake again. But at the close of life's fitful fever, when we fear that the sleep of death may be stealing over us, we want to know whether we shall ever awake, who it is that shall wake us, and where we will be, and what will be our condition when we awake. Thousands have reached that point in their history, when they would give all the world, if they had it to give, to have these queries satisfactorily answered.

"Who'll wake me?" We can descend into the dark and cold ground with resignation, if we are assured that some one will wake us. Everybody has a trace of this faith—life would be intolerable if we were not permitted to enter it. Better that the belief should be a delusion, than that it should not exist. It helps to soften many of the rugged places of this life to believe that a better one awaits us. It eases many a pain, dries many a tear, lightens many a burden, illumines many a dark passage, to know that there is a world where there are no pains, "or tears," or burdens. Take away that belief, and unselfish motives and heroic deeds vanish. We are worse than the beasts that perish. For my part, I must believe that the fabric of human life was constructed for some nobler end than can be possibly wrought out in the brief period of existence between the cradle and the grave. Any other view implies a great waste of wisdom, energy, and material. The little girl's query has been answered: We shall all wake from our last sleep, "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." How will you awake?—Bene-Berak.

A RECENT EXPERIENCE OF HEALING.

The venerable Asa Mahan, now living in England, relates that last summer and autumn his labors were great, and finally his health broke down. He had a a bronchial affection, excessive pains in the jaws, skull and breast bones, and a severe cough. Through prayer he had intermittent and partial relief until, he says: "At length, while in prayer, I found myself in a conscious face-to-face communication with my Saviour, and I then addressed to him the following utterances as nearly as I can now repeat them: 'My dear Saviour, when thou wast on earth, had one of thy disciples been immediately before thee, suffering as I am suffering, and from the same causes, thou certainly wouldst have spoken the healing word, or put forth the healing touch, and made him perfectly whole.

Now, as a personal presence, thou art nearer to me than thou then wast to thy disciples, and are as able to heal me as thou wast to heal any that came to thee for healing. Wilt thou permit thine aged servant to lie here under thine eye, suffering as he is suffering, and not let virtue come out of thee for his healing?'"

"The moment I had done speaking, in an instant my cough utterly ceased, and all bronchial affections, together with the pains referred to, as suddenly and totally disappeared. I was made whole, and was conscious of the fact. After expressing my gratitude of the wonderful deliverance received, I fell into a peaceful sleep, which was undisturbed by cough, or pain, or movement in the throat, till I awoke with the sense of ineffable sweetness, infinitude, and beauty of the Lord, such as I had seldom enjoyed in my life before. The inner and outer man had alike been renewed. Since that ever-to-be-remembered moment I have been free from my old complaints, cough and bronchitis, as I have not been, for the same period and season of the year, for more than thirty years past. 'By the grace of God I am what I am.'"

—The mission of the Methodist Episcopal church, in Mexico, embraces the territory lying around the city of Mexico, which is the central station. Radii lead to circuits in the States of Puebla, Queretaro, Guanajuato, and Hidalgo. Each circuit embraces a number of stations. Pachuca, for example, has nine, and in the Mexico City circuit there are five. The work of the past year resulted in a net increase of 108 members and probationers, the whole number being 935, with 3,296 adherents. The mission is manned by twenty-three missionaries from the parent and Woman's societies, and there are forty-six native preachers, helpers and teachers. The property valuation reaches $67,700 for churches, and $58,300 for parsonages, besides $21,935 for hospital and other property. The reports from the various circuits indicate prosperity and promise. Superintendent Butler mentions as a difficulty and hindrance the regulation of marriage relations. Probationers who may be faithful in other respects, require time and firm treatment to get right in this. The Rev. A. W. Greenman, of the Queretaro circuit, reports an attack on the mission premises by a mob, who had been roused by a pastoral of the Catholic bishop. The authorities gave prompt protection. In Leon, church-members have been insulted, threatened, and persecuted, but most of them held out nobly.

—A congregation of Finnish Lutherans has been organized at Burton, Geauga county, Ohio. Some seventy-five Finlanders reside at this place. A school-house will be purchased as a house of worship. In Ashtabula, Ohio, an accession of fifty new members has recently been made to the Finnish congregation, and a new church is to be erected without delay.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

ANYWHERE.

Any little corner, Lord,
In Thy vineyard wide,
Where thou bid'st me work for Thee,
There would I abide;
Miracle of saving grace
That thou givest me a place
Anywhere.

Where we pitch our nightly tent,
Surely matters not;
If the day for Thee is spent,
Blessed is the spot;
Quickly, we the tent may fold;
Cheerful, march through storm and cold
With Thy care.

All along the wilderness,
Let us keep our sight
On the moving pillar fixed,
Constant day and night;
Then the heart will make its home,
Willing, led by Thee to roam,
Anywhere.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE SCAPE-GOAT. Read Lev. 16.

Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat. Lev. 16: 21.

1. Why did Aaron sprinkle the blood of the first goat on the mercy-seat? Heb. 10: 19–22.
2. Why did Aaron lay his hands on the head of the scape-goat? Isa. 53: 6; 2 Cor. 5: 21; 1 John 1: 9.
3. What did the sending away of the goat signify? John 1: 29; Ps. 103 : 12; Jer. 50: 20.
4. Why did the High Priest enter into the most holy place on the day of atonement? Heb. 9: 7–12, 24–28.—Notes for Bible Study.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

WILLIAM CAREY.

William Carey was the most noted missionary in the world. His patience, endurance and self-sacrifice were remarkable. In him we see what a man can do who is wholly devoted to God's work.

He was born in Northamptonshire, England, in 1761. William's father had a small stock of learning, and imparted it to his son, and bound him out to be a shoemaker. One trait marked the boy—he was always determined. He was quite observing, and noticed closely everything that came in sight.

He found in the shoemaker's shop an old commentary on the New Testament, with numerous Greek words in it. He had no Greek alphabet, but he copied the letters, and when he found time, went to a weaver, who knew some Greek, and learned the names of the letters. He served two years' apprenticeship, and then worked for Mr. Old, who attended the congregation of the commentator Scott. Carey derived much benefit from the learned preacher.

As soon as he became a Christian, he began to teach others in his humble way. After a time he was asked to take charge of a small congregation at Moulton. For his services he received about fifty-five dollars a year; but he still worked at his trade. While at Moulton he read and learned of the degraded condition of the heathen. He at once concluded to be a missionary.

Wilberforee, in the House of Commons, said of this: 'A sublimer thought can not be conceived, than when a poor cobbler formed the resolution to give the millions of India the Bible in their own language."

Carey had absolutely no means, but he loved and confided in God, and did the very best he could. He constantly thought of the heathen. He made a map of the globe, hung it on the wall in his workshop, and looked at it often. All the information he could get was marked on the map. He did not stop at thinking of a mission, but he worked to accomplish it. There was a ministers' meeting at Northampton, and Mr. Ryland asked for a subject for Conference. Carey suggested, "The duty of Christians to spread the knowledge of the gospel among the heathen nations." Every one was astonished. Mr. Ryland said, "Young man, sit down; when God pleases to convert the heathen, he will do it without your aid or mine."

But Carey was not discouraged. He had his motto, 'Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God." He neglected no opportunity to introduce the subject of missions. He wrote a pamphlet, but was unable to publish it. His friends recommended him to revise it. A friend promised ten pounds to pay for printing. While he was rewriting the work he almost starved. At last it was published, and thus the inauguration of Protestant missions was made.

At this time he moved to Leicester and found a faithful friend in the person of Mr. Robison, rector of St. Mary's. At last, by his earnest entreaty, a missionary meeting was held at Kensington in 1792. The sum collected for mission work was thirteen pounds, two shillings and sixpence. Carey offered to go anywhere at the consent of the society. It was decided to try Bengal. Then there was a coldness and opposition towards the undertaking. Mr. Thomas, a surgeon, was there teaching the heathen.

Mrs. Carey was not imbued with the same spirit as her husband. She refused to go, and Mr. Carey had either to abandon the mission or leave his wife. This was a trying position. He decided to go. He wrote his wife from the Isle of Wight, "If I had the world I would freely give it to have you and my dear children with me, but the sense of duty is so strong as to overpower all other considerations."

A new trouble now arose. The captain of the vessel on which he was to sail was informed that he could take no person without the permission of the East India Company. Mr. Carey had not asked for license and had to delay. He was not yet daunted. He went to London, leaving his luggage at Portsmouth. He soon had opportunity to go on a Danish vessel. On returning home Mrs. Carey agreed to go with him. Thus God had accepted his willingness to part with them. In a few days they embarked for Calcutta. As Carey came near the scenes of his labors, while in the Bay of Bengal, he wrote:

"Africa is but a little way from England, Madagascar but a little farther. South America and all the numerous and large islands in the India and China seas will not, I hope, be passed over. A large field opens on every side. Oh, that many laborers may be sent into the vineyard of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that the Gentiles may come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in him."

They safely landed in India. The ground was unbroken and the obstacles were many. Mr. Thomas was extravagant, and the slender sum of money soon disappeared. They were in a strange land, far from home and with no means. The misery they endured for the next few months can not be described. Under such trying circumstances Mr. Carey set to work to translate the New Testament into Bengalee.

Seven long years passed away. In this time he had finished his translation, and by the aid, at first, of an interpreter, he preached the gospel. Yet not a single soul had confessed Christ; he had sown faithfully, but the seed had not sprung up.

After a while, Krishnu, a carpenter, yielded to the gospel. Strange coincidence. A carpenter the first fruits of the first modern mission! The joy was so great when Krishnu was baptized that Mr. Thomas suffered from mental excitement. How they had waited and toiled! How they had sown and suffered! If our missions at the present day do not reap large numbers, we need not be discouraged. Let us be faithful in sustaining the preached word, and God will send the blessing by-and-by.

In a year four or five more were converted, and the next year Mr. Carey had the joy of using his printed New Testament. Thus his efforts were crowned with success; thus he suffered, and thus through suffering was he made strong and did he gain the victory.

God has always blessed faithfulness. The result of Carey's labors can not be estimated. From the day he began to agitate the question, missions have grown rapidly, and now fields are opening up. They are white to harvest.

Let us send the glad tidings. Let us do what we can, and God will give success. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."—Methodist Recorder.

THE MOSQUITO.

You have all, no doubt, at times exercised a little strategy with the mosquito, and when the little torment was fairly settled, made a dextrous move of the hand, and with a slap exclaimed, "I've got him this time!" No such thing; you never got him in your life, but probably you have often succeeded in crushing her, for the male mosquito is a considerate gentleman. In lieu of the piereer of the female he is decorated with a beautiful plume, and has such a love of home that he seldom sallies forth from the swamp where he was born, but contents himself with vegetable rather than animal juices. (I do not wish to make any reflections, but in the insect world it is always the females which sting!)

Those who have traveled in summer on the lower Mississippi, or in the North-west, have experienced the torment which these frail flies can inflict; at times they drive everyone from the boat, and trains can sometimes only be run with comfort on the Northern Pacific by keeping a smudge in the baggage car, and the doors of all the coaches open to the fumes. The bravest man on the fleetest horse dare not cross some of the more rank and dank prairies of northern Minnesota in June. It is well known that Father De Smet once nearly died from mosquito bites, his flesh being so swollen around the arms and legs that it literally burst. Mosquitoes have caused the route of armies and the desertion of cities, and I would connsel all who desire to learn how the hum of an insignificant gnat may inspire more terror than the roar of the lion to consult Kirby and Spence's history of the former.

There are many species of the mosquito, all differing somewhat in habit and season of appearance, and doubtless also in mode of development, which, in fact, has been studied in but few. They occur everywhere, in the torrid or the arctic zone, and are nowhere more numerous or tormenting than in Lapland. Both the fly and the mosquito are great scavengers in infancy, the one purifying the air we breathe, the other the water we drink. They perform, in this way, an indirect service to man which few, perhaps, appreciate, and which somewhat atones for their bad habits in maturity.—Lecture by Prof. C. V. Riley.

TEMPERANCE.

"TATE, AGOIN' BY."

"Why, here's Tate!" observed old Farwell from the tavern platform. His remark served a double purpose—it accosted Tate Sykes, and also let the other frequenters know of his approach. He added, with the peculiar inflection of maudlin sympathy, "How do you find yourself, after yesterday?"

"Middlin' well," said Tate, gravely, but walking on.

"Why, look a-here, ye ain't agoin' by, be ye? Why, boys, here's Tate agoin' by!"

Farwell's tone had changed from sentiment to intense astonishment, as if it couldn't be that Tate was passing their mutual haunt. Tate Sykes, whose nostrils loved the scent of liquor that floated through the open door, and who always turned in for one glass. It oftener became more.

But two days before, a sad-eyed, tattered woman burst in upon their revels, her face full of agony.

"Where's my man? Where's Tate Sykes?" Then imperatively, "Come home, Tate. Bess wants you. She's dying."

Tate had some manhood left, for he set his glass down with a groan, and followed his wife out, bare-headed, in an unwonted stillness.

That was the last they saw of Tate at the tavern until then, and he was going by. Farwell felt that it was unnatural. What had gone wrong? Farwell scratched his slightly muddled head for the clew, then slapped his knee emphatically when he thought he had found it.

"Hold on, Tate. Mebbe you thought we'd ought to been there, us boys, bein' as we was old friends?"

Tate stopped, but did not reply. His hands were clenched, and a great struggle was written on his face. He looked like one ready for conflict, and he was; not, however, with the poor deluded men he had drank with, but with the powers of darkness. Farwell broke the awkward silence.

"We felt for ye, Tate. If we'd had the money we'd done the handsome thing with flowers and sich. I wouldn't begrudged comin' down with a hack'n span o' horses; fact, Tate; but I hadn't the needful; you know that, old boy. There ain't a man in the county I'd help out sooner, but I couldn't. Ye hadn't orter lay it up agin us, Tate."

"Boys," said Tate hoarsely, with frequent pauses to conquer emotion, "I didn't—expect ye—to folly my little gal—to—to the grave; and yer posies would—a been—too late. Ye see, it had been—all thorns for her—alluz—them her father planted."

A deep sob swelled his brawny chest. He sank upon the low platform, leaned his head against a decaying pillar, and wept like a child.

The "boys" were silent. Old Farwell laid his pipe aside and rose with the majesty of a purpose.

"There, there, Tate, don't ye take on so, man. She's gone, an' parting's hard; but we can't call her back. Come in and have a drop o' something. It'll tone ye up. Come, all, I'll stand treat."

They started eagerly toward the bar-room, except Tate. There was fierce longing in his bloodshot eyes, and every breath he drew of the impregnated air increased his thirst; but, to the surprise of all, Tate Sykes declined the drink, even implored Farwell not to urge him.

Farwell paused, angrily; the faces of the others darkened also. Their murmurs would have been less gentle, only they remembered that Tate's child was dead, and most of these men, alas! were fathers, too. They meant some time to turn about, but their good resolutions decayed with the old tavern. By and by they would drop into drunkard's graves, their souls going—where?

"Don't never ask me to drink!" cried Tate, "for I can't! Don't ever call me in here again, for if I do, I'll shoot myself. I wouldn't be fit to live if I forgot the vows I made by that little grave. Sit down a bit; I'll tell ye how I came to this."

Then Tate began in a strange, hoarse voice:

"Ye all know why Meg come after me that night. She said Bess was dyin'. I thought she bad—left us—when I got home, she was so white and still. 'She wanted you, Tate,' says Meg. 'She couldn't be easy 'th out ye. She telled me to go fetch father; she'd wait. Oh, Tate, how I ran, and now it's too late! She's gone; without her dying wish!' Meg cried softly, whisperin' this bit by bit, betwixt the tears. I can't tell ye what I felt, boys, settin' there beside my leetle gal. There won't nothing comfortable for such as she, in that poor room. It goes without sayin' there couldn't be, and me spendin' what I did here.

"Well, boys, whilst I was lookin' at her, all of a sudden the color flashed into her sweet face, and them dear" (Tate's voice shook) "darling eyes flied open—but not to see me, boys; they looked straight for'ard, beyant and up'ards, and says she, startled like, 'I can't go alone—it's dark—go part way with me, father dear!'"

Tate groaned as he had the night he was summoned from the bar-room. When he could speak, he said:

"Them was her last words. She give a great sigh, and left us. There wan't no backin' out for her, boys, even if her father couldn't go part way with cheerin' words an' Scriptur'. She had to go alone, in the dark, my poor leetle gal. It come over me then, what I was and what I might a ben. There's one other left me; please God. I'll go part o' the way with her!"

Tate had arisen. He stood erect as he uttered his vow, in a clear, distinct voice that reached even the man behind the bar. The fierce appetite had gone from Tate's eyes, they glowed with his new-born purpose. None of his old comrades detained him as he turned and left the old tavern forever.—New York Observer.

Sulphur for Stock.—An English corspondent puts about two ounces of sul-hurous acid into a quart bottle of ater, and gives a tablespoonful of this lution three times per day to cattle sufring with foot and mouth disease. In ddition to this, he burns a little sulphur ree times a day in the stable in which e animal is kept. He moistens the feet so with the above solution with a onge. One must be careful not to use lphuric for sulphurous acid, as the for-er would be hurtful in this case instead curative. Burning sulphur in the ables of healthy cattle once or twice a eek, he thinks, would ward off disease.
I have long been in the habit of giving heaping tablespoonful of sulphur for is purpose to my horses and cows once week in a mess of meal; also to large vine; to lambs and pigs less, grading ac-ording to size and age. For poultry, nce a week I mix sulphur with their udding, at the rate of a heaping table-oonful of the former to a gallon of the tter. This keeps them free from lice, nless they are much exposed to these arasites on their roosts or otherwise.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

Or the Power of the Secret Empire. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. Flago, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

This is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"Lucille Vernon" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

It belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

HOME HINTS.

Water Proof Cloth.—If we immerse a tissue in a solution composed of gelatine 5 parts, soap 5 parts, alum 7 parts, water 170 parts, we shall find, upon lifting and thoroughly drying the cloth, that we have communicated to the surface of each particular filament of which the stuff is composed the property of exercising on water a repulsive force. Consequently, if upon the stuff water be thrown, it will not penetrate between threads; it will be repelled; it will run over without passing through. The texture of the stuff has not been changed by the immersion in the aluminous bath, and gases and vapor can traverse it as before.

To Keep Grates Bright.—To preserve bright grates or firesides from rust, make a strong paste of lime and water, and with a fine brush smear it as thickly as possible all over the polished surface requiring preservation. By this simple means all the grates and fire-irons in an empty house may be kept for months free from harm without further care or attention.

Hot Water for Dyspepsia.—Says the Hartford Courant: A gentleman who is in business in this city has cured himself of a chronic and ugly form of dyspepsia in a very simple way. He was given up to die, but he finally abandoned alike the doctors and the drugs, and resorted to a method of treatment which most doctors and most persons would laugh at as "an old woman's remedy." It was simply the swallowing of a teacupful of hot water before breakfast every morning. He took the water from the cook's teakettle, and so hot that he could only take it by the spoonful. For about three weeks this morning dose was repeated; the dyspepsia decreasing all the while. At the end of that time he could eat, he says, any breakfast or dinner that any well person could eat—had gained in weight, and has ever since been hearty and well. His weight is now between thirty and forty pounds greater than it was during the dyspepsia suffering, and for several years he has had no trouble with his stomach—unless it was some temporary inconvenience due to a late supper or dining out, and in such a case a single trial of his ante-breakfast remedy was sure to set all things right. He obtained this idea from a German doctor, and in turn recommended it to others, and in every case, according to this gentleman's account, a cure was effected.

TIGHT LACING.

The circumference of the waist of a woman of medium height and dimensions measures, on an average, when not cramped and distorted, about thirty inches; but in those who have adopted tight-lacing it may measure no more than twenty inches, and sometimes even much less. Now what becomes, in those latter cases, of the several organs contained within the chest and abdomen? They are, of course, compressed, and pushed, and squeezed out of their natural shapes, and caused to protrude in places where they have no business, because never meant to occupy such places. There are few natural diseases, indeed, which so thoroughly displace and jam and wedge together so great a number of the internal organs, and so generally disseminate among them incapacity for the discharge of their multifarious duties, as does this positively sinful practice of tight-lacing. Shortness of breath, congestion, and even inflammation of the lungs, congestion of the liver, of the kidneys, etc., palpitation and subsequent diseases of the heart; faintings, bronchitis, indigestion, jaundice, obstruction of the bowels, rupture, prolapsus, etc., are only a few of the many evils arising from the customs which are so emphatically condemning—a list, one would think, quite formidable enough to cause the most thoughtless and the most fashion-beridden subject to immediately renounce all allegiance to a practice so fraught with mischief; and one, moreover, which has not a single redeeming point, even in the occasionally foolish eyes of the sterner sex, in its favor.—Good Words.

IN BRIEF.

THE KRUPP FOUNDRY AT ESSEN.

Some interesting figures with regard to he growth of the establishment belonging to Herr Krupp at Essen have just been published. In 1860 the Essen foundry had only 1,764 workmen, but that number had risen to 7,084 ten years later, and it is now upward of 20,000. Counting the women and children, Herr Krupp's establishment gives employment to 65,381 persons, of whom 29,000 live in houses belonging to their employer. The foundry is divided into eight sections, and there are 11 blast furnaces, 542 other furnaces, 439 steam boilers, 9 steam hammers, and 450 steam engines representing 185,000 horse power. At Essen alone, to say nothing of the branch establishments, there are nearly 50 miles of rails, 28 locomotives, 883 trucks, 69 horses, 191 wagons, 40 miles of telegraph wires, 35 telegraph stations, and 55 Morse instruments.

COST OF BREAD IN BOSTON AND NEW YORK.

Mr. Atkinson shows us that the farmer in Iowa receives $405 for the wheat to make 100 barrels of flour, and that the railroad then receives $117.50 for taking 450 bushels of wheat from Iowa to Chicago, and 100 barrels of flour from Chicago to Boston. Upon this the railways make about $35 profit. It costs $50 to mill the flour, $45 for barrels, $30 for the merchant's commission and the cartage in Boston, $410 for the labor of making 400 barrels of flour into bread, for fuel with which to bake it, yeast, salt, etc., costing only $1,057.50 from the farmer in to the baker's counter for 100 barrels of flour made into bread, 270 to 290 pounds per barrel, or about 3½ cents per pound, while the people of Boston pay $1,620 or about six cents per pound, against 3½ cents in New York.

EXTENT AND RESOURCES OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Those who are looking for statistics may find some rather striking figures in the address recently delivered by Sir Richard Temple on "Economic Science and Statistics" before the British Association at Montreal. On this authority it appears that the area of the British Empire is eight and a half million square miles. Including countries politically under its control, such as Egypt, Zululand, and Afghanistan, the total amounts to ten million square miles, or one-fifth of the habitable globe. One-quarter of this area has been topographically surveyed. The total coast line is 28,500 miles, with forty-eight large harbors. Only one-fifth of the area is cultivated or occupied. There is room enough in Canada and Australia to support a population of 200,000,000. The total population of the empire amounts to 315,000,000, of which 39,000,000 are Anglo-Saxons and 188,000,000 are Hindoos. The annual revenue amounts to £203,000,000, of which sum £89,000,000 come from the United Kingdom, $47,000,000 from India, and £40,000,000 from the colonies and dependencies. Only one-fourth of the total revenue is derived from land taxation. Including local taxation the revenue is £264,000,000, and amounts to £1 5s. 4d. per head per annum. The number of men trained to arms amounts to 850,000, about 700,000 of these being of the fair or dominant race. The defensive armaments by sea and land cost £41,000,000 annually, which is less than that shown by any great State in the world except the United States. There are 560,000 policemen in the empire, one to every 571 inhabitants and to every sixteen square miles. There are 246 war vessels and 30,000 merchant ships manned by 270,000 sailors. The factory steam power in the world is represented by 7,500,000 horse power; of that total 2,250,000, or about 30 per cent., is British. If the main elements of national industry be taken together—namely, commerce, manufactures, mining, agriculture, carrying trade, and banking—the total £2,000,000,000 and upward annually is about the same for the United Kingdom and the United States. But the United States are advancing the fastest, and are already passing ahead. There are 675,000 persons convicted annually of crime in the empire, of which number more than nineteen-twentieths pertain to India. The number of paupers in the United Kingdom under relief amounts to 1,000,000, or rather less than one-thirtieth of the population, and the cost of their maintenance is £10,000,000 sterling annually.

In regard to the postoffice, the letters posted annually in the world are 5,200,000,000; of this total 1,500,000,000, or 34 per cent., are in the British empire. Respecting education, there are 5,250,000 pupils at schools in the United Kingdom, 860,000 in Canada, 611,000 in Australia, and 2,200,000 in India, making a total of 8,921,000 pupils in the British Empire.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the Evening Journal, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in Batavia, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

—President Arthur Thursday appointed the Hon. Walter Q. Gresham of Indiana to the vacant Secretaryship of the Treasury.

—Dr. D. E. Salmon, of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, returned from a visit to Kentucky and Ohio, where he had condemned and slaughtered several infected animals. The Doctor has no doubt of the existence of the disease in the West, but believes that it is now under proper control.

—The War Department received information that Oklahoma Payne, who has just been released by the United States Court at Fort Smith, Ark., is preparing for another raid into Indian Territory. General Sheridan has directed General Hatch, who is in command, to prevent Payne from entering the Territory, but if he can not do that to follow him in and bring him out.

—The Board of Managers decided at St. Louis Friday to erect the branch Soldier's Home at Leavenworth, Kan., that city agreeing to give 640 acres of land and $50,000 dollars to help its construction.

—An accident to the engine of a Chicago and Alton passenger train compelled it to stop early Tuesday morning between Paducah Junction and Cayuga, Ill., and a man was sent back to flag a freight following after, but did not go far enough. The freight crashed into the stationary passenger, throwing two sleepers off the track and setting them on fire, they being consumed with the engine, baggage, and fifteen freight cars. A heavy rain and thunder storm prevailed at the time, but the passengers miraculously escaped.

—The statement is made that Pedder and Seymour, the once trusted employes of Arnold, Constable & Co., of New York, embezzled at least $2,000,000.

—The directors of the St. Louis Fair Association, owing to the prevalence of pleuro-pneumonia, will exclude all cattle from their show this year.

—A "split" has occurred among the Cincinnati saloon-keepers, who had planned sending out 15,000 circulars advising the whisky interest of the State to vote for one of the Democratic candidates and using discretion about the rest.

—Within a few days attempts have been made to fire several business buildings at Cleveland, Ohio. The people are alarmed, and extra patrols have been employed.

—A half-mile of the trestle-bridge across Lake Ponchartrain was burned Friday night, which prevents the running of trains for several days. The bridge is seven miles long.

—On the fair grounds at Erie, Pa., Friday, one of the pole props holding a balloon fell when the aeronaut, Oscar Hunt, had ascended, killing one person outright and badly crushing a number of others, and resulting in a panic. Hunt descended into the lake, and was drowning when rescued.

—The cashier of the Las Vegas (N. M.) National Bank discovered that the vault of the bank was being tunneled from the outside, and guards were placed. The masonry was noticed to be sinking, and a volunteer who intended to search the cellar met a man on the stairs whom he shot dead. He proved to be the mason who built the bank vault. The robbers fled after a time, and the tunnel was explored. It is well constructed and provisioned, and must have taken months to build.

—Saturday night last, at Meadville, Miss., a mob surrounded the county jail, took out four colored prisoners, and hanged them to trees in the yard. Two of the victims were charged with murder and the others with outrage and arson, respectively. Four other prisoners were not molested, but the lynchers left word that they would return if the county judge did not dispose of them at the next term of court.

—The Phillips well at Bald Ridge, Pa., flowed Sept. 22 at the rate of 3,300 barrels, and at noon next day was doing 138 barrels per hour. The well, which has put more than 35,000 barrels into the pipe line, is just twenty-two days old. Thousands visit the well daily.

—Miss Welton, a wealthy young lady of New York, was frozen to death in a snowstorm on Long's Peak, in Colorado. She ascended the mountain with a guide, but the storm coming on he went for assistance, and when he returned found her dead.

—Striking miners in the Shawnee (Ohio) district are killing cattle belonging to farmers for food. They slaughter them in the fields at night, and carry off the carcasses.

—Three horses fell in a race at Mineola, L. I., Thursday. The rider of one was fatally hurt, and one of the horses was killed.

—Mrs. S. H. Clark, aged 45, died Tuesday night at Baltimore. The corpse weighed 582 pounds, and but a short time before her illness her weight was 623 pounds.

—Fire at Eau Claire, Wis., Tuesday evening, caused an explosion in an outbuilding of a drug store, in which explosives were housed, one man being killed, another fatally hurt, and three burned about the face and hands.

—In the Lake Shore and Western Road offices Wednesday proposals were opened for the construction of an ore dock at Ashland, Wis., which will be the largest in the world. Its dimensions are to be: Length, 1,400 feet; width, 46 feet, and height, 40 feet.

—The horse of Alfred M. Scales, candidate for Governor of North Carolina, ran away in Jackson county and fell down a precipice. Scales was caught in a tree and received serious injuries.

FOREIGN.

—The German Government has forbidden the new corvettes, Ting Yuen and Chen Yuen, built for China, to leave Kiel under the German flag.

—Since the outbreak of the cholera in Naples there have been 10,203 cases and 5,385 deaths.

—The prevalence of cholera will prevent the Papal Consistory assembling at Rome until December.

—The Gaulois of Paris says that Baron de Courcel, French Embassador to Berlin, has informed Prime Minister Ferry that Germany, Austria, and Russia have decided to warn the Khedive of Egypt that the stability of his throne will be endangered if he continues to endorse England's financial acts. In that case the powers might support the restoration of the ex-Khedive, Ismail Pasha, to the head of the Egyptian Government.

—The British war steamer Wasp, carrying four guns, was wrecked on the northwest coast of Ireland, Tuesday. Fifty sailors were drowned, including all the officers.

—In White Bay (Labrador) district 3,000 persons are said to be starving. Six vessels were wrecked on the coast during recent gales.

—Near Pickering Station, Ont., Wednesday night a broken frog threw three coaches and a special car of an express train down a twenty-five-foot embankment, the cars turning over a couple of times, and the special catching fire and being consumed. Rain was pouring in torrents at the time, and the shrieks and groans of the travelers multiplied the horror of the occasion. Nobody was killed, but a dozen were injured, some painfully. The financial loss is said to be $100,000.

—The London Times' Hong Kong dispatch says the French have stopped and searched the English regular trading steamers at Formosa. There is great irritation in consequence of this high-handed proceeding. Neutral steamers conveying soldiers and munitions of war to various quarters in this section of the world are alarmed at their prospects if this shall not be resented, and it is regarded as likely to be a source of probable complication with foreign powers.

—The French Premier reports to the French Cabinet that preparations for resumption of war against China are complete, and that the government has resolved to cut down expenditures. This is believed to mean peace.

—In the kingdom of Italy in the twenty-four hours ending Sept. 28, there have been reported 408 new cases and 222 deaths, including 116 cases and 74 deaths at Naples, and 39 cases and 25 deaths at Genoa. Since the outbreak of the disease in Italy, 13,220 persons have been attacked, and 9,480 died.

—Leading brewers and distillers of Canada formed an association and raised funds to fight the prohibitory liquor act. They have been beaten on all sides, and to-day they decided to give up the contest.

—The secretary of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture says the frosts in that State Sept. 9 and 10 destroyed 40,000,000 bushels of corn and caused a loss of $15,000,000.

The Christian Cynosure will be sent to any address eight weeks on receipt of twenty cents.

Much of the progress made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neighborhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

This twelve-page pamphlet is now issued in a new and attractive style, with a neat cover. The orders for it which more than exhausted the first edition testify to its popularity.

"AMERICANS HAVE NO CONFLICTING INTERESTS RESPECTING SECRET SOCIETIES. WE SHALL HAVE BUT ONE OPINION WHEN WE UNDERSTAND THEM."

Thus opens an exposition of the relation of the Secret Empire to Civil Government, which will remain of great and permanent value to every citizen until the triumph of the American party shall have put the secret lodge system under the ban of law. SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS.

It is providential, perhaps, that Major Whittle's pecial services and the missionary meetings of Mr. nd Mrs. Guinness are over before Farwell Hall is rned over to the Grand Lodge of Illinois Freemaons. If the daily noon prayer meeting does not have he magnetic needle of its Christian devotion somehat disturbed this week by the lodge meetings over s head it will be a sure indication that the Holy pirit is not present.

National prohibition is a humbug, is it? In the ity of Topeka, Kansas, there are one hundred and ighteen saloons selling openly and defiantly. These aloons are all licensed by the National government in pposition to the law and constitution of the State. When any of the saloonists are arrested and fined ney are pardoned by the Masonic ex-rebel Governor lick. So that Masonry, Democracy and the United tates of America are here combined to defeat the eople of Kansas in their efforts to defend their omes from the rum fiend.

The Sublime Porte at Constantinople has issued a ecree forbidding the further settlement of Palestine y the Jews. Thousands of these people have been athering in the last two or three years to their holy nd, and the interest taken in the emigration by the ewish press has aroused the jealousy of the Turks. ir Moses Montefiore, the centennarian of London, nd other wealthy Jews have assisted the return of heir people. The order of the Porte allows the ews only a visit of thirty days to perform their devotions. Their return to the Judean hills has been bserved with universal favor and this restrictive order will be regarded by many interpreters of prophecy s another mark of the speedy decay of the Ottoman ule and the final return of Israel.

The decision of Judge Zane of the U. S. court at alt Lake City last week is a ray of hope through the arkly-gathering storm of Utah. A Roger Clawson, harged with polygamy, demurred to the indictment, ecause men were excluded from the grand jury hich found it on the ground of Mormonism alone. udge Zane replied: "The man who thinks it is right o commit the crime which he is called upon to try annot be an impartial juror for the trial of that man; he should not be influenced by such a motive. If a nan believes it is right to practice polygamy, in a polygamy case he cannot be an impartial juror. According to all human experience he cannot possibly be an impartial juror in a trial of that kind, because the conviction with him means the right of practicing polygamy, notwithstanding all human laws to the contrary. If he believe polygamy a command, a law proclaimed by the Almighty, it makes no difference how many human laws are passed, he will still believe polygamy right, because he thinks a higher law is governing him. Now, Congress intended to exclude this class of men from participating in the duties of jurors, from acting either as grand jurors or petit jurors. The Judge refused to understand that this law should apply to one jury and not another. If he now can make his witnesses testify as well as keep his juries clear of men bound by Mormon lodge oaths, the law can be enforced. A son of Brigham Young is also on trial for the same offense. But Utah awaits a new party with the vigor of reform in its veins before the Mormon stench will be cleared away.

Mr. Blaine should appoint a body guard for St. John. Last Wednesday while the latter's train was coming into Sullivan, Ind., some villian fired into the car, the bullet lodging in the woodwork just in front of the Governor, who took the matter coolly. Had that bullet reached its mark it might have defeated Blaine. But the supporters of the Republican candidate are carrying on a campaign of petty slander, no whit less villainous, if less shocking. The Kansas papers tell us that letters by the bushel come to Olathe, the home of St. John. The ministers, the mayor, and the W. C. T. U. are kept busy answering whether the ex-governor drinks bitters, whether he keeps a jug of whisky in his house, whether his breath smells of brandy, whether he is a Royal Arch Mason, etc. The letters indicate generally that the story that suggests the anxious question comes from some Republican politician; and, while the object is plain—they hope thus to break down St. John—there are other things somewhat plain also. These backbiters dare not publish their lies where they could be held responsible for them. These letters show that there is a bitter, but secret resistance to St. John going on all over the country, lodge tactics applied for a practical, definite end. They show, too, that the Masons are aroused and at work for his overthrow. Let them go on. Their work is suicidal. Their tower of falsehood will some day topple upon their own heads.

Sabbath, October 19th, has been recommended as a day of special prayer for the Sabbath schools. The London committee suggests an early morning hour, from seven to eight o'clock, be given to intercession for the outpouring of the Spirit; also that teachers have a special meeting and that pastors preach on the subject. At the International Sabbath school convention held in Louisville last June there were reported 103,516 schools in the United States and Canada with a total membership of 9,146,028; while the schools of the world contained 17,658,524 members. Philadelphia has the greatest number of schools, 555, of any city in this country; New York has 356, Brooklyn and Baltimore 240 each; Chicago 212; Cincinnati 142; and Boston, 131. In proportion to population Connecticut leads the other States in the number attending the schools, the ratio being 24½; Maryland comes close after, 24⅓; Nebraska, 22½; Pennsylvania, 20 1-5; Iowa, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Vermont, Virginia, and W. Virginia 20; Georgia 19⅓; Indiana and Kansas, 18¾; Illinois and Tennessee 18⅓. Several of the New England States stand low in the list; California is at 5½; Utah, 3; and New Mexico lowest at 1⅓. These are instructive figures; and, though less hopeful than could be wished, they inspire to fervent prayer for the schools. They should do more; the fact, that of the billions of earth's population less than 18,000,000 engage in the regular and public study of the Word of God, should increase the zeal of every Christian to the utmost.

More than a year ago the Cynosure called attention to the plan of the secretists to make the Grand Army of the Republic a permanent institution whether there were any soldiers of the war living or not. The formation of a juvenile branch indicated this purpose, and the formal recognition of the "Woman's Relief Corps," at Denver last year, as an auxiliary to the men's lodge confirmed it. The formation of these female societies began six or seven years since, some of them were secret, some were not. But at Denver they were all roped into the lodge, adopted secret work as an organization, and extended the privileges of membership "to all loyal women." This women's lodge has a ritualistic service, a sign, countersign, signal, pass-word and salute; and its badge is a Maltese cross (a cross of eight points) The plausible objects set forth by this secret body, together with the fact that it will powerfully aid in perpetuating the Grand Army with all its un-Christian accessories, make it, if possible, more dangerous to American society than the Masonic Eastern Star or the Odd-fellow degree of Rebecca.

France has shown to the world many distressing features of national ambition and religious apostasy. The seizure of Madagascar and the Chinese war have nothing to vindicate the French nation to other people from the charge of unjust greed, and the progress of atheistic sentiments as manifested among French Masons shows how far from God large classes of that people are removed. But in connection with the Mc-All missions, which reach the lower classes of society there are pleasanter and more hopeful scenes. The Independent in its notice of this great work says: "Careful observers state their deliberate conviction that gross materialism is far more restricted in its spread and feebler in its hold than its apostles would have the world believe, and than many Christian men have feared. There is evidence that its popularity has reached its zenith and begins to wane. The sophisms and cavils of atheistic speakers have become stale and wearisome, while the Gospel story, even on the lips of unskilled speakers, has a perennial freshness which holds the minds and hearts of the people. Experienced French workers have compared carefully the approximate numbers attending respectively the infidel meetings and the evangelistic services in Paris; and while some of the former, by means of music and other attractions, gather crowds, yet the aggregate attendance at the Gospel meetings will be found greater. There is a readiness to give a hearing to the Gospel. There is much spiritual unrest, and those who are not yet willing to surrender to the power of the Gospel will listen with interest to Gospel appeals."

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISTIC MOVEMENTS.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

"The cry of Outcast London," "Progress and Poverty," with a few other books of the same kind, have awakened the churches of this country to a large degree of excitement, and to the putting forth of some effort to reach the lower strata of the people. Some exceedingly sedate and orderly people have questioned the propriety of the church taking any part in socialistic discussions, while the Rev. Newman Hall, and other prominent leaders in church life, maintain that Christ was not only a socialist but a revolutionist, and that the carrying out of his teachings will result in the turning of things upside down. We do not see how the heart of the difficulty can be reached without the help of the church. The bettering of the individual man is the special work of the church. The Scriptures lay their stress upon getting the heart or conscience right. The leavening of the individual is the leavening of the masses, the masses being made up of individuals. Whatever affects the welfare of the individual man affects the welfare of the race, and so should elicit the sympathy and help of the church. The prophets did not confine themselves to what are commonly regarded as religious matters. they were constantly announcing to the men of their age that God was on the side of the oppressed, and would require an account of all unrighteous exactions made by the oppressor.

The Mosaic law had its social as well as its religious side. Defects in the construction of houses, their sanitary condition, and everything which imperiled life was carefully dealt with. Religion included every relation of life and every duty of man to man. Instead of abolishing these arrangements Christ em-piece of literature, its universal appeal to human nature. When I consider the narrow limitations of the Pilgrim households, I can feel what the Bible was to them. It was an open door into a world where emotion is expressed, where imagination can range, where love and longing find language, where imagery is given to every noble and suppressed passion of the soul, where every aspiration finds wings. It was history; it was the romance of real life; it was entertainment unfailing; the wonder-book of childhood; the volume of sweet sentiment to the shy maiden; the sword to the soldier; the inciter of youth to heroism; the refuge of the aged. Perhaps nowhere can a better illustration be found of the true relation of literature to life than in this example.—Charles Dudley Warner.

FREEMASONRY GLORIFIED.

We made four distinct charges in our last issue, viz:—

1. That Freemasonry builds a wall of separation between Christians that is inimical to Christian unity, harmony, and success.

2. That all Christians who enter this Brotherhood voluntarily place their characters under grave suspicion.

3. That the joining of such a secret oath-bound institution is a direct violation of the apostolic injunction to "abstain from all appearance of evil."

4. It is a violation of the divine command to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." (For a further amplification of these charges see the last number of this paper.)

We now add the following:

1. It secures immunity to the individual, while under cover of the lodge room, from the operation of civil and ecclesiastical law.

Let any one wishing to satisfy himself on this point read the history of the Morgan tragedy of 1826. In an address to the people of New York State in 1831, signed by William H. Seward and thirty-eight others protesting against the "farce" that had been played in the courts for a year in connection with the Morgan murder, they make use of the following significant language:—"On one side it is an aristocratic nobility composed of men bound together by the most terrific oaths, which conflict with the administration of justice, with private rights, and with public security; a privileged order, claiming and securing to its members unequal advantages over its fellow-citizens; veiling its proceedings from scrutiny by pledges of secrecy." etc.

Again:—"On the other side, a portion of your fellow-citizens ask for equal rights and equal privileges among the freemen of this country. They say it is in vain that this equality of rights and privileges is secured in theory, by our Constitution and laws, if, by a combination to subvert it, it is in fact no longer enjoyed. They point you to Masonic oaths, and at the effect of those dreadful obligations upon all our elections, upon witnesses in our courts of justice, and upon jurors. They show you one of your citizens murdered under their influence; and the offenders escaping with impunity. They exhibit to you the power of your courts defied, and the administration of justice defeated through the instrumentality of those obligations," etc. Such evidence can be greatly multiplied and proves conclusively, as ever sensible person must know, that the actions of men under the cover of a secret lodge room can only be made amenable to human law to the extent that such persons will inform on one another. And this they never do, for Masons in particular are sworn to "conceal each other's crimes, and deliver each other from difficulty whether right or wrong." (See Finney on Masonry, p. 262.) In point of fact no one, we presume, ever heard of a Mason being punished either by church or state, for anything done in a lodge room, though it is not to be inferred from this that nothing worthy of punishment ever transpired there. It is evidently because Masonry is not at liberty to bring the transactions of the lodge room, however criminal, before any other court than its own, hence, while a man is under the cover of the lodge room he is sheltered from the operation of all human law. Such being the case it is incompatible with Christianity for its ministers and members to countenance such an institution. Nor does it mend the matter much, or detract from the force of this charge, that "Masonry is essentially Biblical in its warp and woof, in its spirit and letter." It only serves to prove how profanely men can behave themselves by joining together what God has divorced, and pass off as legitimate children of God the devil's bastards. Yet this institution is defended by Christian ministers in Christian pulpits by Gospel texts! Tell it not in Gath! But,

2. We charge that a secret, oath-bound lodge affords a convenient means of conspiracy to evil disposed men, and a strong temptation to conspiracy to others.

This cannot, will not be denied. Even Dr. Burns, whose utterances led to the penning of this article, says, "Some look upon it (the Masonic lodge) as a field to be cultivated by demagogues; others, as a club room in which the members are to spend most of their evenings; while others have no higher conception of it than to consider it a place for stratagems and plots to disturb the social and political fabric." And what answer has the Dr. to return? Simply this:—"All these charges may be applicable to individual Masons, or even at times to a Masonic lodge. A lodge is just what its members make it. I have lived in a city where it constituted the very cream of society; where almost every respectable man in the community both lay and clerical, was connected with the order. I have seen the opposite also."

These statements which we have italicized are a virtual admission of this charge. In fact, it demands no further proof, but if one tithe of the criminal charges laid at its door be true, then the Masonic lodge room is, in many cases, "a place for stratagems and plots," and Christian men should keep aloof from it. All this, too, but serves to confirm the charges made in our previous article, and certainly, if there be any force in them at all, ought to afford sufficient ground of admonition to Christians to steer clear of such breakers.—The Iconoclast.

GIVE UP QUIBBLING.

You have never yet come to the point with your own conscience. You have always been so deft at finding out knots and raising questions. What is the good of it, man? If you are never saved till you get every problem solved, you will never be saved at all. A man is dying; there is a medicine that might restore him; he will not take it, because he does not understand the anatomy of his lungs and the various internal organs of his body. Stupid! Is it not enough that the physician understands the malady and the remedy? Take the medicine, man, and be content. Surely Christ understands every difficulty that could perplex a sinner's brain, and he has prepared a potent salvation fully adequate to secure the sinner's welfare. Why should we stammer at the difficulties, instead of solving the dilemma by accepting the grace?—C. H. Spurgeon.

FREEMASONRY is very active of late. The other day we noticed that it was laying the corner stone of a new court house in Erie, Pa.; still later, August 28, Masonry performed similar service for the new court house of Terre Haute, Ind. These insults to the equal rights of citizens, tax payers, who deprecate secret societies, will presumably continue—so long as the insults are tamely submitted to.

To return to the Statue of Liberty. We, in common with the press at large, have received a recent circular, etc., from the American committee having in charge the erection of the statue, and these gentle men courteously ask for journalistic favors at our hands. We have no favors to extend. Let the Masons, who laid the corner stone, erect the statue and then point to the Masonic sect in Europe as "enlightening the world" by the torch of the petroleuse, and refreshing it by the dagger of the assassin—the Carbonari, Illuminati, International, and kindred sworn enemies to civil and religious order.

When Masonry enters public American life, we have the right to question its origin, aims and affiliations; its record in the past and present, and its outlook in the future.—The Universe, Cleveland. O.

SAMUEL DEXTER AND MASONRY IN 1792.

[An old tract found among the papers of Samuel D. Greene.]

In the year 1798, Josiah Bartlett, Grand Master of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, published under his own name, in the Mercury and Palladium, an attack on the Rev. Dr. Morse, of Charlestown, for calling the public attention to Professor Robison's work on the connection of Masonry and Illuminism. To this Masonic attack, Hon. Samuel Dexter, the great lawyer and advocate, replied, in the following article, the original of which we have seen in his own handwriting. The eagle mind of Mr. Dexter penetrated Masonry at a glance, and the biting ridicule here exhibited, bears the stamp of his sarcastic powers:

To the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of Massachusetts,—SIR:—As you have twice written to the public in opposition to Professor Robison and Dr. Morse, and a number of weeks having elapsed since your first favor, according to all the rules of epistolary etiquette you are by this time entitled to an answer. This burden I have taken upon myself, and shall now give you my opinion, and that of the most of my informed friends. After having read your publications with some care, I confess I am at some loss to determine their object. Thus much, however, I can discover, that your wish is to prevent the good effect of the publications of those gentlemen respecting Illuminatism. As I fully believe their writings are important warnings to the public, and have a tendency to prevent the evils which that Box of Pandora, the French Cabinet, is pouring upon the world, I must disapprove of your efforts, though I am not very apprehensive of their success.

Lest you should complain that my object is as difficult to discover as your own, I tell you explicitly, at the outset, that my intention is to endeavor to convince you, that after the concessions contained in your own publications, you are bound to desist from opposition, or relin quish all claim to the character of a man of probity and candor. In your last you admit the existence of an order of Illuminatism in the following words: "I pretend not to doubt the existence of this order, for there are documents in the Professor's book which are satisfactory to render it probable;" and you express your abhorrence of their "reputed principles and detested practices." For what then are you opposing Professor Robison? Because like an honest man he states and proves the existence of a horrible conspiracy against Government, Morals, and Religion, which you confess does exist, and guards the unwary from being seduced? Why are you opposing Dr. Morse? Because he first recommended this work to the perusal of Americans, and thus prepared them to resist the contagion of Illuminatism, and afterwards defended himself, when treated with scurrility, for so doing? There can be but one answer to this, and that is that Freemasonry was unjustly attacked, and you merely defended that. This is not fact in any sense, in regard to Dr. Morse, for he has never in the least degree implicated Masonry: on the contrary, he said every thing that an honest man could say to allay the causeless jealousy of some of the fraternity. Must you, in faithfulness to Masons, oppose the opposer of Illuminatism, after all you have said against it? If so, you are called by a higher authority, as a man and a citizen, and in a voice of thunder, to abandon Masonry as an unjustifiable institution. If it be otherwise, let the Doctor quietly pursue his professional duties, for the crimes of Illuminatism are all that he condemns. But you have a singular objection against the Doctor. Without examining his evidence or his arguments, you complain that he has "occupied more than eleven columns in the Mercury." This is a new mode of managing a controversy, to count the columns in successive newspapers, and learnedly publish the aggregate to the world to enable them to appreciate his arguments. But I do not object to this on account of its novelty, for I have a due regard for original genius and useful inventions. And who can doubt the utility of this invention to those who can count better than they can reason.

As to Professor Robison, he expressly acquits the three first degrees of Masonry of the charge of criminality, and you have told us that these are all that exist in this country. At least, there are no others under your protection. You say expressly, "I pretend to no regular information beyond what the learned Professor calls "Simple Freemasonry." Will you undertake to say that the higher orders of which you confess yourself ignorant, cannot be corrupt? Will you oppose this naked assertion confessedly founded in ignorance, to the talents and integrity of Professor Robison, which you have explicitly acknowledged, and to the testimony which he produces? Though among the unenlightened in Masonry on this subject, I have equal information with all the most worshipful of your fraternity. And throwing out of the question such respectable authority and evidence as the name and documents of the Professor, let me ask you whether it be incredible that these workers of mischief, who are turning the world upside down, should avail themselves of the secrecy of Masonry to cover their conspiracy, and the general diffusion of it through all civilized countries, to unculcate their poison? And may I not add that the principles of levelism which enters deeply into Masonry, well comports with the hypocrisy of French despotism? Will you say, sir, that Masonry is incapable of being abused? In saying this you say that it is contemptible. If it possesses any character, any force or efficiency, it may be applied to produce mischief. Witness the modern abusive misapplication of the principles of civil liberty and philosophy. But I see the cause of your quarrel with the Professor. He is a Mason, and publicly confesses that Masonry is a frivolous institution. A deadly wound this, to the vanity of a man who hoped to derive some importance from being at the head of it in Massachusetts. If this be a mistake respecting the merits of Masonry, and contrary to all rules of evidence, a man is not to be believed when he testifies against himself, yet remember that it does not render it proper for you to attempt, from resentment, to prevent the good effect of his publication, to obstruct him in opposing vice, and guarding innocence against contamination. But as a misrepresentation here might impair the public confidence in the Professor, and prevent the complete good effect of his book, let me, for a moment, examine whether there be not every reason for believing the charge true. I will first consider what is known publicly of the institution, then hazard some conjectures as to what is said to be unknown. The world knows that Masons have most windy titles, such as Most Worshipful, etc., etc. It is known that their vanity prompts them to walk in formal procession, covered with trinkets that a well informed savage would blush to wear. It is well known that they have many symbolic figures which were highly useful before men could read or write, and therefore are probably yet convenient to many of the brethren. It is known that with all these trinkets and symbols they follow the remains of a brother, looking as wise as the bird of wisdom, which no doubt greatly comforts the ghost of the departed. It is known that on certain days they meet together and eat plentifully, and, if fame does not slander them, drink so too. But is it known that they have, merely as Masons, one object of useful pursuit. Other societies are formed for promoting arts and sciences, agriculture, navigation, humanity, religion, etc. But this society, though claiming existence, if I am not misinformed by the brethren, for centuries before creation, and extended through almost all nations, has never yet produced any known good to the world. But we are told all this is answered by the claim of inviolable secrecy. Strange society that blazons its follies to the world, but buries its virtues in midnight darkness. But, sir, you have no secrets; but mere ceremonies. I say this on the testimony of most respectable men who are Masons. I say it on your own testimony. And can secret ceremonies save the institution from the charge of frivolity? Can you, by accumulating in secret more baubles and more follies excuse yourselves from the gewgaws and trumpery which are seen? I need not rest this denial of important secrets on testimony. The nature of the thing is stronger proof than witnesses can give. Amongst the weak and unprincipled, the intemperate, the offended, the revengeful Masons which successive ages have produced, in all nations, and of all colors, it is impossible that any such secret should have been kept. And if this could be supposed, such a secret must be important to all men, if important to any, and the withholding of it would be an instance of misanthropy disgraceful to the institution. I know it has been said that the sublime principles of the unity of Deity and moral philosophy are involved in Masonry. But these are principles which at this time are peculiar to no society. In these respects all the civilized world are now Illuminati. On these subjects the blaze of light has obscured the twinkling of Masonry, and this claim of merit, on that ground, reminds us of a part of their own ritual, in which they burn candles to enlighten the meridian sun. As this ritual is said to be typical, perhaps this is the very thing intended to be symbolically represented.

In short, sir, if there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, levelling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot.

The good man's fears will be still further excited in this day of dark intrigue, when all the fallen nations have first been secretly corrupted and prepared for destruction, by beholding an effect on this subject for which he can assign no adequate cause. Wonderful is the present revival and spread of Masonry, and invisible is the cause that produces it. The public papers have informed us of new lodges instituted, or about to be instituted in Norton, Franklin, Concord, Reading, Watertown, Oxford, Brookfield, and several other towns in this Commonwealth. I have no apprehension that these lodges can become corrupt en masse, but they afford opportunity for selecting abandoned individuals to mislead the simple. They secure from public detection attempts at enlisting individuals in conspiracy, though such individuals should be incapable of being seduced. Thus, sir, I have done what Dr. Morse never did. I have ventured to call in question the utility of Masonry. Perhaps I may be ranked with the Professor in this respect, and be charged with being an "illiterate enthusiast." Though innocent of the charge, I shall be proud of my company. But at least the Doctor, who has given no such offense, ought to be suffered quietly to enjoy the approbation of the wise and good, and of his own conscience, for his able vindication of himself and the Professor, without being disturbed by those who profess attachment to government and morals.

One further remark appears necessary to prevent misconception or misrepresentation. Though I cannot, without further information, respect Masonry, yet I highly respect many who have been initiated, and who are among my most valued friends. But it is a fact, unless all my experience deceives me, that the Masons who are most respectable as men are the least attached to Masonry. Such men daily take occasion to excuse themselves from hearing any part of the apparent frivolity of the institution, and speak of it in the same terms with Robison. On the contrary, those who are very busy about Masonry are generally men of light and frivolous minds, dazzled by tinsel, and having no substantial ground for public respect, wish, by unfounded pretenses, to impose on the ignorant and excite the wondering stare of stupidity.

S. D.

In the year 1816, it so happened that this same Samuel Dexter was the Republican candidate for Governor, and run against the Hon. John Brooks, the Federal candidate. A few days before the election, Major Benjamin Russell, then Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, came out in the Sentinel with the following Masonic proclamation; and brother John Brooks was elected by a small majority.

From the Boston Sentinel, edited by the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge:

To the Masonic Fraternity,—Brethren:—It need not be repeated that the internal regulations of your benevolent order exclude all discussions of political dogmas. But every Master knows that his public obligation compels him to discharge the duties he owes to the State with diligence and fidelity.

When two candidates, therefore, present themselves for his suffrage, he is not bound to inquire to what party the one or the other belongs; but whether he is "a good man and true," any faithful to the Constitution which he may be called upon to administer. And, all other things being favorable, he is bound by every Masonic obligation to give his vote for the one who is a Free and Accepted brother in preference to the one who is not.

Brother John Brooks shall receive the vote of

A. Master Mason.

ILLINOIS STATE REFORM CONVENTION.

Mr. Editor:—A State National Reform Convention was held at Monmouth September 29, 30. The following speakers gave carefully prepared addresses: Revs. M. A. Gault, Blanchard, Iowa; John Harper, Smithville, Ills.; T. T. Robb, Linton, Iowa; J. W. Kelsey, A. H. Dean, W. T. Campbell, D. D., Monmouth; C. D. Turnbull, Morning Sun, Ia.; Miss Mary A. West, Galesburg, and Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton. The following subjects were discussed—Aims of the National Reform Association; Christ the Ruler of Nations; What is National Religion? Intemperance; Divorce Reform, and the Sabbath Question. This Association co-operates with temperance societies for the securing of the prohibition of the liquor traffic; with the Sabbath leagues for the better enforcement of Sabbath laws. It opposes the designs of the Liberalists upon our Christian customs and usages. It aims to awake the Christian people of the nation to a sense of the danger threatening all the moral features of our political life, and to a sense of moral obligation resting on the state to acknowledge the sovereignty of God, and to conform its legislation on moral questions to the standard of the divine law. The Association is not sectarian, nor is it political. It aims to educate public sentiment by holding meetings and conventions, and by scattering abroad literature bearing on the questions of public morals. The organ of the movement is the Christian Statesman of Philadelphia, an ably conducted weekly journal. A State organization was effected.

LITERARY.

Gymnastics of the Voice. A system of correct breathing in singing and speaking, based upon physiological laws. By Oskar Guttmann. Edgar S. Werner, Publisher, Albany, N. Y. 2d edition, cloth, $1.25.

This is a practical guide in the training and use of the singing and speaking voice, and is designed as a drill-book for schools and for self-instruction. The text for the new edition has been revised from beginning to end. Many pages of new matter have been added, including numerous exercises for practice which have never before been in print, and which are the results of the author's life-long study and experience. By its teachings private individuals, as well as public personages, may learn the use of their respiratory and vocal organs, whereby the ordinary talk of daily social and business life can be made more pleasing and less fatiguing. In view hereof, "Gymnastics of the Voice" is of value, not alone to the actor, the preacher, the lawyer, the public reader, the lecturer, the singer, the speech-sufferer, but to every person. There is no greater mark of culture than a well-trained voice; there is no surer way to ward off pulmonary and throat disease than well-developed and rightly-used organs of respiration, voice and articulation. Among all the attainments that modern civilization requires, there is none more important and more useful than this. The points of excellence in this volume are numerous, and its superiority over any other work of the kind with which we are acquainted is marked.

The Century for October closes the sixth volume of the new series with a welcome number. A portrait of Austin Dobson forms the frontispiece, and is accompanied by a sketch of the poet. "Lights and Shadows of Army Life" is finely illustrated by etchings by Edwin Forbes. A remarkable portrait of Rosa Bonheur, the celebrated French animal painter, and sketch of her life and work, forms an attractive part of the number; and no less so is the second number of Prof. Langley's "New Astronomy", with its striking illustrations and no less interesting description. Rev. Washington Gladden's paper on "Christianity and Wealth" has received much attention from the ability with which he discusses the obligations of wealth to poverty, and the power inherent in Christianity to enforce these obligations. The doctrine is not new, but deserves re-stating more often. The Century expects to print the largest edition of the magazine ever issued in November.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly goes beyond the garden for its floral chromo this month, and in its reproduction of the purple and golden flowers of the wayside, proves the excellence of its art. Among the articles are, a prize essay on apples, "The Flower Fiend", "Cheap Flowers", "Flowers for the Cemetery", etc.

IN EARNEST.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 1, 1884.

Rev. J. Blanchard,

Dear Dr:—St. John accepts and endorses the American platform, name and all, with a vengeance. You assist or lend assistance to promote a hypocritical movement like that, and you will set back the wheels of reform for a quarter of a century. Very respectfully,

J. B. Corey.

As we are informed that Bro. Corey belongs to the Free Methodist church, we turn him over to the cool, capable, and, better still, Christian editor of the Free Methodist, Rev. Joseph Travis. We hope Mr. Corey does not consider his own church organ "a hypocritical movement."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The colored Masons of Washington city celebrated Sept. 29th, under the direction of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, the 100th anniversary of the foundation of the first lodge of colored Masons. The celebration included a street parade and a banquet.

—In Philadelphia the same day the celebration was to continue three days. Twenty-five lodges were in the procession, representing some 2,000 members. The day was also observed in Boston.

—These colored Masons have an original warrant issued by the Grand Lodge of England, Sept. 29, 1784, by Thomas Howard, Earl of Effingham, acting Grand Master, under the authority of Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, Grand Master, the title being the "African Lodge." Prince Hall was appointed Grand Master; Boston Smith, Senior Warden; and Thomas Sanderson, Junior Warden. These men were the servants of British officers quartered at Castle William, Boston harbor, at the beginning of the revolution. They, as well as several other colored Masons of Boston, had been unable to gain entrance to any lodge in this country, and their Masonic heirs of to-day are not officially recognized by the white lodges. After the original lodge had branched into several, thirty-five or forty years ago, the resultant Grand Lodge was named "Prince Hall Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honorable Society of Free and Accepted Masons for the State of Massachusetts."

—The Odd-fellows claim this year an increase of four grand lodges, 189 subordinate lodges, and 11,875 in lodge memberships during the year. The total relief reached $2,015,832.52, and the revenue is $5,350,041.47.

—A lodge of the Amalgamated Association of iron workers in Wheeling, Va., surrendered lately its charter and other lodge property. This is thought to be the first movement toward the disintegration of the association. This action has been taken on account of the disposition of the nailers to assist the manufacturers in their efforts to make steel rails a success. They say that if they become a success the amalgamation is done for.

—The International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers hold their annual convention in San Francisco this week. About 200 delegates from various divisions throughout the United States and Canada passed through Chicago last week. There are at present 256 divisions existing in the international brotherhood, four divisions being in Chicago. The chief officers are now located at Cleveland, where they will remain until 1890. At that date it is understood there will be an effort made to have them removed to Chicago.

—The eleventh annual convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen opened in Toronto Sept. 23. The chair was occupied by ex-Mayor McMurrich, of Toronto. After opening with prayer, the Lieutenant Governor read an address of welcome to the province. This was followed by an address of welcome to the city by the Mayor. Grand Master Arnold then delivered the annual address, referring to the objects and progress of the brotherhood. Since 1880 there has been an increase in the membership from 1,100 to 12,000, embraced in 240 leagues.

—The order of Elks (theatrical) in this city has engaged Hershey Music Hall for a social Sunday evening, Nov. 9. Upon that date this social will be given, and the members will show the ladies how they carry on their "gander parties." Refreshments will be served ad libitum.

—During the meeting of the Grand Lodge this week, the Scotch rite Masons will take advantage of the presence of the low degree men to hold a reunion and put a large number through to the thirty-second degree. The notices speak with great pomposity of the sovereign princes who are to be present.

—During the last of the present month the Knight Templar and Royal Arch Masons have their turn in Chicago. The headquarters of the "Most Puissant Grand Masters," "Most Eminent Grand High Priests" and "Right Eminent Grand Commanders," is announced at various hotels with disgusting assumptions of royalty.

—"The Rev. Henry G. Perry, M. A.," an Episcopal clergyman of this city, publishes to the world his exalted relations to his fellow mortals thus:

Rev. Henry G. Perry, 32°

Past Prelate of Chicago Commandery [19] Knights Templar.

Grand Chaplain of Grand Council, Royal and Select Masters, State of Illinois.

Thrice Illustrious Grand Master of Siloam Council, Royal and Select Masters.

Prelate of Chicago Conclave [81] Knights of Red Cross of Rome and Constantine.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

WILLIAM DANIEL,

OF MARYLAND.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

IOWA VOTERS.—All parties in Iowa desiring Electoral and State American tickets headed by St. John and Daniel, will address the undersigned, stating number and including postage for return. Persons desiring to contribute to the expense of the same are requested to remit. Now let no one fail of having tickets. A. W. HALL, College Springs, Iowa.
Chairman State Central Committee.

THROWING AWAY VOTES.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Much is being said about "throwing away votes." The first time I was accused of doing that, I proposed to vote the "Prohibition ticket." One of the old elders of the church of which I was then pastor, thought I was doing wrong, and that by voting that ticket I would be helping the wrong party, because "prohibition couldn't win, nohow."

That reminds me of a circumstance: On the 30th of April, 1864, the battle of "Jenkins' Ferry" was fought. Little Rock was the prize contended for by both parties engaged. Maj. Gen. Steele was in command on our side; Price and Kirby Smith on the other side. The Confederates 20,000, and over, strong; we only about 5,000, all told. At the "council of war" held the night before the battle, Gen. Steele expressed it as his decided conviction that it would amount to criminal folly to fight against such odds. And fight he didn't. His opinion was grandly over-ruled by the other officers, and he resigned command of the battle to Gen. Solomon of Wisconsin. Well, we had a lively time of it, but the rebels were severely whipped, and though we lost nearly one-fourth of our men—myself among the wounded—the survivors marched victoriously into Little Rock. Gen. Steele was like the men who "don't believe in throwing away their votes"—he didn't believe in throwing away his men. And yet—be it recorded here, by the way—this considerate and humane(?) General valued the lives and comfort of his hounds more than he did that of his men; for he had the dogs ride in his carriage on our march, when the men were giving out by scores, and all the ambulances were crowded. So then, let a man always be sure that he loves principle more than party, and he will not be slow to decide which not to "throw away." The fact is, when we vote for principle our vote cannot be thrown away, though it may not be counted. Hence, I say, vote the ticket of the "American party," for God will surely give the victory, in his own way and time, to those who honor him and espouse his cause.

KEEP UP THE STANDARD.

SABETHA, Kansas, Sept. 8, 1884.

There are but two primary causes in the world, Christ and his cause, Satan and his cause; both in nature and works aggressive. In the aggressive and progressive spirit of Christ over all wickedness are found the will of God, on which will the church can only form an aggressive politieal platform against the anti-Christian spirit of the age, and have it to be one with the Gospel.

The American platform has an aggressive foundation plank above all others, for removing the organized body of the beast from the earth. The removing of the body is the declared will of God by the word, subjecting all enemies under Christ's feet. The American party cannot weaken and hand over the plank to neutral grounds found in the Pittsburgh platform without dishonoring God, and the aggressive spirit of the Gospel, which God has set in heaven for the overthrow of all wickedness. They cannot leave the principle, and step down on to a platform where there is neither sound nor voice heard from God's people for Christ against the anti-Christs of the age, without sinning against God and inaugurating a sword to wipe out the stain with blood.

Many have rejoiced in the liberty given them in the American platform to be able at once to cast an elector for Christ and his laws straight into the faces of the lodge anti-Christs of our age. How shall they do this, standing on a platform where there has no liberty of the kind been given? It is high time that Christian people ceased balloting for men and parties, and to vote the principles of righteousness that are of Christ into power in this life. Men have no right to pray for the coming of the Lord, unless they invite him to come by their works—votes. The people cannot vote as they pray, without a platform founded on the will of God. Who so wise, as to dare form a platform for the people of God to vote into power with him; yet the people have a perfect one to labor for, which is Christ. Let one be formed in the perfect will of God in Christ, and let the people honor it with their votes a few years, and it will finish up the works of wickedness in the earth. Such a platform would drive every son of wickedness away from it. It would separate the tares from the wheat, and bind them with iron oath bands into lodge bundles ready for burning. Not by the might of numbers, shall victory be won for the Lord, "but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Purity, purity, purity! in the sight of God, is that which shall win in the battle of Armageddon. ORANGE BRUCE.

NOTE.—The American party has not given up any part of its platform or organization as a few seem to interpret the change of candidates to mean. Its principles appear week by week as they have always, and no one is commended for the votes of the party who does not endorse them.

GOUGH FOR ST. JOHN.

Mr. John B. Gough, in a speech at Boston, a few nights since, said: "Fellow-citizens, I am no politician, and I am not going to make a political speech. For forty-two years I have been fighting this liquor trade—against the trade that robbed me of seven of the best years of my life. I have long voted the Republican ticket, hoping always for help in my contest from the Republican party. But we have been expecting something from that party in vain, and now, when they have treated the most respectful appeal from the most respectable men in this country with silent contempt, I say it is time for us to leave off trusting and to express our opinion of the party. [Applause.] I do not believe in compromises of any sort, nor have I believed in them at any time in my career. I have fought the drink traffic right straight through, and I want prohibitionists to show an uncompromising front to that traffic. ["Hear!" "Hear!"] We are fighting a tremendous evil, and we must make sacrifices if they become necessary. But there must be no compromise with the enemy. You must stand to your principles. They talk about protection, but we temperance people have no protection whatever. [Cheers.] We want protection from the liquor traffic for the widow and the orphan and the children. [Applause.] That is why I changed my politics, and if I live until the first Tuesday in November, I shall give my vote for the prohibitory candidate. [Cheers.] With political parties and with demagogic methods of argument and abuse we have nothing to do. I believe that free whiskey in the United States and Benjamin Butler's teachings would bring a bloody revolution in this country in less than five years, and I pray God to give us good men to rule over us. I have defined my position, and with God's help I will stick to it the remainder of my life. [Loud cheers.]

REPUBLICAN PROHIBITION.

It would be amazing, were politieal wonders not common, to see strong prohibitionists as B. T. Roberts and others persuading themselves that the Republican is a prohibition party, or that it favors prohibition, while the leading organs of that party disavow and disprove it. Read the following from the Iowa Register, the Republican organ at the State capital, quoting with approval from the Chicago Tribune:

A WORD TO ANTI-PROHIBITIONISTS.

The inconsistencies of the Democratic party on this one question of prohibition are well brought out in the following from the Chicago Tribune:

"The Democratic politicians and newspapers that are bidding for the German vote maintain a hue and cry about prohibition in Iowa, which they charge upon the Republicans of that State, and the Germans of Illinois are warned that prohibition will steal upon them like a thief in the night unless the Republicans be driven from power in this State and the Harper law be repealed and free whisky re established. By a singular omission these same alarmists ignore the status of the liquor question in the Democratic State of Missouri, which is as close to Iowa as Illinois. In Democratic Missouri the license law exacts more than $1,000 for the privilege of selling whisky, and $550 for the privilege of selling beer and wine—more than double the tax of the Illinois law—and there are about thirty Democratic counties in the State where no licenses are issued and prohibition is enforced as hard as it can be. This condition of things indicates that the 'personal liberty' of the Germans is much more seriously threatened by Democratic influences in Missouri than by Republican influences in Illinois. Why is it that the Republican newspapers which support Cleveland directly or indirectly neglect to mention this fact? And why do they ignore the prohibition laws of Democratic Georgia, where the Republican party is suppressed? If the German voters will think the matter over and compare the conditions of the Republican State of Illinois with those of the Democratic State of Missouri, they will not be able to avoid the conclusion that 'personal liberty' will be safer on the whole under the Republican than it will be under the Democrats."

Prohibition is being tried in different parts of the country by members of all parties.

INCONSISTENCY OF CHRISTIAN VOTERS.

There are Christians who profess to believe the Bible, and to admire Christ's sermon on the mount, who, before the ides of November, next, will cast their votes for men pledged to perpetuate the saloon business to the full extent of their influence.

It is this inconsistency of professed Christians that keeps legislation so far behind the moral sentiment of the age. The times demand a revival of practical Christianity that will utter its convictions at the primaries, at the polls, and in legislative halls, as well as at the prayer-meeting. Then, and not till then, will the world understand what we mean by taking the Bible as our only guide, and will recognize the power of Chirstianity to alleviate the condition of man here, transform society according to a higher ideal, and to bring its laws into harmony with those of the great Law-giver. Men need to learn that liberty is obedience to law, and that the highest liberty is obedience to divine law. The Bible must have its place in the legislative hall as well as in the church, for it is the basis on which rests the home, the church and the state, and all social order and personal freedom.—Christian Evangelist.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ODD-FELLOWS SERVE A NOTICE ON THE Y. M. C. A.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 29, 1884.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The late secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of this city and his assistant are no longer connected with that institution. The readers of the Cynosure will remember that they dragged me from their Lord's-day morning prayer meeting for distributing secret society literature in their rooms and on the street in that vicinity. The Odd-fellows own the building in which the Y. M. C. A. rooms are located; and now the present secretary of this Y. M. C. A. informs me that the society of Odd-fellows has given them notice to vacate their rooms in three days, if secret society litcrature is not suppressed in those rooms.

It is a plain proposition that as men treat truth so do they treat Jesus Christ; and so will Jesus Christ treat them in the judgment flames. Here is a secret religion making a bold attempt to suppress the truth in regard to secret religions. It professes to have a "Grand Lodge above," a place of felicity in the world to come, into which the souls of all of its faithful members go when they die. It rejects the name of Christ for fear of offending the Jew and others who do not believe in him. The Jewish Rabbi, pastor or priest, of the Jewish synagogue of this city, in a public address at an Odd-fellows' festival, expressed his gratitude that he could worship his god as an Odd-fellow in the society of Odd-fellows untrammelled by sectarianism, as he could not in sectarian churches. What did Christ say concerning the spiritual fathers of that Jew? He told them, "If God were your Father ye would love me." Surely the same can be said to this Jew, and also to his brethren of the Odd-fellows' fraternity. But Jesus is still more explicit when he says, "Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar and the father of it." Jno. 8: 42, 44. Jesus said, furthermore, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." Jno. 8: 24. Thus these Odd-fellows, whether they are Jewish hypocrites or Christian hypocrites, shall die in their sins. Their Grand Lodge above is a mere delusion. While they publicly deny Christ in their worship, it is in vain for them to say that they receive him in their hearts. "Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven." Matt. 10: 33.

William Fenton.

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER IN EARNEST.

Union, Mo., Sept. 27, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—Being very desirous that your principles should prevail, I write, hoping to aid the good cause. The town in which I live is the county seat of Franklin county, Mo. The following are Freemasons: Circuit judge, sheriff and his deputy, clerk, recorder, mayor, district attorney, jailor, nearly all the lawyers, the miller, the two doctors, and some others. One of the doctors and a merchant have seceded from them and oppose them.

From this you will not wonder that the people of the county do not expect any justice in the law from the court if a Mason is the adverse party.

I came to this place in 1842, more than forty-two years ago, and can remember fifty or sixty persons that have been killed. One man has been hung in that time in accordance with the law, and two by mob law. I suppose there have been twenty or thirty that ought to have been executed, and would if justice had been done. To my personal knowledge the Masons here have been, and still are, in a great measure, of the most drunken, dissolute, and dishonest men to be found in the country. Many of them are infidels and atheists, and yet they claim for themselves great things: some, that they are better than the church, Masonry superior to Christianity; another, that it is good enough religion for him; another, that a good Mason is a good Christian; and still another, that it is a stepping-stone to religion; while some say it is only a benevolent institution. So we find they don't know what they are themselves. These opinions I have from their own lips.

As they lay claim to the right of being considered a religious body, it is fair and proper that it should be criticized and condemned from the pulpit on the Sabbath-day, and so it is my intention to give previous notice and expose the whole matter so far as I am informed on the subject. I know this will give offense, and cannot tell what opposition it may stir up, but I know that the ministers of Christ should do their duty and trust to the Lord for the rest. It is also my intention to bring the matter before the judicatories of our church (Presbyterian), and, if possible, induce them to take action against all secret societies. I know of no institution so well calculated to promote intemperance. They meet every full moon, and generally get drunk on the night of meeting; and he that gets drunk every month will soon be drunk every day. (Rev.) J. F. Fenton.

MASONRY CONTRADICTING THE BIBLE.

A minister once had the impudence—shall I call it?—to tell me that Masonry explained the Bible and it helped him in his ministry. I thought, My brother, have you studied the Bible as you ought? Do you understand it as you should?

Now let us see. In the third, or Master's degree, they go through with a farce or play in which they represent Hiram of Tyre, the widow's son, as a stone mason, a bewer of stone. Now the Bible tells us that Hiram of Tyre was a cunning worker in brass. 1 Kings 7: 13, 14. He was not a stone mason at all, and probably had never hewed one stone in his life. There is one Masonic lie.

Then they play that Hiram of Tyre died and was buried in the rubbish of the temple. There was no rubbish in nor around the temple. All of the stones were hewn away at a distance, and that beautiful temple was reared noiselessly and quietly. Another misrepresentation of Scripture.

Then again, they play that Hiram of Tyre died and was buried before the temple was finished. The Bible tells us that Hiram of Tyre made all the brass instruments of the temple and finished the work that King Solomon had hired him to do. He did not die; so there is another Masonic falsehood.

One very great objection I have to all secret societies is, the vast amount of money they get out of the people's pockets for nothing. There is every year a continual stream of money in the form of dues going up to the Grand Lodges from the lower lodges. Thousands and thousands of dollars are thus sent up to the Grand Lodges. Now, what is done with all of that money? Just think a moment, reader. It cannot possibly be used for building and furnishing a Grand Lodge. I'll tell you what I think about it. The Grand Lodge men there in that dark chamber divide it among themselves; and there is no doubt many an aristocrat of our nation living in ease and affluence on the lower lodge men's money.

What good does it do a man to join the Masons? He can pay in his money. What good will it do him to join the Odd-fellows? He can pay in some more money. What good will it do him to join the Good Templars? He can hand out some more money. What good will it do him to join the grange? The Grand Lodge men are in need of some more money. There is a class of men in the world that love to dupe somebody, and there is another class that are willing to be duped; so the duping is continually going on. When will the men of America learn to think for themselves and be wise?

Mrs. H. C. Hayden.

POINTS OF DISAGREEMENT.

Delavan, Ill.

Dear Cynosure:—Let me say to all of my dear brethren in Christ, and to all who believe in the Christian Scriptures and recognize Christ as the only way of salvation for poor sinners:

1. We believe the God of the Bible is the one only true God and that he has revealed himself to the world as the creator of all things.

2. That this God is our God; and that the recognition and worship of any other being as God, is idolatry and and devil worship. Deut. 32: 17: "They sacrificed unto devils and not to God," etc.

3. That this God has revealed himself through the Son, and to deny the Son is to deny the Father (1 John 2: 22, 23), and to recognize a god under high-sounding names, such as "Grand Master of the Grand Lodge above," "Grand Architect of the Universe", etc., and to worship such a being, is an act of idolatry, and to mutilate the Bible to get rid of the name of Christ is an act of the greatest sacrilege.

4. There is as great difference between God the Father and the "Grand Architect of the Universe," as there is between Hiram, the widow's son of the Bible, and the Hiram Abiff of Masonry. The latter was slain by a band of Masonic murderers before his work was completed. the Hiram of the Bible lived to complete his work, and of his death we have no account. The King Hiram of Masonry was a constant companion of King Solomon in and about the temple while it was being built. The King Hiram of the Bible, it appears, was never in Judea till he came to see the cities that Solomon gave him; when he saw them he was displeased, and gave them a nick-name. 1 Kings 9: 12–14.

5. It is claimed that Masonry in the higher degrees is intensely Christian. O yes, how they will fight for it, and pour out their blood like water in its defence! What strutting, and O, what great swelling words they use, with drawn swords as they march round; which looks much more like the spirit of the mother of harlots when she was making herself red with the blood of the martyrs; not in defence of Christianity, but to make herself mistress of the world. This is the spirit of Masonry: it proposes to make itself the one universal religion of the world, not by the Spirit of Christ, but by the counsel of Satan.

7. Masonry proposes to batter down all the obstacles that stand between it and the Grand Lodge above, with its little wooden mallet. In short, it proposes to climb up another way, thereby justly meriting the title, "Thieves and robbers." Ex-Mason.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.

Galesburg, Ill., Sept. 24, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Permit a correction of A. M. Paull. The chief end and aim of the Temple of Honor and Temperance is not "salvation," but is temperance. It does teach temperance in all its phases, both in its ritual work and in the application of its principles to the every-day affairs of life; moreover, that is what it was organized for at the outset of its career.

It uses the worship of God as does a National or State legislature, and believes that right. Its temperance record is a monument of which it is justly proud; yet it does not pretend to rival the Christian church, even in this. I repeat that it has no theology school. It bears the same relation to the temperance work that the church of Christ bears to the salvation of men's souls. It is neither a delusion nor a snare, for it fulfills what it professes, and no more. Its present Most Worthy Templar is Rev. C. S. Woodruff, Bayonne, N. J. It is not ashamed of itself or its work. Truly,

W. F. Tait.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON III.—Oct. 19, 1884.—Solomon's Choice. 1 Kings 3: 5–15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom. Prov. 4: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

EARTHLY AND HEAVENLY WISDOM.

1. Solomon's prayer. Vs. 5–9. An ambition to be wiser than the majority of our fellow-men is right or wrong according to the motives for which we desire it. If we seek it as Solomon did, in order to be more useful in the world, it is a virtue; but if it is for the purpose of over-reaching others and gaining undue advantage through their weakness or ignorance, then it becomes a vice—and a very mean vice at that. This is "the wisdom that descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish." It is the kind of wisdom that is taught in Masonic lodge-rooms. The mind is degraded to learn a secret system of signs and grips and passwords that will enable the member to be benefited in his trade or profession, or receive favors when traveling at the expense of some other man who is too poor or too conscientious to acquire this knowledge. The heavenly wisdom, however, can be easily distinguished by two characteristics which our lesson here points out. (1) It is rooted in humility. Solomon exclaims, "I am but a little child." How different this from the lodge wisdom that has no confession of human sin or weakness, and blasphemously bestows on its followers titles that only Deity can properly wear. (2) The object and end of all true wisdom is love. It seeks to use itself entirely for the good of others. Solomon desired an understanding heart, not to add to his royal honors, but to increase the happiness of his people. Earthly wisdom, on the contrary, is based on human selfishness. It is ever looking on its own things, not at the things of others.

2. The abundant answer. Vs. 10–14. We are told that Solomon's choice "pleased the Lord." There are several reasons why. (1) It was a test of character, for nothing shows more clearly what we are than our secret wishes. In the Life of Madame Patterson Bonaparte, we find her in the midst of bitter complaints of weariness and ennui writing to a friend that the one earthly thing she wanted most was a string of white topazes. Such a wish was but the key-note to a hard, selfish, unloving and unloved nature. (2) It was asking him for the best thing, that which God most delights in giving us—his Holy Spirit. (3) Such a choice evinced faith. Solomon might have said, "I need more money in my treasury; I ought to have more prestige among surrounding kings; I want a long life in order to fully carry out all my plans;" and spoken truly; but he was willing to trust God to give or not give these inferior blessings. And so doing he found the great truth expressed in our Saviour's promise: "Seek first the kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What is the value of wisdom? Prov. 3: 14, 15; 8: 10, 11, 19. What earthly advantages does she offer? Prov. 3: 16; 8: 18. What is true wisdom? Prov. 9: 10.

PRACTICAL NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

1. To us—to all, that is, who, like Solomon, "love the Lord"—does the same voice speak, saying, "Ask what I shall give thee." Yes; he who spake to this new-crowned king in the night visions hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, saying, "Ask, and it shall be given you." Let us consider: (1) Like Solomon we are commanded to ask. It is not that we are permitted so to do: it is made a positive duty. If we do not ask, we sin. It was in the night visions that God spoke to Solomon. It is in no dream, no vision, but in his own written word he says to us, "Ask what I shall give thee." (2) Like Solomon, we have but to ask and God will give. "Every one that asketh receiveth," etc. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God... and it shall be given him." If we have not wisdom, blessing, pardon, peace, it is all for want of asking. God is sure to give, because he loves to give; it is his nature and property to give. Not only (as has been beautifully said) is "the greatest Being in the world the greatest giver," but it is an essential part of his perfections to give. (3) Like Solomon, let us ask the best gifts. (4) If, like Solomon, we choose the best gifts, the other and inferior blessings are thrown in with them. (5) And here again observe that not only is it God's nature to give, but to give "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." He is "wont to do more than either we desire or deserve."

> "I knelt before Thy gracious throne
> And asked for peace with suppliant knee;
> And peace was given; not peace alone,
> But love and joy and ecstasy."

(6) If, like Solomon, we cease to covet the best gifts, and care only for the lower, we shall certainly lose the former and may possibly lose both.—Rev. Jos. Hammond, LL. B.

2. The prayer of Solomon is the type of true prayer (1) in its power, (2) in the condition on which it was granted, (3) in its answer.—De Pressense.

3. (1) Wisdom is a practical quality, not merely theoretical. (2) Wisdom deals with those eternal principles that underlie the surface appearances of life.

> "There is more wisdom in a whispered prayer
> Than in the ancient lore of all the schools."

(3) Wisdom is of divine origin. (4) Wisdom has an abundant reward.—Rev. J. Waite, B. A.

4. Solomon's prayer was characterized by the following excellences: (1) gratitude; (2) solemnity; (3) hopefulness; (4) humility.—A. R.

5) The wisdom of Solomon's choice. The choice was for the good of oth- rather than for the advantage of him- . The prayer of selfishness, greed, rice, can never be put up in Christ's ne. he contrast between Solomon's early later life is remarkable. When he an to rule he was a thoughtful, sober- ded, pious young man. For several rs, until after the temple was built and icated, he seems to have had consider- e spiritual fervor. Yet, when we come sum up his career and estimate his racter, so great is the cloud that has ered about him that we can scarcely whether to place him among the god- r not. In the verses preceding the on it is distinctly said that he "loved Lord, walking in the statutes of Da- his father." His marriage of an ptian princess seems questionable. she was doubtless a proselyte to the ish faith, and may have become a uine servant of God. She did not ve a snare to him as did the strange es he took later, and the Canticles and 45th Psalm, though having a deeper ning, are supposed to have a primary rence to this marriage. Nor did the ship of the "high places" argue any- g against his piety, for Samuel and id resorted to the same. There was excuse for this irregular worship in the that "there was no house built unto name of the Lord until those days." eon, six miles north of Jerusalem, was "great high place." OBITUARY.

SHE RESTS FROM HER LABORS.

Ve are one less; still God is with us. ny have known of the constant, true untiring devotion of Bro. Henry Jongh and his quick, unostentatious, faithful wife to the cause of the Mas- always abounding in every good word work. Their hearts and hands were r open to help the poor and needy, their souls beat together responsively he claims of every good, righteous and nane cause.

'heir opposition to the liquor power the lodge power, and all the powers Satan and of darkness, has been posi- e and persistent, and their house at No. 87 St. Joseph St. in this city has long been the hospitable home of many weary workers in the Master's vineyard. But the kind heart, the smiling face, the open hand, the modest mien of that truly Christian woman will no more minister at that family altar, or her presence lighten that happy Christian home. After a short but painful illness she rested from her labors and her pains September 26th, in her sixty-third year. Her funeral took place September 30 at 1 o'clock P. M.

They came to this country many years ago from Holland. Mrs. De Jongh was remarkable for her very retiring disposition, for her plain and modest apparel and her very meek and quiet spirit, which, in the light of God, "is of great price." She was an affectionate wife and mother, a most exemplary woman and a lowly and loving disciple. Brother De Jongh, with his afflicted family, will have the sympathy and prayers of Christian hearts in this hour of their great privation and sorrow.

G. W. C.

Dea. O. B. Palmer passed away from earth Sabbath, Sept. 21, at Delevan, Ill., aged nearly 88 years. An old Abolitionist, a staunch temperance man and a lifelong witness against the secret orders, it was given to him, not only to talk and work in these good causes, but also to suffer for them. A pioneer on the prairies at Knoxville, Ill., the great day alone can declare all the spite and persecution he received for Christ's sake. Yours for the truth, S. S. Martin.

BIRNEY.

The sketch of JAMES G. BIRNEY, candidate of the Liberty Party for President, in pamphlet for 25 cents. A limited number of copies of this handsome pamphlet for sale at the N. C. A. office.

A Wonderful Woman,
A Wonderful Life,
AND
A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

Advertisers who wish to secure the attention of the best class of purchasers, will find it to their advantage to secure space in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } Editors.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1884.

Gen. B. F. Butler is the Jeroboam of American politics; and with a change of names, of persons and places, Jeroboam's biography would answer for Butler's. One made a political religion and "took the lowest of the people and made them priests" (1 Kings 12:31): the other (Butler) takes the same classes, loves, despises and rules them.

In 1848, at Buffalo, the name "Liberty party," under which we had twice voted for Birney, was dropped. The issue, slavery and abolition, was dropped. The name became Free Soil; and the issue, slavery-restriction. Gerrit Smith and C. C. Foote were nominated on the Abolition issue, and many voted for them. But the mass voted for Van Buren and Free Soil. This compelled the slaveholders to fight, not for their slave property, which the mass conceded, but for the spread of slavery; and they were beaten.

In voting for St. John we change neither name nor issue. We shall retain the American name and platform. True, we vote for the Prohibition nominees; but we vote for them as Americans who are clear of the lodge. The argument is a hundred to one stronger than for the change from Liberty to Free Soil in 1848.

WHY THE CYNOSURE SUPPORTS ST. JOHN.

A REPLY TO SEVERAL LETTERS.

The American party held a convention at Washington last February. Our candidate, Senator Pomeroy, presided, working admirably for the cause to which he had lent his name.

Before and after our Washington convention Senator Pomeroy expressed great reluctance to run against St. John, whose principles, he said, were ours. Our National convention at Chicago, sent a fraternal committee to the St. John (Pittsburgh) convention, and gave our National American committee some discretion in case there should be a change of candidates. Rev. Willard Burr said of the Oberlin friends that they should not attend our American convention, though strong Americans; but they should attend the Pittsburgh Prohibition convention, which they did. At Pittsburgh I met Mr. Lewis of Willimantic, Conn., a warm bosom friend, who is called a twin with our candidate John A. Conant. I at once asked Mr. Lewis: "Will you vote for Pomeroy and Conant?" He replied, falteringly, "I should hate to vote against my old friend Conant." Notice that he was at the Pittsburgh convention, but neither he nor Mr. Conant were at Chicago. Besides Burr and Lewis, I met hundreds of strong Cynosure Americans, who said, "Let us push prohibition first, and then throttle the lodge." I disagreed with them; but I could not fail to see that if we pushed Pomeroy against St. John and against his own good judgment, in November, we should have a discouraged leader and broken battalions,—as Col. Baker was ordered to his funeral at Ball's Bluff.

At Central Hotel, Pittsburgh, we met in council, when Pres. C. A. Blanchard said, "Senator Pomeroy, what will you do if this convention nominates St. John?" "I shall write asking leave to withdraw," was his direct answer. "And," he added, "the worst enemies of our cause now urge me to run." They knew that if Pomeroy ran against Republicans, Democrats and Prohibitionists, as almost all our Americans are Prohibitionists, we should only disgrace our cause and strengthen the lodge. It's no use for us to curse our Americans who would vote for Prohibition and St. John. He who curses Willard Burr spits against the wind, and in his own face. Circumstances are part of God's truth as well as the Bible, revealed by his providence every hour. Besides, Pomeroy wished to resign, and a captain has a right to resign. Well, what could we do? We had no leader. We must do one of two things:

1. Force Pomeroy to go on against his better judgment; or,

2. Call a convention and nominate a new ticket.

Now we had nominated one man who took no notice of us; another who contemptuously rejected our nomination; another who voted the Republican ticket; another who accepted but scouted our temperance plank; and not one of all our candidates till Senator Pomeroy had openly taken the field for our platform. I, of course, omit myself; as there were good reasons for my withdrawal which I do not care to mention, and I gave Senator Pomeroy to our cause; who has stood boldly, manfully, and eloquently by us.

What then were we to do? Our Americans had already turned their faces toward St. John, "by act of God;" so far as I was concerned. He had stated before witnesses, "I can stand on every plank of the American platform." And I had never heard of his ever going back on his word. Have you?

True, our platform, mostly written by myself, is a political and not a religious creed or confession. It does not state all that any of us believe concerning secret societies. I believe and know that St. John has a very deficient understanding of them. But if he should be chosen our President by the House of Representatives, and a bill should pass according to our 5th article repealing the "infamous lodge charters, and prohibiting their oaths, he would keep his word and do all our platform requires. He would sign the bill. And if you want any more in that platform, why have you not put in more. You have had that article twelve years! Why have you not added to it? And if the platform is right, and St. John stands on it, why do you call us "hypocrites" who vote for him?

Do you say, We don't want to give up the name "American" or the American principles of our platform? I answer, We give up neither. We simply vote for our platform, and those who stand on it.

In 1848 we dropped the issue of "Abolition," and took "Slavery Restriction;" and we dropped the name "Liberty party" and took "Free Soil." And we voted for Van Buren, because he came on that platform. We well knew that the slave-holders would fight slavery restriction just as fiercely as they would abolition, and at a great deal worse advantage. The change showed the people that the slave-holders meant to have the whole country or none; and the country must be all slave or all free. Events justified our change.

But here, in voting for St. John, we change neither name nor principle. We shall vote for St. John, and if we had time we could put him into the House of Representatives, and probably elect him.

But, if he is not elected, the Cynosure is in favor of calling an American convention to meet on the fifth day of March next, and organize at once for a four years' campaign. I have both faith and hope that St. John will meet with and address that convention as its recognized leader and head. By that time he will have learned the utter monstrosity of a Prohibition party with Masons in it who are sworn secret brothers of other Masons who are distillers, brewers, and saloon-keepers. We must literally "do or die." This country cannot stand lodge and liquor. If St. John falters, and falls back, then we will simply let him alone, and march on with our American name, organization and platform in firm, unfaltering faith, that, as no one pretends that the secret oath-bound orders that curse our globe were planted by the Almighty Father, they shall and will "be rooted up."

Meantime let us not "bite and devour one another" lest we "be consumed one of another." Men have a right to vote as they believe to be for the best good of the country. No one is so silly as to think of disciplining either Republicans or Democrats for voting with other parties. If they are honest, though mistaken, they do not sin; and if any one whom I have taught, perhaps, half he knows of secret societies, chooses to call me a "hypocrite" because I vote, and urge all to vote for St. John, I only point him to my life of fifty years consistent opposition to popular evils, and ask him, when did I begin to be a hypocrite?

J. Blanchard.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Birmingham, Iowa, Sept. 26, 1884. We had a respectable gathering in the U. P. church this evening, but the air was sultry and a storm coming up. All whom I have heard express themselves here, are strong for St. John and Daniel, though they are original Americans of the Dr. Norris (Groves) school. They say voting for the Prohibition candidates, in seamen's phrase, "Jams our anti-secret vessel in the wind." Thousands are now discussing it who would not have heard of us. They say that the withdrawal of Senator Pomeroy evinces sound statesmanship on his part, and neither here, nor at Fairfield, nor at College Springs is there a known sound American who laments the adoption of St. John.

Fairfield, Iowa, Sept. 29th.—A wagon load of us left the Norris home and went up to Fairfield, the home of Senator Jas. F. Wilson. He was a saddler and harness-maker, studied law, went into politics, and stumped his district in company with Dr. Norris with a handkerchief tied round his knee to hide a hole in the leg of his pants. He has done brave work for the country and prohibition, and is much beloved of his neighbors. He stood well with the beloved Grimes, and has been thought of by many as a candate for the Presidency. But his attempt to make the Republican party a prohibition party is like his honest attempt to screen the hole in his knee by tying a handkerchief around the leg of his pants. It simply calls everybody's attention to the fact that the Republican party is worn out and needs mending with a new party.

Mr. Geo. C. Heaton had done his work well at Fairfield. The court house was well filled with men and a large sprinkling of women on Monday evening. The proof of the intelligence and good sense of the crowd is that they heard three speeches in a hot night without tiring. Only one poor old man limped out, saying, "Didn't come to hear about Masonry.'"

Rev. Geo. Warrington spoke to the charge that voters for St. John were "losing their votes." He was followed by Dr. Wm. Pitt Norris, in a prepared and excellent speech in which Adams, Webster, Seward, and others were quoted. Both speeches were well received. Then followed the editor of the Cynosure, whose style of handling lodge politics is too well known to need reporting. Everybody seemed good natured at the close, even those Democrats who regard all talk as gospel which gives them hope of office. Even "distance lends enchantment" to this view.

Morning came and we took steam for Marshalltown. Our convention there is thus set down by the Associated Press:

Marshalltown, Ia., October 1.—The State Prohibition convention, pursuant to a call, signed by sixty citizens of Iowa, was held in this city to-day. Chas. Hutchinson, of Mahaska county, was chosen permanent chairman; E. B. Howard, Marshall county, secretary. A. W. Hall of Page county, and Dr. Blanchard of Chicago, addressed the convention, urging it to put a ticket in the field, headed by St. John and Daniel. The following electors at large were nominated: Samuel Boon of Van Buren county, Joseph Steere, Cedar. The electors are: Geo. Heaton, Jefferson; James Townsend, Cedar; H. M. Woodford, Bremer; W. R. Marley, Fayette; Nathan Bourne, Linn; Chas. Hutchinson, Mahaska; E. J. Grinnell, Guthrie; Jos. Reed, Page; James Syth, Fremont; Wm. Lewis, Story; M. M. Gilchrist, Clay. An executive committee of three were instructed to confer with the American executive committee and make State and Congressional nominations, and to report in about ten days. The work of the convention was harmonious throughout. The electoral ticket as completed contains the names of seven Prohibitionists, and six of the thirteen electors nominated at Washington, Iowa, five weeks ago by the American ultra prohibition and anti-secret party.

At the close of the convention an earnest little woman came in; and, on invitation, said she was brought in by some friend opposed to having an electoral ticket for St. John and Daniel. It would divide and weaken Iowa prohibition, and give the legislature to the Democrats; rescind their good laws; and destroy a cause for which she had toiled ten years.

She was answered, "There is neither legislature nor governor to be chosen next November; and, besides, voting for St. John and Daniel will hinder no one voting for such State officers as he pleases." The lady then came square out for Blaine and the Republican party, but said nothing against Chester Arthur's turning the White House into a national liquor warehouse; nothing against the 1,000 Republican licensed dram-shops in the city of Washington; but she said the Iowa women were likely to divide the National W. C. T. U.,—and that Mrs. Ellen Foster had been to Buffalo and ascertained that Grover Cleveland's morals were as bad as charged by the Republican press.

Well, we should object to have a son or daughter accompany Mrs. Foster to Buffalo on such an errand. Possibly she may err in her political judgments as in matters of propriety and taste.

The Cynosure editor was invited by Elder Miller to address the regular weekly Presbyterian prayer-meeting on the evening of the Marshalltown convention on the Sabbath-school lesson for next Sabbath. A Presbyterian clergyman present added, "And on anything else on which he may choose to speak." As the lesson included the 700 false worships brought in by Solomon's heathen wives, a faithful application was made to the false worships in Marshalltown, where the Congregational pastor had lately been made to jump down on the spikes by the "Knights of Pythias," and other ministers had been put through the degrading "religious" rites by Masons and Odd-fellows. We received the warm thanks of those present, and Elder Miller sent two dollars to the Cynosure. Some interesting young people were present. Such a Presbyterian prayer-meeting in Marshalltown, where there was an anti-reform mob a while since, shows that the leaven of truth is working there. J. B.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

The late international convention of scientists at Philadelphia was one of the most remarkable meetings of the kind held in this country, both for the character and scope of the papers and addresses presented and for the unusual interest awakened among Americans. The Association was increased by some 500 new members, adding thirty-three per cent. to their former number.

The universal claim of infidelity that science is ntinually at war with revealed religion, and that its vestigations are undermining the foundations of hristianity had a happy and practical denial in this eat meeting. The Presbyterian of Philadelphia peaks thus of the religious phase of the meeting:

"We were very favorably impressed with the man- er and air of these students of nature. They seemed oroughly candid, always ready for facts, and dis- osed to be patient until a full collation of facts uld justify the formation of a theory. If we com- rehended what we heard, and what we have read, ere was much less said or hinted this year which eemed to bear against the Christian faith or against e texts of the Holy Scriptures. It is a pleasant ing also to record that these men, of high standing their noble pursuit, and of wide reputation for ientific knowledge, did not fail publicly to acknowl- dge their loyalty to Christ and his kingdom. They eld their usual prayer meeting on last Sabbath, in ssociation Hall. The voices of the men of Great ritain and America mingled together in the praise God and in earnest supplication to Christ. Hearti- did they acknowledge that there were wants which ience could not supply, a purifying and uplifting of e soul, which can come only from the Spirit of the ord. We rejoice in a confession of Christ so pub- ly made by men of so much worth."

The Remarkable Letter of Samuel Dexter another column deserves especial mention because the time it was written, the celebrity of the author, nd the effect it had upon his political preferment. r. Dexter was a graduate of Harvard and received e honorary degree of LL. D. He was honored by s fellow-citizens with an election to the State legis- ture and to both Houses of Congress. In 1800 he as chosen Secretary of War by President John dams and next year Mr. Jefferson honored him with e appointment of Secretary of the Treasury. He as also president of the first temperance society or- anized in Massachusetts. This was the man whom e lodge marked for defeat in 1814 in the campaign r governor.

—Secretary Stoddard is writing up a full account of e dastardly outrage on S. E. Starry at Dunlap, Kansas, hich will appear in our next. The Kansas brethren pro- ose to use the facts to the best advantage against the dge.

—The Associate Presbyterian, the monthly magazine the "Associate Synod of North America," publishes a rong article against the Grand Army of the Republic in s September number.

—The Wyoming county, N. Y., Prohibition conven- on, nominated Anti-masons on its ticket throughout— excellent example to be followed throughout the coun- y.

—Bro. Stoddard, New York State agent, spoke Sept. 3d in the United Brethren church at Sickles' Corners. ast Friday he went to Woodhull, Steuben county, where e had several appointments and hoped to arouse a good terest for reform.

—Bro. J. B. Galloway, pastor of the Covenanter church Vernon, Wis., asks the State Association of Wisconsin hold their next convention at Waukesha, the celebrat- l summer resort.

—The Wesleyan interprets the friendly introduction of . John at Madison, Wis., by Mr. Fratt, the Democratic ominee for governor, to party trickery, but does not otice that for the act (an entirely honorable one) Mr. ratt is deserted of the liquor men, who put their money to the Republican "barrel." We regret to note, also, at Bro. Wardner urges against voting for St. John be- use it would help Cleveland. If Pomeroy was running e should hope the Wesleyan would not object to him on e same ground.

—The Weekly Review, Birmingham, Alabama, a Repub- can journal with the motto: "Our Hope—A Free ress," publishes Sept. 24, a communication on the "Ma- nic New Birth," which is one of the most radical argu- ents we have ever seen in the columns of a local jour- al. There are not in the North a half dozen papers of e same class that would dare to so boldly assail the dge.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from Kansas Saturday fternoon. Through some mistake about notices the at ndance was uufortunately small at the business meet- gs, but in the evening the crowd was out, many Masons nong the number, all anxious to see the man who was old enough to face the lodge though threatening and at- mpting to take his life. Bro. Starry went through his ork successfully and without interruption. A full re- rt will be given by the Secretary.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Byron, Ill., Sept. 21, 1884.

Yesterday I preached in the morning, and listened to an excellent sermon from Bro. Gibson in the evening. He is a thorough, practical worker, and right on questions of reform. At 4 o'clock P. M., I attend and took part in a Band of Hope meeting under the superintendence of Mrs. H. M. Andrews, a graduate of Wheaton. This Band is three months old, has a membership of 130, and the triple pledge of total abstinence from liquor, tobacco, and profanity. Besides routine business, there were two recitations by members, and Mrs. Jones gave items of interest from a temperance convention she had recently attended at Rockford.

En route for Normal I was detained over night at Amboy where I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Lewis and called on Bro. Bear, whom I found full in the faith. These brethren are assailed and hindered in the Lord's work by lodge and rum demons, but nothing daunted they go quietly on, working and testifying for the Master.

Lawrence, Kas., Sept. 27.—The meetings at Normal were not largely attended, but a good beginning has been made for future work in McLean county, which ought to be followed up without delay. Friends there take less interest in the political than the religious part of our work, and voting in different parties and adhering to ecclesiastical bodies quite diverse, they will heartily concur in any non-partisan, undenominational effort against the lodge and saloon enemies.

Leaving Normal at 4: 10 A. M., the 26th, I reached this city at 11: 45 P. M. I have to-day been calling on pastors and friends, and with Bro. Feemster distributing bills. I am to attend Friends' meeting at 10 A. M., and to preach in the U. B. church, North Lawrence, in the afternoon. I learn more particulars of Bro. Starry's case from Bro. Feemster, and do not intend leaving the State until I find the bottom of what now appears to have been a deliberately planned attempt to murder, and which, when Bro. Starry fell senseless, the villains supposed had been a success. Brethren are expected from different parts, and the outlook is good for the convention.

J. P. S.

CONNECTICUT REVISITED.

Westerly, R. I., Sept. 30, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—I left Washington, D. C., on the 18th, reached New York at 3: 30 P. M., and at 5 o'clock left on the magnificent Sound steamer, "City of Worcester," for New London. We passed round the Battery and Castle Garden, under the great Brooklyn Bridge, up the East River through Hell Gate, until darkness shut out the many objects of interest and left us a night of quiet sleep, far pleasanter than railroad travel. At seven A. M. I reached Willimantic, and was most kindly received by Bro. J. A. Conant. We soon arranged for our State meeting and sent out notices. In the evening I attended a meeting of the Prohibition Club and listened to an excellent address. On Saturday I visited Putnam and called on numerous and earnest friends. In the evening I returned and preached three times on Sabbath in Mission Hall to not large, but most earnest congregations. At 5 P. M. my discourse was on prohibition before the Reform Club.

On Monday I went to Windsor, visiting Bros. Ellsworth, Collins and others. Next day visited friends in Hartford; among others, pastor Ahgren, who is doing a noble work among the Swedish people, and who, like Paul, supports himself mainly by the labor of his own hands. From here I went to Simsbury, calling on Bro. Reid and staying at Montague with Bro. Philip Bacon, whose zeal for reform has not a whit abated. On Wednesday I visited the pastor of the Congregational church in Simsbury, together with a member of the church who was troubled because two of the deacons are Freemasons. We found the pastor and his good wife profoundly ignorant of the whole subject, and greatly astonished that any one should object to an institution that "includes some of the best men in the land." They promised, however, that they would read Pres. Finney's book. I cannot say that I was at all sanguine that they will see the truth. Isaiah said of some, "Their eyes have they closed, lest at any time they should see with their eyes," etc.

From here I went to Southington and found some warm friends, among them Rev. Hezekiah Davis, who "does not shun to declare the whole counsel of God," and Bro. H. Lockwood, who has renounced Masonry for Christ's sake. From here I went to New Haven and called on Mrs. Dunning, whose interest in our reform and in Wheaton people was cheering. At Whitney I found kindred and sympathizing friends, and among them Rev. Putnam who has been the pastor of the Congregational church for about forty years. He told me he was an original Anti-mason, having lived in western New York in the Morgan times. He now feels that he is too old for aggressive work, but assured me of his earnest sympathy.

From here I went to Middletown and visited the venerable Jesse Baldwin, who in his eighty-first year is still strong for the right, and stopping over night at East Hampton I reached Willimantic on Saturday.

On Sabbath I preached twice in Mission Hall. At five P. M. on prohibition from Esther 4: 14: "If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time," etc. In the evening we had a most pleasant and profitable meeting at the house of sister Lizzie Smith. This dear sister has been confined to her bed for more than forty years. She has most wonderfully illustrated the power of the Gospel by her cheerful patience, her faithful admonitions and fervent prayers. It was a great privilege to be instructed by her wonderful experience.

On Monday I went to New London, where a good work is being done for prohibition, the club subscribing for one hundred copies of the Weekly Witness for free distribution. I stopped also at Mystic, a decided temperance town, and reached this, the first town in Rhode Island, at six P. M. Mrs. Foster, of Iowa, has recently spoken here, and many have been persuaded to waive the temperance question so far as the Presidency is concerned. When will the people learn that consistency is a great element of success, and that "he that is unjust in that which is least is unjust also in much"? H. H. Hinman.

WISCONSIN NOTES.

Rev. Isaac Bancroft, State Agent for Wisconsin, reports for five days in August and twenty-six days in September. During this time he traveled 575 miles, supplied 780 families with portions of our literature. Six families refused to take anti-secrecy literature even as a gift. One Odd-fellow said that his lodge had got one of our expositions for every member, and that they worked by them.

"I have enjoyed my work," he continues, "very much, notwithstanding I have had a good deal of opposition. From what I know of the public sentiment, I am satisfied that a majority of the people in Wisconsin are in favor of prohibition. If every person would vote their convictions we should win. I hope God will so move the people that they will."

THE NEW ASSOCIATION IN McLEAN CO., ILL.

Bloomington, Ill., Sept., 28, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—Thinking a short report of our meetings in Normal would be acceptable, I write you. Brethren Browne and Stoddard have been here, sown the seed, and are gone. What the harvest will be doth not yet appear.

We had three lectures in as many evenings, and held a session of the McLean county Christian Association, whereof Joseph Stuckey of Danvers is president, and the writer was chosen secretary. The attendance was not large, owing to lodge espionage and intimidation, but those who heard the truth were of the sober, sincere class who entertain moral convictions. Some of the brave old spirits were developed who remember the scenes from 1826 to 1830, and some friends of righteousness came forward through great reproach to bid us God speed in the reform.

The first evening Bro. Stoddard spoke in his usual forcible way to a fair audience, and we noticed quite a number about the doors and windows unwilling to show their faces and let it be known who they were. The next evening Bro. Browne gave us a master-piece in his lecture on the "Religion of the Lodge." A good audience was present, and it could not be but impressions were made for good.

Many causes conspired to make the attendance light; but we are now in the field for work, and if we are spared we confidently expect to be in at the last dying kick of the great Masonic wild boar. A slight canvass of the neighborhood abundantly proves the fact that there is nothing more universally feared and hated than the lodge. Their extreme sensitiveness to all discussion arises from conscious weakness. Their position is not unlike that of the slave-holders; discussion is likely to bring insurrection about their ears. Their whole institution is rotten with sin, and only a slight jostle is necessary to send the thing headlong. Hoping to be able to dig many a cavity in their shaky foundation, and give many a vigorous push to their overthrow, and to the building up of our Lord's kingdom on earth, I am, fraternally yours, H. D. Whitcomb.

The Home.

SUMMER IS GOING.

FAREWELL.

Summer is fading; the broad leaves that grew
So freshly green when June was young are falling;
And all the whisper-haunted forest through
The restless birds in saddened tones are calling From rustling hazel copse and tangled dell,
"Farewell, sweet summer,
Fragrant, fruity summer,
Sweet farewell!"

Upon the windy hill, in many a field,
The honey bees hum slow above the clover,
Gleaning the latest sweets its bloom can yield;
And, knowing that their harvest time is over,
Sing half a lullaby and half a knell,
"Farewell, sweet summer,
Honey-laden summer,
Sweet farewell!"

The little brook that bubbles 'mid the ferns,
O'er twisted roots and sandy shadows playing,
Seems fain to linger in its eddied turns,
And with a plaintive, purring voice is saying Sadder and sweeter than my song can tell,
"Farewell, sweet summer,
Warm and dreamy summer,
Sweet farewell!"

The fitful breeze sweeps down the winding arc
With gold and crimson leaves before it flying;
Its gusty laughter has no sign of pain,
But in the lulls it sinks in gentle sighing,
And mourns the summer's early broken spell,
"Farewell, sweet summer,
Rosy, blooming summer,
Sweet farewell!"

So bird, and bee, and brook, and breeze make moan,
With melancholy song their loss complaining;
I, too, must join them, as I walk alone
Among the sights and sounds of summer's waning;
I, too, have loved the season passing well—
So, farewell summer,
Fair but faded summer,
Sweet farewell!

HER MONUMENT.

She built it herself; and yet she did not know that she had a monument. She lived in it; but she did not know that it existed.

She never dreamed that she was great; or that she was specially useful; or that she had achieved anything worth living for. Sometimes when she read the stories of historic heroines she, too, had her "dream of fair women," and looked with a sigh upon her life made up of little deeds, so little that even she who did them was not conscious of the doing, she whose loom moved so noiselessly that she neither thought how long she was at it nor what a beautiful pattern she was weaving. Indeed, it would have seemed to her, if she had ever thought about herself or her work, to weave herself. But she did not. Her unconsciousness was her charm. Self-consciousness would have destroyed her monument.

She was not a great woman; at least no one thought her so. In truth they did not think much about her; they simply loved her. She wrote no books; her letters never circulated in a wider circle than that of a few favored friends. Her song of love was too sacred and she was too shy to sing it to the public or to strangers. She was not president of a Dorcas Society; nor the life of a sewing circle; nor a leader in the woman's prayer meeting; nor the teacher of a great Bible class. She had admiration for women with a "gift;" sometimes she was a trifle tempted to envy them; but she had no "gift" herself. She did not even sing in the choir. Her only singing was a lullaby to her own baby. As to public speaking, she never was on a platform in her life; never lectured—not even her husband; never led in prayer, except when her husband was away from home, and then only by reading in a tremulous voice from a book at family prayers. This was the one occasion of her life when self-consciousness came in to terrify her and deprive her of that simple naturalness which was her gift.

Her monument was at home. It grew up quietly, as quietly as a flower grows, and no one knew, she did not know herself, how much she had done to tend and water and train it. Her husband had absolute trust in her. He earned the money; she expended it. And as she put as much thought in her expenditure as he put in his earning, each dollar was doubled in the expending. She had inherited that mysterious faculty which we call taste; and she cultivated it with fidelity. Every home she visited she studied, though always unconsciously, as though it were a museum or an art gallery; and from every visit she brought away some thought which came out of the alembic of her loving imagination fitted to its appropriate place in her own home. She was too genuine to be an imitator; for imitation is always of kin to falsehood; and she abhorred falsehood. She was patient with everything but a lie. So she never copied in her own home or on her own person what she had seen elsewhere; yet everything she saw elsewhere entered into and helped complete the perfect picture of life which she was always painting with deft fingers in everything from the honeysuckle which she trained over the door, to the bureau in the guest's room which her designing made a new work of art for every new friend, if it were only by a new nosegay and a change of vases. Putting her own personality into her home, making every room and almost every article of furniture speak of her, she had the gift to draw out from ever guest and personality, and make him at home, and so make him his truest and best self. Neither man nor woman of the world could long resist the subtle influence of that home; the warmth of its truth and love thawed out the frozen proprieties from impersonated etiquette; and whatever circle of friends sat on the broad piazza in summer or gathered around the open fire in winter knew for a time the rare joy of liberty—the liberty of perfect truth and perfect love. Her home was hospitable because her heart was large; and any one was her friend to whom she could minister. But her heart was like the old Jewish Temple—strangers came into the court of Gentiles, friends into an inner court; her husband and her children found a court yet nearer her heart of hearts; yet even they knew that there was a Holy of Holies which she kept for her God, and they loved and revered her the more for it. So strangely was commingled in her the inclusiveness and the exclusiveness of love, its hospitality and its reserve.

Ah! blessed home-builder! You have no cause to envy women with a "gift." For there is nothing so sacred on earth as a home; and no priest on earth so divine as the wife and mother who makes it; and no gift so great as the gift which grafts this bud of heaven on the common stock of earth. "Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."—Christian Union.

A PERFECT WOMAN.

Was there ever a eulogy on woman to rival Proverbs 31? A glory of enthusiasm flushes through a womanly being to find the Lord has made her a creature of power. Let her beware that the "heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil," and that "she will do him good and not evil, all the days of her life." How the Omniscient enlarges on the industry of the good woman, and the comfort and adorning she gathers into a household! What a brave perfection this woman of whom it is written by God's Spirit, "strength and honor are her clothing, and she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed: her husband also and he praiseth her. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all." Thus much for woman in her usual lot of wife; but here follows a universal application: "Favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised. Give her the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates." Why should a feminine ever be dissatisfied with the sphere Providence assigns her? She may be feebler in physique and brain than man, but a subtle influence is hers he owns not. Even if wanting in seeming force, as some love to represent her, let her take comfort, for "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—Sunday Magazine.

HOW TO HAVE CHEERFUL WIVES.

Better than gold to a man is a cheerful wife. But he must do his part toward making her cheerful. It is easy enough for a man to marry a happy woman. But the bride-expectant, when she thought how happy she would be, never contemplated the picture of a husband coming home cross as a bear, and going to bed without speaking to her; she had never thought of the long evenings when he wouldn't come at all; nor of his bringing some one home to dinner without warning or preparation; or his awful profanity over so trifling a matter as her little bill of expenses. She had no idea, in fact, there could be anything but happiness in married life, and she had determined to be happy, and to distribute her happiness to those around her. It is not her fault if she doesn't succeed. Men as a rule, do not exert themselves to secure their wives' happiness. They know that it requires a constant and great effort to possess property, and be secure in its value in the midst of constant commercial changes. The cheerfulness, the happy, hopeful character which every woman displays at the beginning of marriage is not so easily lost as a fortune; it requires but a small share of attention but it requires attntion, and those who forget this will find that it is possible to lose a treasure as precious as woman's cheerfulness, yea, as woman's love.

SWEET MINDED WOMEN.

So great is the influence of a sweet minded woman on those around her that it is almost boundless. It is to her that friends come in seasons of sorrow and sickness for help and comfort; one soothing touch of her kindly hand works wonders in the feverish child; a few words let fall from her lips in the ear of a sorrowing sister do much to raise the load of grief that is bowing its victim down to the dust in anguish. The husband comes home worn out with the pressure of business, and feeling irritable with the world in general; but when he enters the cosy sitting-room, and sees the blaze of the bright fire, and meets his wife's smiling face, he succumbs in a moment to the soothing influences which act as the balm of Gilead to his wounded spirits, that are wearied with the stern realities of life. The rough school boy flies in a rage from the taunts of his companions to find solace in his mother's smile; the little one, full of grief with her large trouble, finds a haven of rest on its mother's breast; and so one might go on with instance after instance of the influence that a sweet minded woman has in the social life with which she is connected. Beauty is an insignificant power when compared with hers.—Ex.

Men demand women to be physically, mentally, and morally pure before venturing to offer heart and hand, before placing their hopes and loves in the hands of women. This is right. To this strict social law we may credit the physical and moral status of women. Men are self-respecting when considering their relations to women. Women are not self-respecting when taken in relation to their association with men.

Pure in person, they will accept and encourage the association of men reeking in the physical filth of tobacco, intoxicants, and lewd associations. Moral themselves they permit men to come to them from the club room defiled in mind by obscene and unworthy conversation and associates, without so much as a sign of protest. The great social want of the hour is a self-respecting womanhood; a womanhood so grand as to crown the work of the school and the church by a home-life with its social laws as strict for boys and men as for girls and women. When young women shall demand young men to be as pure as young men now demand young women to be, then and not till then, shall we see the nature of man assert itself.—Our Herald.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MAKE THE BEST OF IT.

What's the use of always fretting
Over ills that can't be cured?
What's the use of finding fault with
What we know must be endured?

Does it make our burdens lighter
If we grumble 'neath their load?
Does it make life's pathway smoother
If we fret about the road?

Better use our time than fill it
Full of sighs and vain regrets
Over some imagined blunder—
As does he who always frets.

We cannot expect life's pathway
To be always strewn with flowers,
Nor the time that God has given
To be all made of happy hours.

Storms will follow every sunshine,
Grief be mixed with every joy;
And 'tis best that it should be so—
Gold's too soft without alloy.

"Half our trouble's our invention;"
We're to blame for half our strife;
Then, if life is what we make it,
Why not make the best of life?

AN OLD DOG'S JOURNEY.

I had the following story from a lady, Mrs. Parmenter, which I thought might please the children who read your excellent paper.

Mrs. Parmenter has just moved down from Dakota to Shamrock in Jackson Co., Wis. When she left Canton, Lincoln Co., Dakota, a friend gave them a dog of the terrier species and they brought him to Shamrock all

. He stayed there until they were well settled, and then he left one morning without bidding any of good-bye for his old friends in Dakota, where he ed the 13th of July last, having spent about twenty-days in his journey of 400 miles. They wrote that log was well pleased to meet the children he had left akota, and I do not believe those children will ever their consent to have the faithful old dog leave again. They wrote that he was so foot-sore that uld hardly walk when he got home.

ISAAC BANCROFT.

ON THE WRONG SIDE.

a beautiful July evening, as the railway train ap-ched the station, a pleasant-looking group appeared he platform—a tall, dark gentleman, with a fair-d lady on his arm, and several bright, lovely chilat their side, all evidently on the outlook for some d's arrival. The engine hurried past, the carriages wed; the lady held back her youngest child, while usband and the others hastened forward.

"here is Aunt May, all right!" said a little boy, clap-his hands, as he looked up into one of the cars.

unt May soon emerged, a short, slight figure, her fair and blue eyes showing her relationship to the er rather than the father of the merry little band were so eager to welcome her. She was not young, er bright smile and fair complexion made her ap-much younger than her real age; and the children dered her almost one of themselves. She had been absent at this time on a day's excursion; and, to e by her welcome back, that had been thought quite enough.

r reticule, parasol, etc., having been disposed of g the children, all wishing some share in the good of "helping Aunt May," the whole party walked wards to a small but comfortable dwelling, beautisituated in a Highland valley about a mile from the

nd you must tell us all your adventures, Aunt May,"
the eldest girl.

am thankful to say, my dear, I have had no advento-day. I found my friends well, and spent a very ant day with them, and had a safe journey there back again."

h, but you must have something to tell us about—thing to make a story of," said little Charlie.

Vell, I shall tell you something which made me think od deal on my way home; and perhaps it will make all think a little, and that will be useful. After din-when it was time to go, my friend, Miss B——, ed with me to the station. It was a long walk from odgings, and the day so hot that we were very tired, obliged to hurry. We were in time, but not much
; for just as we got on the platform the engine puffing along; and Miss B—— said to me sudden-ith such a frightened look:—

Are you sure we are not on the wrong side?'

Oh, no,' I replied; 'I took care to inquire and make as to that when I first arrived in the morning.'

o she kissed me and said good-bye, and I stepped ly into the carriage. But when we were on the t of starting, I heard a cry of distress on the other of the line. I looked out, and saw a woman whom lway porter was keeping fast hold of.

Oh,' she cried, 'let me go! let me cross! I shall be ne yet! I am on the wrong side!'.

No,' said the porter; 'you should have crossed at it would be too dangerous now.'

nd then we started, and I only saw her look of de-
, and heard her cry, 'Oh, my baby! what shall
'"

Poor woman. I suppose," said Mary, "she had been ng friends, like you, and had left a baby at home.
t would she do?"

his is Saturday night; so, if she was too far from e to walk, she would probably be kept till Monday ——, and her family left in distress all that time. I very sorry for her, and then I began to think of my d's question to myself, 'Are you sure you are not on wrong side?' I thought if I had made a mistake how essed I should have been, and how anxious your and mamma would have felt all to-morrow; for it the last train, and you know there is no telegraph to L——. And then I thought, if a mistake in a day's excursion would have made myself and others nhappy, oh, what would it be, at the end of life's ney, to find one's self on the wrong side! Do you erstand what I mean, Mary?"

ary was the eldest of the little group. She looked e as she replied, "Yes, auntie; you mean when the teous are separated from the wicked, to find ours on the wrong side."

How dreadful that would be! And always remember, e are just two roads through this life on earth—one h will end in the place of darkness and despair, and other leading to that blessed home above, which s calls his Father's house, where those who love and him are to be happy forever. And there is a broad of separation between the two ways. The travelers ne one side, whether they are old or young, are care-about God and heavenly things; they indulge proud, y, selfish tempers, and speak unkind and untrue
s. The travelers on the opposite road are humble, e, and holy, with hearts full of love to God and to another. We all begin life on the wrong side; we ll born into this world sinful creatures, who begin n as soon as we can speak or understand. Now, the great question for every one to consider, who is old enough to understand what it means, should be like that of my kind friend to myself, 'Are you sure you are not on the wrong side?' I felt so thankful this evening that I could answer in my heart, Yes; by the goodness and grace of God I do feel sure that I am loving and trusting in Jesus, and seeking to obey his commands, and that he is leading me in the way to heaven. Oh, my dear children, how happy those are who cross the line early, who have no need to be frightened and hurried at the last, who give their young hearts to the Saviour, and ask him to keep them all their lives walking in the way of his commandments. They will be happy all through the journey; for his ways are ways of pleasantness and peace; and happiest of all at the end, when he shall say to each of them, 'Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"—Family Treasury.

RIGHT UP AND KISS HER.

A father, talking to his careless daughter, said: "I want to speak to you of your mother. It may be that you have noticed a care-worn look upon her face lately. Of course, it has not been brought there by any act of yours, still, it is your duty to chase it away. I want you to get up to-morrow morning and get breakfast, and when your mother begins to express surprise, go right up and kiss her. You can't imagine how it will brighten up her dear face. Besides, you owe her a kiss or two. Away back when you were little, she kissed you, when no one was tempted by your fever-tainted breath and swollen face. You were not so attractive then as now. And through those years of sunshine and shadows, she was always ready to cure by the magic of a mother's kiss the little dirty, chubby hands whenever they were injured in their first skirmishes with this rough, cold world. And then the midnight kisses with which she routed so many bad dreams, as she leaned over your restless pillow, have all been on interest these long years. Of course, she is not so pretty and kissable as you are, but if you had done your share of the work during the past ten years, the contrast would not have been so marked. Her face has more wrinkles than yours, far more, and yet if you were sick, that face would appear more beautiful than any angel's as it hovered over you, watching every opportunity to minister to your comfort; and every one of those wrinkles would appear as bright as wavelets of sunshine chasing each other over her dear face. She will leave you one of these days. These burdens, if not lifted from her shoulders, will break her down. Those rough, hard hands that did so many unnecessary things for you will be crossed upon her lifeless breast. Those neglected lips that gave you your first baby kiss will be closed forever, and those tired eyes will have opened into eternity, and then you will appreciate your mother, but it will be too late."

POOR GIRLS.

The poorest girls in the world are those who have never been taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them; they have been taught to despise labor and depend on others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. If misfortune comes upon their friends, as it often does, their case is hopeless. The most forlorn and miserable women upon earth belong to this class. It belongs to parents to protect their daughters from this deplorable condition. They do them a great wrong if they neglect it. Every daughter should be taught to earn her own living. The rich as well as the poor require this training. The wheel of fortune turns swiftly around—the rich are likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill to labor is no disadvantage to the rich, and is indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do parents must teach their daughters to work; no reform is more imperative than this.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION MARCHING ON.

The votes on Constitutional Amendments in Kansas, Iowa, Ohio and Maine, while they are not claimed as party votes, for they are not, show that the people believe in Prohibition. These votes deserve special notice as a triumphant answer to those who assert that "the people are not ready; they must be educated up to Prohibition."

In November, 1880, 108,507 citizens of Kansas voted for a Prohibitory Amendment, and it was adopted by a majority of 7,998.

On June 27, 1882, 155,436 citizens of Iowa did the same, giving a majority of 29,759 for a Prohibitory Amendment.

October 9, 1883, 323,189 citizens of Ohio voted for a Prohibitory Amendment, and were counted; while a large number estimated at from 40,000 to 60,000 who voted, were treated as colored voters are sometimes treated at the South—not counted. Of 5,323 votes cast for the Amendment in Trumbull county, only 3,000 were returned.

September 8, 1884, after thirty years of trial, the people of Maine by a majority of 44,283 placed prohibition in the Constitution, making it a part of the organic law.

Maryland, a Democratic State, is largely prohibition under a local option law—so largely that the Prohibitionists threaten to carry it.

West Virginia, Democratic, has forty-three out of its fifty-four counties prohibition.

Georgia, Democratic, has ninety counties where, United States Senator Joseph E. Brown says, you can neither buy, sell, nor steal any whisky.

Tennessee, Democratic, has a law prohibiting a saloon within four miles of a school-house, thus preventing the sale in a large part of the State.

Arkansas, Democratic, has a local option prohibitory law, and along the line of the Fort Smith Railroad for 160 miles there is not a saloon, and counties and towns all over the State are prohibitory.

Missouri, Democratic, has a much more stringent high license law than that of Illinois.

Mississippi and Alabama, Democratic, have very stringent liquor laws, which greatly interfere with the "personal liberty" to sell or drink liquor.

South Carolina, Democratic, has a local option law under which the sale of liquor is prohibited in numerous towns and counties.

Texas, Democratic, came within four votes of the required two-thirds majority in its Legislature for a prohibitory constitutional amendment.

ADVERSE DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF KANSAS.—It is not generally known that by a recent decision of the supreme court of Kansas, the enforcement of prohibitory law has been greatly crippled, so that in many places the people find themselves powerless before the illicit and illegal dramshop. Previous to this decision the county attorney had power to file a complaint and prosecute upon information and belief. But now if a county attorney files a complaint, and verifies it upon belief, he must also attach thereto a statement supported by the oath or affirmation of some other person willing to testify of his own knowledge that the facts and allegations stated in the complaint or information are true. If the county attorney has personal knowledge of the matters and things charged in the information, he may support it by his own oath or affirmation. A correspondent writes from Hutchinson: "We are very much discouraged. For two years we have had no saloons and had fought 'wheels' and other contrivances of the whisky men until we thought that prohibition did prohibit. But now we have a number of saloons, and it looks as if we were taking some backward steps. Our union has had a severe struggle during the past few weeks, because we have been trying to arouse the temperance men. The strongest paper we have in the county, while pretending to be a temperance paper, has turned its influence against us and talked about us unmercifully, because we are determined that we will agitate this question until our temperance men, our council, our mayor and our county attorney will do something to abolish this terrible state of things. We think that it is because of this decision and because resubmission is being talked of and worked for by whisky politicians all over the State, that the whisky dealers have become so bold. It seems to us that Kansas needs help just now more than she has ever needed it before, on this question."—Union Signal.

ANOTHER SUICIDE THROUGH DRINK.—The death of Isaac Newton, Chief Engineer of the Croton Water Department, in New York last Thursday, is a striking exemplification of all that has been said in condemnation of suicide. The deceased was the favorite pupil of John Ericsson, that sturdy inventor who has given to the world so much for power and utility. He managed the engines of Ericsson's Monitor in her famous fight with the Merrimac. Three times during the battle he was carried out of the engine-room in a faint superinduced by the close atmosphere, and he was ignorant of the progress of the fight until he learned of the victory. Again during the war, as assistant engineer of a frigate, he distinguished himself by unusual bravery in the face of a fire by stationing himself in the gangway and threatening to brain any man who attempted to abandon the ship. For this act he was publicly thanked by the Secretary of War. Thus this man, one of the first to venture into what was then termed "a floating iron coffin," and direct its movement in one of the fiercest naval engagements on record; this man who faced a gang of desperate deserters, taking his life in his hand, and who was the recipient of public thanks from the head of the navy for heroic conduct, finally succumbs to the effect of the poison that steals away the brains and takes his own life rather than face the remaining responsibilities of life.—Inter Ocean.

THE FALLACY OF HIGH LICENSE appears more and more marked in Chicago as time progresses. Under the old low license system there were 3,706 licensed saloons last year. During the first period of this year there were 3,316, and for the second period there are at present 3,277. These are being reinforced at the rate of six to eight a day, and the clerk in the city office from whom we obtained the statistics, himself a German, says the indications are that the number for the second period will fully equal, and perhaps exceed, the first. The advocates of the high license system flaunted it as a step towards prohibition, and asserted that it would reduce the number of saloons one half, blot out all the low dives and put the business in the hands of respectable men. It has done neither. The number has been reduced but little, and the few that have been obliged to succumb were of the least objectionable class, small beer shops kept by Germans, often in connection with a grocery and only for the accommodation of their customers. Not a dive has been closed through the operation of high license, nor has the business of saloon-keeping been placed in any more respectable hands. So far from being a step toward prohibition, it has been an obstacle in its path, and has been and is to-day urged as a better system than prohibition by the enemies of the latter. It has served to delay prohibition, and the sooner it is out of the way the sooner the grogshops will be closed. It is neither a regulative nor restrictive measure, and does not serve to mitigate in the least. As a failure and a fraud it is a veritable Jumbo, and the sooner temperance people find it out the better for the temperance cause.—Lever.

The Churches.

—Our Banner says that Rev. Dr. A. M. Milligan of Pittsburgh has improved so much that he has been able to walk out a little, and has attended church. It is not probable, however, that he will be able to resume his labors before next spring.

—Professor J. R. W. Sloane also steadily improves in health. He has changed his residence from Wood's Run, in the suburbs, close by the home of Dr. Milligan, to Arch Street, Allegheny, in order to be near the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, and to be less likely to be interrupted in his dutics as professor.

—The late Michigan Wesleyan Conference made some appointments of interest to the readers of the Cynosure. W. H. Ross is stationed at Barry, H. A. Day at Ingham, C. L. Preston at Cambria, O. S. Grinnell at Grand Rapids, V. M. Thompson at Hartwick, D. A. Richards at Kensington and Brighton, Joel Marlen at Pittsford, W. Wing at Wright, C. G. Fero at White River. C. Powers is general missionary; S. B. Shaw, conference missionary, and E. Bruce goes to another conference.

—Bishop Crowther, who goes to Africa as the representative of the Church of England, was sold on the gold coast fifty-eight years ago for a hogshead of rum.

—Membership in secret societies is made a test of fellowship in the Mennonite church. This rule, we are informed, is well enforced except in a branch that has seceded from the old church.—Gospel Messenger.

—There has been a deep religious awakening in the Presbyterian church in Canton, Miss. Sixty-one persons have made a profession of faith in Christ.

—Seven hundred out of 2,141 missionaries sent out by the Moravian church have died at their posts. One of them, D. Zeisberger, labored for 63 years with great success among the North American Indians.

—Rev. P. A. Seguin, of the French Protestant cause of this city, has opened in connection with his church and home for the priests, an employment bureau. American and English-speaking people may find it to their advantage to engage a teacher of French, of music and languages, or a governess through him. He would at the same time be happy to receive books for his library and pecuniary assistance in his mission work. Address P. A. Seguin, 44 Blue Island ave., Chicago.

—The Illinois Wesleyan conference meeting at Marengo last month, adopted the following sound resolutions:

Resolved, That we will use all the means within our power to discourage public parades, family reunions, picnics, excursions, the running of trains, including mail and milk trains, and the issuing of papers upon the Sabbath.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that the dominant political partics are under such obligations to the rum power that they pander for votes to the demands of that power, and do not give aid and comfort and encouragement to the cause of temperance; and as a ruler trembled when an apostle preached temperance, and as no drunkard has any promise of eternal life, therefore, further resolved, that it is our duty as Christian men and ministers to cast our influence and votes for temperance candidates, who, if elected, will not tremble in office like a guilty Felix, nor encourage that inebriety which shuts men out from the kingdom of God.

Resolved, That we regard the American Christian home as the foundation of our institutions as a Christian republic, and viewing with horror, as we do, the alarming increase of divorce for multiplied causes in our land, we, ministers of the Illinois Wesleyan conference, mutually pledge ourselves to use our influence against this destructive innovation to the extent of not marrying persons who are divorced for any but Scriptural cause.

—In Missouri a missionary of the American Sunday-School Union found a church thirty years old, meeting in a good house of worship, well appointed as to comforts, with a large congregation, but which never had a Sunday-school. While there was preaching to parents and adults, the children were hunting, fishing, etc. Here he organized a good school with fifty scholars.

—Dr. Sankey, the United Presbyterian pastor, of Rochester, N. Y., lately returned from the Pan-Presbyterian council in Belfast, expresses the belief that "the Presbyterian churches of England, Scotland and Ireland are tending toward ritualism very rapidly. This is especially so in the Scottish churches, surprising as it may seem."

—The difficulties of Gospel work in China can be appreciated only when we remember what terrible, almost fiendish prejudices, it must encounter. In Hong Kong recently, a Chinese pamphlet against the mission work of Christians was circulated, and in it the following passage occurred: "The Europeans do not belong to the human race, but descend from monkeys. Their hearts are devilish, and for that reason, they are called 'foreign devils.' This race of wild beings worship neither the heavens nor the earth; they do not honor their parents, nor have respect for their forefathers. You say: But if this is a race of wild beings, how can they make steamships and railroads and watches, which even the sons of the heavenly kingdom cannot make? You fool! Do you not know that these Europeans, who come into our country under the pretense of preaching a religion, really come only to take the eyes and brains of the dying people, and draw off blood from children? With these eyes, brains and blood they make medical pills, which they sell in their country, and, in this manner, they secure shrewdness to do all these things. But remember what our holy books say: 'The haughty enemy shall surely be conquered. Only let me go ahead, and I swear to you that I will destroy them to the last man, and not one shall return home again."

—Mr. Henry Meyer, of Buda-Pesth, Hungary, writes to the Examiner that Hungary, with its sixteen million of inhabitants, is only nominally a Christian land; that but few of the preachers of the National Church are firm believers, and that unbelief with ignorance reigns. Mr. Meyer came to Buda-Pesth in 1873, and not long after organized a Baptist church. He has suffered imprisonment and from popular abuse, but in the ten years has baptized 629. The church now numbers 499 members, scattered through fifty villages and towns. It has forty mission stations and seventeen Sunday-schools. The members are poor, being mostly day laborers, and, as they alone among the Hungarians refuse to labor on the Lord's day, they are excluded from the more lucrative forms of employment; but their offerings for the year 1883 were not less than $14 per member.

—Black coats and white ties have largely disappeared from the ranks of the Nonconformist ministry, such badges of official distinction being considered by many out of harmony with the spirit of religious equality and freedom which is abroad. It is said that an attempt is being made to induce naval chaplains to abandon these signs of clerical office, and to adopt a naval uniform instead. Truth says of this innovation: "The position of ministers of the Gospel of Peace attached to the military and the naval services is at best somewhat anomalous; but it would be ten times more so if they were required to wear the uniform of belligerents." We have no predilection in favor of a clerical garb, but quite agree with this sentiment. The less belligerent titles and uniforms and methods are adopted in connection with the Gospel of Christ, the better for the world at large.—The Christian.

—Much of Mr. Moody's success is attributed to his perfect faith. When he became convinced that he was an effective worker for the Church (before the burning of Chicago) he abandoned his business, and, following the example of Jesus Christ and his disciples, trusted to Providence for his own support. Of late it has been a common report that Moody was rich—worth half-a-million, etc. Now, if Mr. Moody were rich, it would be an abandonment of his early principles, and it would be inconsistent with his great faith. Inquiry shows that, some years ago, enough money—some $10,000—was reserved from the proceeds of the sale of the Moody and Sankey publications to pay for a farm at Northfield, Mass., and that this farm was presented to Mrs. Moody by the publishers, who are friends of the family. This farm is now utilized as a home and place of schooling for poor boys. Those scholars who can afford it pay $100 a year, but most of them are supported and educated for nothing, and this good work, it is understood, exhausts the entire income of the family. It is stated to The Current on the best of authority that Mr. Moody owed $400 to a gentleman in Chicago, and paid interest on it for several years—and that recently—before he found it convenient to pay off the principal. Mr. Moody, it may thus fairly be stated, is a "square man," and practices precisely what he preaches. Had the possession of wealth been his ultimate aim, he might, probably, be worth vast sums of money to-day.—The Current.

THE PRAYER CURE.

At the Congregational Ministers' Union, Sept. 29, the topic of healing in answer to prayer was discussed. The Rev. Dr. Jeremiah Porter, says the Inter Ocean report, gave an account of the case of Miss Carrie Judd, of Buffalo, an Episcopalian. She suffered from a severe spinal injury and was bed-ridden for a long time. Her correspondence with Connecticut believers in prayer cure resulted in their praying for her on a certain Thursday. She walked that day, improved gradually, and was fully restored. Subsequent pains were regarded as a temptation of the devil, and her sufferings were but temporary. She opened a prayer cure in her house, and during the four years of its operation satisfactory results have been obtained. Dr. Porter related another case—that of a young man named Pardington, who had a spine difficulty. He became so impressed with the doctrines taught in a book on the prayer cure, of which Miss Judd was the author, that he entertained the belief taught therein, and through the prayers of Miss Judd he regained his health. Similar cases were mentioned by Dr. Porter. A North Side minister mentioned the case of Dr. Goodell, who recovered from a serious illness at the very moment prayers were being offered on his behalf by his church (Pilgrim church) in St. Louis. Rev. Robert Nourse, of LaCrosse, Wis., told how a lady who was a confirmed invalid was cured in less than a week at the Walnut Hill, Philadelphia, prayer cure, by the prayers of Miss Millard, in charge. Dr. Nourse subsequently prayed for an invalid lady and for his own daughter, who was dangerously ill, and both were restored to health. The prayer-cure people, he said, believed that teaching and healing went together. Some of the ministers present denied the supernatural power of healing, but attribute the recovery to some mental phenomena.

THE M'ALL MISSION.

The Evangelistic Mission in France, popularly known as the McAll Mission, has been in operation now for some twelve years. The growth of its work has been remarkable, and it points forward to great changes in the religious life of France. The facts of its history are very striking, and from those facts important lessons may be drawn.

Plain rooms are hired, often shop-rooms, opening directly on the street. These rooms are plainly fitted up with seats, a few illuminated texts of Scripture, hung on the wall, being the only ornaments; and there, each night in the week, Gospel services are held. Plain and simple discourses are preached, and there is a great deal of singing. Many of the hymns are translations of the Gospel Hymns, so popular in this country and in England, and a cabinet organ is generally used to lead the music. The meetings are sometimes thrown open for testimonies by those who have received spiritual benefits in them. For the year 1883 eighty-seven such stations were reported, about half of them being in Paris, and the other half in other French cities. Sunday-schools are held in many places, also mothers' meetings, and other gatherings germane to the principal objects of the mission. The places of meeting are found in all parts of Paris. The Salle New York, so-called because fitted up by friends in this city, is on the Rue de Rivoli, near the Tour St. Jacques; the Salle Philadelphia is on the Rue St. Honore, near the Madeleine; the Salle Baltimore is on the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, while others are in Belleville, in the Quartier Latin, and in other parts of the city. The audiences differ a little, according to location, but in general, the attendance is of the working class. The sittings vary from a hundred to five hundred, the total for the eighty-seven stations being 14,065. The rooms have been well filled by attentive congregations. Exclusive of the regular Protestant places of worship, there are something like a hundred and fifty mission rooms at present open in France.

The expenses of the McAll Mission the past year were something over $60,000. Of this, $13,174 came from France and Switzerland, most of the remainder from Great Britain and the United States.—Independent.

THE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each, per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Free-masonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Ma- SONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the In- ITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris- TIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De- GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re- PUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc. and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated, A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Gecslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret SOCIETIES. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen $2 50

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M S Newcomer and Elder G W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1 25.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

FARM NOTES.

CONTAGIOUS PLEURO-PNEUMONIA OF CATTLE.

As the term indicates, the lungs and the pleuræ are the seat of this disease. It is not generally considered to be an inflammatory disorder, and in so far as local lesions are concerned they are usually confined to an exudation of a lymph into the loose connective tissues of the lung substance, and into the cavities surrounding the lungs, where it floats in a thin, watery, amber-colored fluid, or unites the lungs to the ribs, diaphragm, and heart-sac. Occasionally the sac inclosing the heart is distended with fluid containing the same kind of coagulated lymph. The disease is usually confined to one lung, but may affect both. One attack often renders the animal insusceptible to a second. During its course the disease generates a specific virus which is capable of inoculating other animals of the same species with the same disastrous malady; nor does this virus seem to lose any of its vitality by passing from animal to animal. Furthermore, it is carried in the air for at least 300 feet, and on clothing, hay, straw, cars, boats, diseased meat, etc., and may be preserved in stables for months.

PERIOD OF INCUBATION

The period which elapses from the time the animal is exposed until the disease begins to show signs of development, varies from 12 to about 120 days. A rise in the temperature of the body, which is to be detected by the clinical thermometer, is the first sign of the disease which can be detected. The natural temperature in cattle is about 101 deg. F.; so that when the thermometer registers above 102 deg. F., in an infected district, the animal may be considered in the suspected list.

SYMPTOMS.

But the first symptom to attract attention is, as a rule, the presence of a short, dry, husky cough, of such a peculiar nature as to be always remembered, which is first heard in the early morning, or while the animal is drinking. At this time the appetite falls off a little, and chewing of the cud is less active than common. Instead of breathing 14 or 15 times to the minute, the respirations vary from 20 to 30. The expiration of air from the lungs is often accompanied by a faint moan or grunt. The cough grows more frequent, harsh, and painful; the back is slightly arched, the coat looks dead, and feels rough and harsh to the touch, while in places it stands erect; pressure along each side of the back-bone, especially in the neighborhood of the loins, and in the spaces between the ribs, causing pain and flinching. The loss of milk is marked, from the appearance of the first severe symptoms, until it is finally suspended at the height of the malady. The patient losses flesh rapidly, the temperature of the surface of the body varies, the extremities being alternately hot and cold. Sometimes, but by no means always, a slight discharge takes place from the nose. The pulse is rapid, and usually weak and thready. During the development of these symptoms the lungs are undergoing changes which may readily be detected by the expert in chest diseases; for by reason of the exudation of lymph the air cells in the lungs are crowded upon and admit but a small quantity of air to the affected parts; the pleura becomes roughened and thickened, thereby giving rise to the peculiar friction sound of pleurisy. In the second stage the lung becomes solid in part, and no air enters the small cells—a condition to be detected by the dull sound of percussion and the loss of the murmur of healthy respiration. The temperature varies now from 103 deg. to 106 deg. F., and the pulse runs from 60 to 100 beats per minute, and is quite weak. The extremities are cold; the front legs are apart, so as to facilitate breathing, which becomes more and more labored; the appetite is entirely lost; the milk dried up; the passages from the bowels hard and dark-colored; the urine scanty and high-colored, while drinking causes hard and painful coughing. The patient is loth to move, seldom lies down, but stands, with distended nostrils, moaning at every respiration, while from the eyes and nose is discharged a thickish, yellow fluid, and the breath is hot and offensive. All these symptoms grow worse from day to day, as the disease invades the previously healthy lung; breathing is effected only by the greatest effort; the pulse is so small and weak as scarcely to be felt; the skin clings to the wasted frame of bones; dropsy of the dewlap takes place; the patient is scarcely conscious of his surroundings, but stands and grinds the teeth; the abdomen fills with gas; diarrhœa sets in, followed by seemingly painless death.

COURSE AND TERMINATION.

Of course there are many variations of minor importance from the case described above, which would be considered a typical one; but they are not sufficiently great, as a rule, to cover or mask the true nature of the disease. Often death may occur early in the disease from an obstinate diarrhœa or other complication; in other cases the patient recovers, after a long period, a measure of his former health, and may even be fattened for beef; while still others may begin with such mild symptoms and with such slight evidences of the disease as to deceive all but an expert. As a general thing it can be said that the disease runs the most rapid course in young, vigorous animals, and that a short period of incubation almost insures a rapid course. As a rule, death takes place in the second stage of the disease, and is due to loss of function of the lung, gangrene, diarrhœa, or gradual loss of strength from high fever, etc., Even in mild cases, where the animal appears to recover, the lungs remain diseased and the subject is long capable of infecting others. In nearly if not in all cases a post mortem examination shows the old lesions months and years after the attack.

PERCENTAGE OF LOSSES.

The percentage of deaths is greatest at the beginning of an outbreak, when it often reaches from 60 to 90 per cent. of the animals infected. Later on, when virus seems to have lost much of its virulency, the mortality may fall as low as 15 or 20 per cent. Other losses are to be taken into consideration beside the dead. There is the loss of milk, which is a very important item in a dairy country; the loss of time, medicine, care, condition (which is equivalent to a certain amount of food), and the privilege of replacing the dead with new purchases.

MEANS OF DIAGNOSIS.

Contageous Pleuro-pneumonia is to be distinguished from simple pneumonia largely by its history. If the animal has come from an infected district, or on infected cars, boats, roads, etc.; if the disease develops slowly and without regard to the weather or other causes; if other cattle take it from the newly purchased, then there can be no question as to the nature of the malady.

POINTS TO REMEMBER.

This disease does not develop spontaneously. Cattle raised in Kansas, or those which have been here for six months, and during that time not in contact with cattle from the East, cannot have the disease. Tuberculosis and Bronchitis, caused by worms, may readily be mistaken for Pleuro-pneumonia.

TREATMENT.

No treatment should be permitted in Kansas, except the destruction of every diseased animal, every exposed animal, and everything which could possibly convey infection.—A. A. Holcombe, State Veterinarian, in Kansas Report of Board of Agriculture.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the Evening Journal, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

There is great rejoicing in Spain over e identification of the bones found four ars ago under the high altar of the thedral of Santiago as those of the ostle James, the patron saint of all ous Spaniards. The precious relics are d to have been concealed there from ar of Moorish incursions, on the foun-tion of the cathedral, in the year 1100, Golmiroz, the first archbishop. The pal authorities at Rome have lately irmed the authenticity of these relics.

The big stone tower of the Philadelphia blic buildings, now under process of ection, will be finished by the end of e season of 1886, and will then be 340 et high. Some specimens of the peculiar germ hich the now famous Dr. Koch has dis-vered in India, Egypt, and latterly in ance, in the bodies of persons who have ed of the cholera, and to the presence which he attributes that terrible burge, were exhibited for the first time public in London on July 17, at the perial Theatre, by the aid of a gigantic croscope. The germs—no longer in an tive state—had been specially procured om the cholera district in the South of ance. As magnified some two million nes, and shown by the aid of the elec-c light, they appeared nearly of the e of the palm of one's hand. They ere quite colorless, and in the shape of ils, representing circles and shapes not like the figure 8, precisely as described Dr. Koch's work on the subject.

The Japanese government is about to ake an important step in improving ade with the Western world. The an-uncement is made that, in consideration an immediate modification of the eaty negotiated with England in 1858, uching the separate jurisdiction of the e treaty ports, Japan is prepared to row open the entire country and to re-ove all restrictions upon foreign resi-nce, travel and trade. We are not in-rmed as yet what these required modifi-tions are; but that the government of at country, under any circumstances, ould thus offer free communication to the rest of the world, must be accept-as another long stride forward in the th of civilization and progress. Japan st now takes from us little besides pe-oleum, but, with the whole country rown open to commerce, there can be question that our trade could be great-enlarged.—Phil. Ledger.

There are at present sixteen locomotive orks in the country, not including the ops owned by railway companies. ennsylvania has five of these, New Jer-y and Massachusetts three each, New ork two, Rhode Island, New Hampshire d Maine one each. These works give mployment to 14,000 men, and every ar add about 2,600 to the 20,000 now in ily use. At present five men have to ork an entire year to complete one of these huge machines. The engines of the best kind weigh about fifty tons, have steel axles, driving wheels 68 inches in diameter, or as tall as the average man, run on paper trucks, have few polished surfaces and are guaranteed to make 60 miles an hour with a train of seven cars. The tanks hold 3,000 gallons of water. Even the minutest parts are interchange-able, and the greatest pieces are made with microscopical exactness, so that a broken or worn out part can be immediately re-placed.—Exchange.

Ocean navigation by steam was begun by Stevens in 1808, and was made an assured success by the voyage of the Savannah in 1819, from Savannah, Ga., to Russia via England. She returned to New York direct from St. Petersburg in twenty-six days. The earliest regular transatlantic line of steamers, the Cunard line, sent its first vessel, the Britannia, from Liverpool July 4, 1840. She was considered a wonder, with a tonnage of 1,350, a length of 207 feet, and made a speed of 8½ knots. The latest arrival, the Etruria, is 500 feet long, has a tonnage of 8,000, and is expected to attain a speed of 19 knots. An idea of the speed and magnitude of the Cunard service may be gained from the fact that during the past year the vessels of that line have traversed a distance equal to nearly six times that between the moon and the earth. In viewing the enterprise of this corporation from the time of its inception to the pre-sent, in comparison with the royal navy, it has much the larger proportional ad-vance.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—In the Georgia election, Wednesday, less than one-third of the vote of the State was polled. There was no opposition to the Democratic ticket.

—It is said that the State election in West Virginia is given up by the Republicans, but in Ohio that party hopes for 18,000 majority and is putting forth the greatest efforts. Mr. Blaine passed through Ohio from Cleveland to Cincinnati last week and visited numerous places in the southern part of the State being everywhere received with great demonstration.

—In imitation of the Republican programme, Gov. Cleveland visited Buffalo last Thursday, arriving in the evening. Though rainy the processions, crowds, illuminations, etc., continued until after midnight.

COUNTRY.

—At a meeting of the Chicago branch of the American Association of the Red Cross, held recently at the Sherman, the entire receipts for the relief of the Ohio flood sufferers were reported as $29,266.97, and expenditures $23,964.59.

—A Chinaman who is married to a white woman, was granted citizen's papers lately at Cleveland, Ohio. Four years ago he took out his first papers, and Judge Tilden decided that he was not barred out by the anti-Chinese act of 1882.

—The hottest night on record for that section was experienced Thursday night at St. Paul, Minn., the thermometer registering 80 at 12 o'clock. The air was stifling, and people feared that a disaster of some kind was imminent.

—Quarantine has been petitioned for against hogs in several counties of Maryland, large numbers being infected with disease akin to diptheria. Statements are made that diseased swine are being slaughtered and shipped in large quantities to Baltimore; but none of the meat has been placed on the market, but it is believed that it is being salted and put away for future sales.

—For ten days past cattle have been dying radidly of an unknown malady in Belmont county, Ohio. Friday it was developed that only stock fed on sorghum blades were affected, farmers being compelled to use this article for fodder, a drought having killed all the grass, and corn not being ready for use.

—Jersey cattle from any State are prohibited from entering Kansas, and cattle from Kentucky, Iowa, Nebraska, and Missouri must undergo a sixty-day quarentine and be perfectly healthy before entrance to the State will be allowed.

—The Alabama and Great Southern shops at Meridian, Miss., were burned Thursday morning, the loss being $250,000. The loss by the destruction of the Glen House on Mount Washington Wednesday night is $225,000, with $100,000 insurance.

—Complaining of pains in her arms, Mrs. Seeley, of Sardinia, N. Y., applied for relief to a physician, who, after an examination, developed sores and applied poultices, the result being the extraction of forty-six needles or portions of needles from the afflicted members. The woman has no knowledge of how they were introduced into her system.

—Within a few days thirty-nine editors and reporters of the New York Herald, many of whom had been connected with the paper for years, were summarily discharged, causing a sensation in journalistic circles.

—The decrease in the public debt during September was $12,140,039; decrease since June 30, 1884, $24,532,181.

—At Frenchtown, Ind., Wednesday morning, the caisson of a railway bridge containing seven men sunk in sixty feet of water. About noon the caisson was floated by air pressure, pumped out, and the men were found alive, but in an exhausted condition, and will recover.

—For some time the thermometer at Lynchburg, Va., has been at 90, and the drought in the southwestern section of the State is without parallel. Forest trees are dying, streams have run dry, and the hay crop has been destroyed. Stock are being taken into Tennessee for water.

—The will of the late John W. Garrett, of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was filed Wednesday, giving his entire estate to his two sons and daughter, and providing that $5,000 shall be given annually for the relief of the poor of Baltimore, and that out of the net income $50,000 shall be expended yearly for benevolent and educational purposes.

—In the hurdle race at Jerome Park Tuesday, the horses Picket and Rebok fell, the latter being impaled by a stake and instantly killed. Picket rolled over his jockey (Locknan), who was carried away in an insensible condition.

—In a coal mine near Oskaloosa, Iowa, Wednesday night, William Harrison smoked his pipe while sitting on a keg of powder. The explosion killed Harrison and seriously injured five other men.

—The Moundsville (W. Va.) Herald office was entered Friday night, the type thrown on the floor, and the press wrecked. The paper is Republican in politics.

—William Hall's family (five persons) residing at Cameron, Mo., ate canned corned beef Friday, and are dying of poisoning.

—A balcony filled with people collapsed Friday at an agricultural show at Almonte, Ont. A stampede resulted and several persons were injured, a few fatally.

—Near Ashland, Wis, Thursday afternoon, a construction train struek a washout, and plunged in. A number of men were riding in the tender or cab of the engine, and as it dashed downward a rail pierced the boiler, letting the steam and water out. Two persons were instantly killed, and a number of others were fatally scalded. The scene at the wreck is described as shocking in the extreme. Later reports say that the deaths will be ten, and it is feared that two missing men are yet under the wreck.

FOREIGN.

—Sir Evelyn Baring sent a dispatch to the British government Oct. 3, stating that General Gordon, after having bombarded Berber for some time, effected his entry into the place and recaptured it. The rebels and hostile inhabitants fled when the bombardment ceased.

—The fall of Berber will enable Colonel Kitchener to reach General Gordon from Dongola and ascertain his wishes regarding the Nile expedition and as to the necessity of the expedition going to Khartoum. The conference may result in the abandonment of the Nile expedition.

—It is positively stated at Berlin that the great powers are discussing the question of a renewal of the London conference, in order to finally settle the Egyptian financial question. It is stated, also, Germany is willing to join in the conference if there should be reasonable prospect for bringing the matter to a successful issue.

—Henry M. Stanley was given a banquet by the Chamber of Commerce of Wolverhampton, England. In response to a toast, Stanley referred to the trade of the Congo country, and said in cloths alone, at two-pence per yard, the manufacturers of Manchester might realize £26,000,000 sterling annually. He said the way to secure this advantage was to urge upon the British government the necessity of sending two cruisers to the Congo river, pending decision by the European powers of the Congo question.

—At the meeting of the French cabinet council Oct. 2, Prime Minister Ferry assured his colleagues that the occupation of Ke-Lung by Admiral Courbet would finish the French operations in China. He stated he had reason to believe that peace would soon follow.

—The Castle Island Branch of the Irish National League, Dublin, expelled Kinney, the president, because he shook hands with the Lord Lieutenant.

—Sixty persons were killed in a railway accident on the Eastern Bengal Railway last week.

—Irritated by his arbitrary acts, the people of Salinos, Mexico, attacked the City Hall Thursday morning, and murdered Judge Santos and also the chief of police. The police opposed the people, and in the fight twenty lives are said to have been lost. The leader of the mob was a noted bandit known as "The Wolf."

—Admiral Courbet telegraphed, Oct. 5, from China to Paris: "We completed the occupation of Ke-Lung without resistance. Batteries at Tamsui were dismantled. It will be necessary before proceeding to the coal mines to fortify the principal positions, so as to enable a small force to hold them. The sunken junks and torpedoes in the river are being removed." Col. Negrier is massing his troops to march against the Chinese in Tonquin.

—There were 207 fresh cases and 126 deaths from cholera reported in Italy Sunday.

—The London Ti[illegible] respondent at Pekin is assured on [illegible]ghest authority that China is ready [illegible]mit to arbitration.

—Through t[illegible]iation of Queen Victoria and th[illegible]e of Wales, a compromise upon [illegible]nchise and redistribution bills [illegible]n arranged between Premier Gladst[illegible] and the Marquis of Salisbury.

e elder Agassiz, a great-souled, humble man, re- once to the question, "What was the thing above thers which most arrested your mind in coming his country?" "It was your observance of the 's day." But were the great philosopher in Chi- to-day he would hardly have given an answer of high appreciation. Our papers tell of Sunday ical meetings addressed here or elsewhere by Belva Lockwood, the Presidental candidate of Equal Rights party (!); by Finerty, a Democratic gressman working for Blaine; and by the Butler . The usual Socialist meeting was also held in city, some of the speakers accenting their re- ks with brutal oaths. But on the other hand the dinavians held a noble meeting in favor of the bath in Farwell Hall, earnestly contending for the tity of the Lord's day and most effectually an- ing the demagogues who scoff at everything holy eir determination to manipulate the foreign vote, encourage a French Sabbath as a means to this The Germans met a while since to manifest deep regard for the sacred day and protest ast its secularization.

ew men in Chicago can speak of the liquor-deal- nd their work with the experience of Andrew ton, the trusted agent of the Citizens' League. grand jury having ventured a gratuitous attack the League gets a stunning reply in which Mr. ton says: "It has for some time past been well un- tood that an understanding has been come to be- en the county commissioners and the saloon-keep- associations that the grand jury in Cook county l be drawn with special reference to shield saloon- ers from prosecution; and certainly the kind of d jurors we have been having of late would indi- such an agreement. For the last ten or twelve ths every grand jury has had on its list from e to six or seven saloon-keepers or liquor-dealers, a fair proportion of what are known as saloon mers, and perhaps low ward politicians, who d their time between saloons and gambling es and worse places. . . . . I have often found the grand jury saloon-keepers whom I have had sted and fined or held to the Criminal court for selling liquor to minors and drunkards; and often have the poor drunkards whom we have had before the grand jury as witnesses against saloon-keepers for selling them liquor told me when they came out that they saw on the jury saloon-keepers who had been selling them liquor right along. Not long ago I had a saloon-keeper arrested on three different charges of selling liquor to minors and drunkards and keeping a disorderly house, and his cases had to be continued two or three times because he was sitting on the grand jury." Mr. Paxton continues his citation of proofs of a charge that should produce some kind of an earthquake in the Chicago criminal court. But no liquor-dealer is likely to be disturbed in his glorious privilege of a grand juror so long as the Democratic and Republican parties hold their power.

It needs no comment to enhance the effect of Mr. Paxton's letter; but his condemnation of the grand jury strikes beyond the saloon and thunders upon the door of the lodge. It is plain as sunrise that, if men of the same villainous occupation who have no other common interest, will, for the sake of mutual protection, get some of the trade upon a jury, much more men who have sworn to each other under the cover of the lodge in horrid oaths, will seek each other's safety in the same way. For some ten years (perhaps more) the prosecuting attorney in the Chicago courts. It has been a very convenient arrangement for Freemasons, who were sure of one friend at least to help them out of the clutch of the law. The only murderer who has been executed here in these years was a poor and friendless wretch who could not have got into a lodge had he tried. If Mr. Paxton's letter proves anything against the liquor men, it proves more against the lodge.

The political press most interested in cutting down the prohibition vote are fond of parading the figures of the last election in Kansas as so many arguments against St. John. But these figures are no evidence against that candidate but are rather in his favor if the following evidence is received from the Troy, Kansas, Chief, an influential paper in the northeastern part of the State: "We learn that persons are going about the State organizing secret societies, the members of which are sworn to vote for Glick. A person said to be engaged in this work, was in this county a few days ago, but we do not think he met with any success. The same thing was carried on two years ago, but it will fail this time. When it is necessary to keep such things secret, and to bind voters with an oath, it shows there is something wrong in it. Secret political societies in a republic, where every man has a right to vote as he chooses, are dangerous to the welfare of the country. Remember the Know-Nothings, the Knights of the Golden Circle, and the Ku-Klux Klan. All of them had their run, all of them speedily passed away, and all are held in execration." This corroborates the facts ascertained two years ago by the Cynosure that the Freemasons were working against St. John in their lodges, betraying every pure and holy interest that can gather about the home into the hands of a friend of the saloon, of the lodge, and of slavery secession. This is the work of the lodge among "Republicans," and in a State with a history like Kansas!

John W. Keeley, the inventor of the "motor" that is to revolutionize the world, has been for seven years the worst ridiculed, caricatured, and lampooned man outside politics or Anti-masonry. He has been blessed with every advantage for bringing his mysterious force into use. Unlimited capital was at his disposal, and a strong company at his back. But nothing materialized, and public interest long ago died out. Yet when he produced a small cannon and fired a ball through four inches of pine plank a few days since, interest immediately revived, and the papers gave long accounts of the experiment, accepting it as positive demonstration of the tremendous but incomprehensible energy of his "vaporic force." But the Scientific American ungraciously steps in with a detailed and fully illustrated account of the experiment and shows that the same effect can be easily produced with compressed air, and topples over the castles of speculation by venturing its opinion that Keeley's "vaporic force" is air and nothing else.

The Chicago Congregational ministers gave up their regular meeting to a discussion of politics last week. Rev. A. J. Bailey, of Lake View, brother of the editor of the Washington American, led off in a spirited style for St. John, followed by Rev. Robert West, editor of the Advance, on the same side. The merits of St. John and Blaine were the burden of several earnest speeches, but not one named Cleveland but to condemn him, and all voted that his election would be a calamity, morally and physically." In the meeting twenty-four voted to endorse Blaine, with twelve in the negative. But the twelve votes have a germinant power that the majority lack. They must only increase. This debate is significant of the change working in many minds. The Independent does not stand alone. The Christian Union, Christian at Work, Advance, and other influential religious papers all lean to St. John. Dr. Howard Crosby, the well-known leader in the Presbyterian church, and equally well known as opposed to prohibition, which he writes down as a "blunder and a farce, yet he publishes a letter supporting St. John for his "sterling character," which "can and will show itself if he be elected. The nation can trust him as neither a self-seeker or a sensualist."

If there needs to be an argument to prove that there must be a political party behind prohibition, to bring it into effect, the opponents of the measure are making it unnecessary. Judge Hayes of Muscatine has once decided this year against the Iowa amendment by declaring that suits against saloons could not be brought in a justice's court. He has now charged his grand jury to indict buyers as well as sellers of liquor, and that any person, who, at the instigation of an organization, purchased for the purpose of criminating the seller, should be indicted, and that a true bill should be returned against the society for conspiracy. He thus not only deprives the temperance societies of witnesses but puts them into jail, while the saloonist laughs at the discomfiture of his enemies. That this decision will stand no one believes. It has a specious appearance; but it is a mere hiding behind technicalities. The will of the people against the liquor traffic must be upheld.

THOUGHTS ON WORK AND REST.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D.D.

Sweet rest is the reward of honest work. He who does not work well cannot rest well. The converse is equally true. "Six days shalt thou labor . . . . the seventh is the Sabbath." Labor is before rest and preparatory for it. But as man's first day on earth was a Sabbath it signifies that all labor must be sanctified by religion and that one must "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Both Nature and Revelation stand guard over the weekly division of time, and both unite to enforce the third commandment of the Decalogue by appropriate rewards and punishments. If rest is bought of labor, the price is not too high, though never paid in advance. "The sleep of a laboring man is sweet whether he eat much or little." If he have dreams, they are stars of good omen, which shine through a gloom not haunted by the evil genii of sloth or bad digestion. We need to work, but still more to rest. So we have more rest time than work time. Revelation adds to our seven nights in the week an artificial night, the Sabbath, and so we have eight nights to six days. Add to these the nights of closed eyes in infant's sleep and adult day-dreams and life is more of rest than work.

Work's busy fingers play the harp, the hand of rest tunes the strings. Work accumulates, rest economizes. Work builds the city, rest preserves it. Labor plows the field, rest waters it when we sleep. The planting of Paul is vain without the watering of Apollos. The reverse of this is equally vain. The busy man's summer vacation is his halting time to take breath. The idle man does not need to vacate; he is always vacant.

In the vacation the fellow racers stop to look into each other's face. It is the bell ring of the world's busy factory which sends the operators out for a look at nature and a breath of pure air. Because "the troubled sea cannot rest," it plows only the barren sands. Also, what men overplow they impoverish. The fields must have their Sabbaths too. Because the stars will not rest they are appointed to fall from their places. They too must close their eyes for they cannot wake eternally. God alone is sleepless. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." "A well preserved old man," is spoken in compliment of a "green old age;" "a well used old man," were a higher compliment. Youth may be green but old age should be ripe. Old age may well be the Sabbath of life. But if there have been no week of labor, it is no Sabbath of rest.

The stiffening limbs of age are nature's checks on worn machinery. A rheumatic joint is an extra check. Failing vision is indicated by holding objects at a distance. The visional axis is too short if it do not lengthen beyond the stars. The old man rests at the foot of the hill which he loved to climb in his youth. Happy is he now if his fading eyes be lifted to "the hills from which cometh our help."

HONOR THE PIONEERS.

Pioneers are generally the sufferers in any good cause. Inventors often spend years in finding out a machine which cheapens production, and in steps capital and practical skill to reap all the profits. An author writes a book, and its substance is abstracted, and its contents in various ways retailed out to the pecuniary loss of the author. Great reforms are projected, and their first advocates meet with popular scorn and slander; but by and by the change in public sentiment comes, and too often the time-servers seize upon the honors of the early heroes. Oho! The old Tories were ever true reformers! Slavery advocates never existed in our party! We always favored the cause for which our martyrs suffered! Yes. We rejoice in such moral heroes as Morgan and John Brown, or as Lincoln and Garfield.

So the popular talk ever goes on. Our fathers killed the prophets, but we would not have done so, and yet such men crucified the Son of God. As then, so now. Men mistake the false for the true and the pretender for the genuine heir to the throne of the heart. Every generation must learn its own lessons.

Such ideas arise in us when we see those who have borne the burden and heat of the day, lightly esteemed and displaced for some unknown, untried, and possibly untrue candidate for favor in any rising cause.

There will be differences between leaders. There were between Paul and Barnabas. There may be some hearts sorely wounded, even in such movements as those against slavery or lodgery. It is impossible to avoid some differences, but assuredly every Christian ought to try to be true to every cause he deems right. When we unite to promote prohibition, it is right to lay aside other questions, and to agree together for that end. If anti-lodgery is the object, then welcome every soldier who agrees here, no matter what his denomination, and special care is necessary over every one that he do not allow his sect differences to outweigh his faithfulness to this object.

The Gospel, of course, is ever supreme over every Christian, and no special evil should ever be preached instead of the Gospel, which is the power of God to cleanse from every sin. Special evils have special means devised by man's wisdom for their overthrow but the Gospel has its own means—God-appointed, Christ-appointed—which man must observe in order to have assurance of the blessing of the Holy Spirit for assuredly every object in life is secondary to the pure Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

SOWING AND REAPING.

BY ELDER ALBERT SIMS.

1. By an inevitable moral law, sin and punishment are inseparably connected. Hence there must be a cause for all the physical, mental and moral suffering endued by mankind. As "like begets like" by a correlated law of necessity, the cause of this triple suffering is sin. Wrong doing, or 'sowing to the flesh," does not, by mere accident, lead to particular consequences, but it does so as surely, and as inevitably as inflicting a wound results in pain. As certainly as every cause produces some effect, so does every unlawful deed produce fruit in its own likeness. God has declared he will, in the eternal future, punish man for his iniquity. Apart from the punishment which the Almighty will inflict upon the sinner hereafter, sin—even now in the present life—brings with it its own desert. Such is the natural effect of sin, that, by the divine appointment, it will punish the man who dares to indulge in it. For example, if a man pursues a course of debauchery and drunkenness, he will sooner or later destroy his body, and bring it to an untimely grave. Thus, wonderfully, has the Almighty, by an invulnerable decree, linked together cause and effect—sin and its correlated punishment.

O, it is utter folly to think we can sow to the flesh, follow and obey its desires, and yet not reap the inevitable consequences of the same. As certainly as fire will burn us, if we touch it, so surely will sin being us a harvest of corruption and woe. "Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same." Job 4:8.

2. We have seen that the punishment of sin is both temporal and eternal. We admit, that full justice will not be meted out before the final day of reckoning. This, in fact, is the chief reason for the judgment day. But to say that no suffering is reaped from evil doings in this life, is contrary both to experience and Scriptures. Look around and witness the fearful amount of misery that prevails. Observe for a moment the countless forms of physical, mental and moral suffering that distress mankind. Visit the hospitals, asylums, prisons and penitentiaries of our land; go into the dark slums of our towns and cities; gaze upon the blackened eyes and bruises of the fighter; notice the ill health, shattered frames, and diseased bodies, caused by indulgence in lusts, and gross abuses; and you will get a glimpse,—but only a glimpse—of the fearful havoc sin is making to-day More certain even than this, is that painful sensation of guilt,—that twitching of conscience, which is sure to be more or less acutely felt, the moment wrong has been done. What agony fills the heart of that man, who, though he escapes for a while the hands of justice, knows that he has committed murder! What a fearful harvest of remorse does he reap! So is it with every sin committed. Besides the retribution of eternity to which it leads, it brings with it a certain and present harvest of inward pain, inflicted upon physical nature, and endured by the conscience.

3. Divine grace, in the removal of sin, does not save us in this life from all the consequences of wrong doing. We rejoice that the blood of Jesus Christ can—during the present life—take away the guilt of sin, and effectually remove every feature of depravity from man's soul. But there are certain results of sowing to the flesh, which the grace of God in conversion never removes. It will never restore a limb destroyed, nor property lost by gambling and dissipation. For example, here is a man who was once in affluent circumstances, who had plenty of comforts and luxuries; but, by a course of profligacy and wantonness, he wastes his substance, and brings himself to beggary. He becomes converted, and enters upon a new life. But his becoming a Christian does not place him in his former wealthy position. He reaps the poverty he has brought upon himself, by having sown the seeds of dissipation and carnality. The confirmed drunkard, of many years standing, becomes a saved man. But the nervous shaking of his nands, and his broken down constitution, show too plainly that he is still reaping some of the bitter effects of his former evil ways. Let the intellect, or any faculty of mind, be injured by a long-continued course of lustful indulgence; and in spite of the grace a pardoning God may give him, he will sustain that injury through life. Never were truer words than these: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.

4. Our future reward will be exactly proportioned to our freedom from sin, and to our activity in holy living. Consider the relation in which this world stands to the next. Is it not a similar relation to that in which seed time stands to harvest? The whole tenor of Bible teaching on this point, shows that such is the case. Is it not declared that, "God will reward every man according to his work?" How could he do this, if he should give to every righteous soul, at the judgment day, the same degree of honor and bliss, irrespective of the life each had lived on earth? No, no! God declares, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." That the greater part of this reaping will take place in eternity, is clear from the subsequent words of the Apostle Paul; "For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." A few pecks of seed will not yield the harvest of many bushels; and he who did not begin to sow to the Spirit till near the end of life, will not reap as will he who has been sowing nearly all his life? Just as the man, who sows the seeds of idleness, reaps poverty; so he who is spiritually indolent, or who does not begin to sow good seed till an advanced hour in life, will reap accordingly.

If we see an opportunity to win a soul to Christ, or to perform some other blessed deed, and we fail to do it, we shall forever lose the joy we might have reaped, had we sown that seed. As it is true in agriculture, that, "he that soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully;" so it is generally true in respect to our preparation for eternity. It is simply impossible, and absurd to suppose, that he who spends but a few months or years in preparation for heaven, can ever have as large and as rich an experience in the glory of the future state, as he might have obtained by life-long preparation. Does not the injunction, to "lay up treasures in heaven," teach the same idea of a reward proportioned to our diligence? If so, will he, who died as thief on the cross, be rewarded as abundantly as the Apostle Paul? It is a grand thing to be saved at all; even at the sunset of life. But, O! it will be a great, and eternal loss to all, who never sow to the Spirit until the best part of life is gone.

Again; if wicked men are to be punished hereafter, and to receive many or few stripes, according to their degrees of wickedness, does it seem reasonable, that the righteous Judge of all the earth will act upon a different principle in rewarding his saints? The aged penitent must suffer from the smallness of his capacity for experiencing the happiness of heaven. What souls will ever come to him in glory, and express their thankfulness, that God used him in leading them to Christ? True, he will have a crown, but it will be a starless one. True, he will have gained, through Christ, the victory over the power of the devil and hell; but he will not have the sweet recollection that for many long years he fought, and through grace, won glorious victories over his enemies. He will not have the blessed remembrance of having on earth scattered many seeds of knidness, instructed the ignorant, warned the careless, helped the burdened ones, and comforted sorrow-stricken hearts. Tremendous truth! All who have not sown these seeds, can never have the joy they would have yielded.

Sinner, are not these weighty arguments why you should stop sowing the seed of sin? It is of infinite importance that you should at once stop. Every day you spend in your present state will help to swell your loss of bliss through all eternity. The longer you defer your salvation, the lower will be your position in the kingdom if you should ever be converted, and attain eternal life. Christian, sow as much—sow as earnestly to the Spirit, as by divine grace it is possible for you. If you wish every day to increase your eternal joy, then, every day lay up treasure in heaven. Finally, we ask in reference to the great day of reckoning, and the part every one of us shall take in the reaping—"O, what shall the harvest be?"

WISE COUNCIL FOR ANTI-MASONS.

Secret societies are pushing their organizations into every community, and drawing into them the uninformed and unwary among young and old, men and women. This activity makes eternal vigilance and incessant work by those opposed to them necessary to check them and save the church from injury. This warfare is not of a personal nature, though it involves personal interests and must often lead to the condemnation of individual actions. The controversy will often produce much feeling and excitement, and must be conducted wisely. It is not every one who is fitted to engage in such work. Self-control and Christian intelligence are necessary in this as in every contest with wickedness. Deal not harshly but let the spirit of love be manifested here as in all other controversies. Make the truth as clear as the sunbeam if you can, but let love be equally evident, love to souls, not to the evil. What is wanted is candid, clear Christian treatment, of such as are already in the coils and such as are tempted to yield to their embrace.

The right kind of books and tracts should be circulated. Nothing is better to open the eyes than a good book well read and studied, showing the dangerous principles and evil workings and tendencies of all associations hiding behind oaths and pledges of secrecy. Such works as "In the Coils," by Rev. E. B. Graham, of Omaha, and "Finney on Masonry," are intensely interesting and shed such light upon the subject as cannot easily be resisted. Such works as these ought to be in every home for the purpose of putting the young upon their guard. Teach children to abhor all conduct that cannot bear the light of day. Our Saviour, who was good and only good himself, teaches that "he that doeth truth," that is, who is honest and upright, doing right, cometh to the light. While it is the man that doeth evil that hates the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds be reproved. How true these words of our Master. If only every member of a secret order would ponder their meaning it ought to start serious questions in his mind, such as: Am I coming to the light? Why do I join in these secret doings? Are they evil?

oes it not have a bad look? God's people don't eed to conceal their doings, for they are good. Exosing of them to the light neither brings danger nor sgrace, but honor.—Christian Instructor.

THE BATTLE-FIELD.

Once this soft turf, this rivulet's sands,
Were trampled by a hurrying crowd,
And fiery hearts and armed hands
Encountered in the battle cloud.

Now all is calm, and fresh, and still;
Alone the chirp of flitting bird,
And talk of children on the hill,
And bell of wandering kine are heard.

No solemn host goes trailing by
The black mouthed gun and staggering wain;
Men start not at the battle-cry,
O, be it never heard again!

Soon rested those who fought; but thou
Who minglest in the harder strife
For truths which men receive not now,
Thy warfare only ends with life.

A friendless warfare! lingering long
Through weary day and weary year,
A wild and many-weaponed throng
Hang on thy front, and flank, and rear.

Yet nerve thy spirit to the proof,
And blench not at thy chosen lot;
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown, yet faint thou not.

Nor heed the shaft too surely cast,
The foul and hissing bolt of scorn;
For with thy side shall dwell at last,
The victory of endurance born.

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among his worshipers.

Yes, though thou lie upon the dust,
When they who helped thee flee in fear,
Die full of hope and manly trust,
Like those who fell in battle here.

Another hand thy sword shall wield,
Another hand the standard wave,
Till from the trumpet's mouth is pealed
The blast of triumph o'er thy grave.

THE SABBATH.

The Current of Chicago, declares that "if the workgmen of America permit the abolition of the 'Purin Sabbath' they will prove themselves a nation of inces." And quoting or inventing the "claim of the illionaire that he cannot spare the time between aturday and Monday," it says: "But that same milonaire goes from Florida to the Yellowstone Park, om Bar Harbor and Moosehead Lake to Santa Barara, and is often resting two months at a time. The orkingman must get his Santa Barbara and San ugustine in weekly instalments; and if he do not tand by the church in protecting Sunday the millionre and the corporations will soon have it all their wn way."—The Presbyterian.

Something is lowering the moral standard of many en in this country. Whether it is the disregard for ie Sabbath, or a love of money, or a love of the orld; whether it is the result of the example of any of those who have come to us from Europe, or f the scepticism imported from European scholars, hatever may be the cause, the fact is becoming more vident that the moral sense of thousands among us as been weakened and perverted. Crime abounds mong all classes and in every part of the country. here is a great deal of virtue, and also a great deal f vice. There is much genuine piety and much iety that is strongly tainted with worldliness, and here is a large amount of impiety. What to think f these times it is not easy to decide, but it is plain hat these are not times when those who love truth nd virtue and godliness, who desire to promote the rue happiness of their fellows and to have happiness nd peace themselves, can afford to cease their cries o God for a blessing upon his Word, or their advoacy of reformative agencies, or their activity in opposing and reproving vice. The disregard of the Sabbath, in our judgment, is the fountain from which hese impure streams flow. But the violation of the Sabbath is only an indication of a spirit of ungodliess and of unbelief.—Intelligencer.

Infidelity reproves nothing that is bad. It only idicules and denounces all that is good. It tears down—it never constructs; it destroys—it never imparts life; it attacks religion, but offers no adequate ubstitute.—J. R. Paxton.

BLAINE ON THADDEUS STEVENS.

The House was filled with able men, many of whom had parliamentary experience. The natural leader, who assumed his place by common consent, was Thaddeus Stevens, a man of strong peculiarities of character, able, trained and fearless. Born in Vermont, and educated at Dartmouth, he had passed all his adult years in Pennsylvania, and was thoroughly identified with the State which he had served with distinction both in her own Legislature and in Congress. He had the reputation of being somewhat unscrupulous as to political methods, somewhat careless in personal conduct, somewhat lax in personal morals; but to the one great object of his life, the destruction of slavery and the elevation of the slave, he was supremely devoted. From the pursuit of that object nothing could deflect him. Upon no phrase of it would he listen to compromise. Any man who was truly anti-slavery was his friend. Whoever espoused the cause and proved faithless in never so small a degree, became his enemy, inevitably and irreconcilably. Toward his own race he seemed often to be misanthropic. He was learned in the law, and for a third of a century had held high rank at the bar of a State distinguished for great lawyers. He was disposed to be taciturn. A brilliant talker, he did not relish idle and aimless conversation. He was much given to reading, study and reflection, and to the retirement which enabled him to gratify his tastes. As was said of Mr. Emerson, Mr. Stevens loved solitude and understood its uses.

Upon all political questions Mr. Stevens was an authority. He spoke with ease and readiness, using a style somewhat resembling the crisp, clear sententiousness of Dean Swift. Seldom, even in the most careless moment, did a sentence escape his lips that would not bear the test of grammatical and rhetorical criticism. He possessed the keenest wit, and was unmerciful in its use toward those whom he did not like. He illustrated in concrete form the difference between wit and humor. He did not indulge in the latter. He did not enjoy a laugh. When his sharp sallies would set the entire House in uproar, he was as impassive, his visage as solemn, as if he were pronouncing a funeral oration. His memory of facts, dates and figures was exact, and in argument he knew the book and chapter and page for reference. He was fond of young men, invited their society, encouraged and generously aided them. He was easily moved by the distress of others. He was kind, charitable, lavish of his money in the relief of poverty. He had characteristics which seemed contradictory, but which combined to make one of the memorable figures in the Parliamentary history of the United States—a man who had the courage to meet any opponent, and who was never overmatched in intellectual conflict.—From Blaine's "Twenty Years in Congress."

SECRECY AND SILENCE.

VIRTUES OF MASONRY AND EGYPTIAN HEATHENISM.

[From Mackey's Encyclopedia of Freemasonry.]

These virtues constitute the very essence of all Masonic character; they are the safe-guard of the Institution, giving to it all its security and perpetuity, and are enforced by frequent admonitions in all the degrees, from the lowest to the highest. The Entered Apprentice begins his Masonic career by learning the duty of secrecy and silence. Hence it is appropriate that in that degree which is the consummation of initiation, in which the whole cycle of Masonic science is completed, the abstruse machinery of symbolism should be employed to impress the same important virtues on the mind of the neophyte.

The same principles of secrecy and silence existed in all the ancient mysteries and systems of worship. When Aristotle was asked what thing appeared to him to be most difficult of performance, he replied, "To be secret and silent."

"If we turn our eyes back to antiquity," says Calcott, "we shall find that the old Egyptians had so great a regard for silence and secrecy in the mysteries of their religion, that they set up the god Harpocrates, to whom they paid peculiar honor and veneration, who was represented with the right hand placed near the heart, and the left down by his side, covered with a skin before, full of eyes."

Apuleius, who was an initiate in the mysteries of Isis, says: "By no peril will I ever be compelled to disclose to the uninitiated the things that I have had intrusted to me on condition of silence."

Lobeck, in his Aglaophamus, has collected several examples of the reluctance with which the ancients approached a mystical subject, and the manner in which they shrank from divulging any explanation or fable which had been related to them at the mysteries, under the seal of secrecy and silence.

And, lastly, in the school of Pythagoras, these lessons were taught by the sage to his disciples. A novitiate of five years was imposed upon each pupil, which period was to be passed in total silence, and in religious and philosophical contemplation. And at length, when he was admitted to full fellowship in the society, an oath of secrecy was administered to him on the sacred tetractys, which was equivalent to the Jewish Tetragrammaton.

Silence and secrecy are called "the cardinal virtues of a Select Master," in the ninth or Select Master's degree of the American Rite.

Among the Egyptians the sign of silence was made by pressing the index finger of the right hand on the lips. It was thus that they represented Harpocrates, the god of silence, whose statue was placed at the entrance of all temples of Isis and Serapis, to indicate that silence and secrecy were to be preserved as to all that occurred within.

[MARK that these are called "virtues" in Masonic ethics and "constitute" THE VERY ESSENCE of Masonic character. What place do they have among the Christian virtues? What would be said of the blasphemy of applying them thus to the character of our Lord Jesus Christ? Christian disciple reflect upon the nature of a society that teaches such doctrines.—ED. CYNOSURE.]

TWO HARMONIOUS FORCES.

A great mistake is made by many good people, in assuming that moral and legal suasion are two opposing forces. Moral force is the persuasion of the human will to act in accordance with intelligent conviction. Legal force is the compulsion of the human will when intelligence and conviction are wanting. The one is for the willing and those amenable to instruction, all that is necessary. The other is made necessary for the good of all when a part are unwilling to know the truth, or to act in accordance with it. Moral and legal forces are necessary so long as these two classes of persons exist. The state or government decides that a certain line of policy is demanded by the public welfare or safety. The large mass of citizens give their allegiance to the policy because convinced of its necessity. A small minority oppose themselves, and for the sake of this minority legal force must needs supplement the conviction and opinion which have settled the question in the broader minds of the majority. In the temperance reform, the great majority of people have decided that drunkenness is an evil. A large proportion, if not a majority, agree that drink in any form is an evil and total abstinence a blessing. Moral suasion consists in changing the opinion of those who still deny this proposition. Father Mathew, one of the greatest of moral suasionists, persuaded the Irish people to give up five of the eleven million gallons of whisky they were annually consuming. Just as he reached this point of success he commenced to be defeated, because of the failure to connect or add to his moral force the legal condemnation of the drink habit. Because of this lack, moral force has been shorn of its beneficence, and the Irish people are to day drinking more in proportion to their numbers, than before the total abstinence movement of Father Mathew. So long as the appetite for drink exists in man, so long there will be need of these two forces in overcoming drink. One to persuade the weak will to forego indulgence, and the other to legally fortify it by taking away the temptation.

This being true, how hopeless seems the work of moral suasion when law, the embodiment of legal force, sanctions instead of condemns the evil against which we would persuade men. Unless the two be set side by side in the relation of the right arm and the left, there is little need to write down, or in any other way, attempt to sweep away the drink habit and the drink traffic of the land. Until the smooth stones from the brook are hurled mightily from the sling of legal action they will never sink deep into the "horrid front" of the giant Philistine of our day. Unless the two oars of moral and legal force propel our brave temperance life-boat, it will be dashed about in the surf of passion and avarice, unable to land its precious freight and eventually powerless to keep itself above water.—Union Signal.

There is no knowledge for which so great a price is paid, as a knowledge of the world; and no one ever became an adept in it, except at the expense of a hardened and wounded heart.—Countess of Blessington.

—The Christians of Madagascar, says The Missionary Herald, are holding fast to their simple faith in the promises of God's Word, and are loooking for the time when the dark clouds that cover them shall pass away. The secretary of the Madagascar Bible Committee thus describes the source of strength to which the people go: "Speaking of the war, it has been interesting to note the way in which the Old Testament has been made use of by the Christians in this land to strengthen themselves as it were, in the Lord their God. Whether it be in the regular Sunday service, or in the special prayer-meetings for their Sanin-drazana (fatherland), the people constantly choose the histories, in the Books of Kings or Chronicles, of God's deliverance of the children of Israel, to read and comment upon. This is done evidently with the full expectation that at the proper time God will appear on their side, helping their soldiers who have gone to the war, and eventually turning the French out of the island. Those Psalms, also, which contain cries for deliverance or assurance that God would rise and come to the help of his people, have been special favorites during the year."

THE THIRD PARTY IN OBERLIN.

The third party movement is steadily growing in strength in Oberlin. There is little doubt but if the election could be postponed a month or two a rousing majority of votes would be cast for St. John.

One month ago the town was decidedly Republican. Only a handful of men could be found in the place who would both talk and vote prohibition. Now the politician has to pick his way carefully both in conversation and in his walk along the street, lest he should run plump into a third-party man.

One month ago the only notice taken of Prohibitionists was done in the spirit of ridicule. They were characterized as "tea-kettle" reformers who expected to change the climate by heating a little water in their "back yards." They were dubbed "cranks." Now the old-party stalwart begins to realize that hot water is getting quite common and that it would be an easy thing for him to step into it. He has observed that the "cranks" are in operation and that the indications are that the Republican party is being wound up.

One month ago it was announced in a speech, by the facile princeps of Oberlin politicians, that the time for a third party had not yet come. Third parties were possible only when the old ones began to disintegrate. We must first expect to see "fissures" in the old organizations; we must see voters coming off in "chunks" before we can hope to make a new and successful party. Now the conservative enunciator of the above sentiments need not go far from his own door to find large and ominous cracks in both the old parties and "chunks" of a sufficient size to smash a politician if they should happen to fall on him. There was never so great division over politics in Oberlin, as there is to-day, and it has largely arisen during the past four weeks. Two things have tended to bring about this state of affairs: The childish weakness of the arguments for the old parties, and the activity of the Prohibitionists in spreading the truth.

The Republican managers have spared no pains to prop up their dying cause. They have employed eminent speakers, have lifted a campaign pole and have clothed their buildings with Republican banners, and yet in all this they have put forward no reason why a man should vote their ticket. We cannot account for this except on the natural inference that they have no reason to give. The speakers they have employed were not lacking in ability. Among these were Wallace, the Comptroller of the U. S. Treasury, Gen. Hawley of Connecticut, Mrs. Ellen Foster of Iowa, Hon. James Monroe of Oberlin, Hon. Legate of Kansas and Senator Windom of Minnesota. They all showed the weakness of able advocates on the wrong side of the question. They have left a poor impression on nearly all candid minds. As Mrs. Partington says: "They opened their mouths only to put their foot in it."

These speakers have set up the saw-dust man of Tariff and pounded him till he all ran out at the heels of his boots. They have called our attention to the fact that the Republican party has been and the Democratic hasn't—yea, they convinced many by their earnestness that the Republican is a "has been" party. They have barely touched upon prohibition—it being a "local issue." Two speeches were made by Mrs. Foster and one by Hon. Legate, professedly against the third party, and honest seekers for light were led by these addresses into darkness more profound than they were in before. The manner in which prohibition in politics was discussed by each of these able speakers recalled forcibly to the writer's mind some lines from the Hudibras:

> "Wired in and wired out,
> And people always were in doubt,
> Whether the snake that made the track,
> Was going north or coming back."

While these meetings have been going on the advocates of the third party have not sat with their hands folded. They have been zealous in the distribution of tracts and periodicals, have held meetings every Friday night, have published and circulated a little journal of their own, "The St. John Club," and have in all honorable ways striven to convince men that politics is a means and not an end. The result is that public sentiment has undergone a marked change. Hundreds of St. John badges can be seen on the coats of citizens and students. The Theological Seminary is for St. John by a strong majority and some of the minority are drawing hopefully near the line fence. Among the active workers for the third party are some of the most brilliant members of the college and seminary faculties. The St. John Club has Professor Frost of the college for its president. He is a tower of strength in himself. Wide awake and indefatigable he seems to be in every place at once. In a paper presented on the night of his election he stated that he had come to believe in the Prohibition movement after long and prayerful study of the question in all its bearings. The reading of this paper resulted in the conversion of a prominent citizen who had come to the meeting wearing a Blaine and Logan pin. With such men to engineer it, this cause is bound to triumph soon. One of the tutors remarked recently, that Oberlin would never see peace again until prohibition is accomplished, and nobody cares to dispute that prophecy.

Last Monday was a day long to be remembered. It marked the advent of St. John, himself, to Oberlin, and brought into view somewhat of the real strength of the "tea-kettle" party. The country had not been well advertised owing to some unaccountable, but "necessary" delay on the part of the printers in getting out the bills, but there was crowd enough present from abroad to cause sincere mourning down in the market place.

A cannon which some small boys had previously spiked, but to no purpose, was brought into use, and as Governor St. John entered the city at the head of a mile-and-a-half-long procession, it gave forth prophetic warnings to politicians, of another kind of "boom" soon to be realized in the land. Several thousand people gathered in the college square and were entertained by short addresses by various speakers for two hours. The speeches were pleasantly interspersed with music by a band and glee club.

In the evening a grand mass meeting was held in the First Church. Over 2,000 people were crowded into the building, filling galleries, aisles, vestibule and orchestra—it being the largest audience ever assembled there. An overflow meeting was held in the College Chapel at which an audience of 500 were present.

After a few short speeches by distinguished gentlemen from Oberlin and elsewhere Gov. St. John spoke for an hour and a half to a most enthusiastic audidence. Tumultuous applause followed every period in his address. There could be no greater ovation tendered any man in a place of this size than he received. He was cordially treated in the overflow meeting, which he also addressed.

The effect of his speech was very marked. Many voters came out under his strong appeals and will now stand for God and Home and Native Land. During his address St. John asked those who had voted for Birney to arise to their feet. Twenty-five patriarchs stood up, and when he asked them whether they threw away their votes at that time, he was greeted by a chorus of noes enforced by a vigorous rapping of canes. A more impressive scene is seldom witnessed. When the presiding officer asked all who would vote for St. John to stand up, nearly the entire audience sprang to its feet. At this meeting four hundred and seventy-five dollars were raised, four hundred and twenty of which are to be paid annually in ten dollar subscriptions until prohibition is realized.

A vain attempt was made by a few nameless individuals to throw ridicule upon the day by getting out a mock programme on the night before. It was headed: "Grand Masonic Reunion" and was intended as a slur upon the Americans who will vote prohibition this year. This is only one out of a number of attempts made by zealous Republicans to drag the Masonic issue into the canvass and thus weaken the third party. The imbecility of the mock programme was evident to all and was the only answer it required. All such tricks hurt more than they help; for they only serve to set candid people thinking, and woe to old parties when an honest brain begins to work on the issues of the present campaign.

What more need be said? Is it not plain that "Truth is marching on" here now as truly as twenty and thirty years ago? Is there any question but the fiat of God has gone forth that the saloon must go? Is not this one spot in Ohio an illustration of what is taking place all over the land?

There are here as elsewhere many men who honestly cling to the Republican party. They have supported it ever since it began to exist. They remember a day when to be a Republican was to be a reformer, and cannot see that that day is gone. They are like some Democrats who imagine that Jackson is still in the field. They do not yet see the great truth that gave rise to the saying of Wendell Phillips that "the men who made the Republican party are dead; the men whom the Republican party made, are in Congress." Such individuals are honestly looking for help from this party of the dead past. They deserve our charity. They are mistaken but honestly so. They will not be much longer deceived. Like the Rinaldo of Tasso they are but temporarily deluded—they will soon hear and heed the voice that calls them to duty.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN,

of Kansas.

For Vice President,

WILLIAM DANIEL,

of Maryland.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

Iowa Voters.—All parties in Iowa desiring Electoral and State American tickets headed by St. John and Daniel, will address the undersigned, stating number and including postage for return. Persons desiring to contribute to the expense of the same are requested to remit. Now let no one fail of having tickets.

A. W. Hall, College Springs, Iowa.
Chairman State Central Committee.

American Voters see next Cynosure about tickets for the State of Illinois.

Since prohibition was adopted in that State [Kansas] we have closed about 1,600 of the 1,900 grog-shops there. The balance, with but few exceptions, are secret places, where you have to paint your nose red and go through a lot of secret signs to get a drink.—Gov. St. John in his Akron, O., speech.

A SECEDER ON ST. JOHN.

In the Cynosure of October 2 the question is discussed, by George Warrington, of St. John's fitness to receive the anti-secret vote. Some are afraid that he is still under bondage to the Masonic oath. But if the following statement is correctly reported, the prohibition candidate for the Presidency is a "good enough" seceder to suit every reasonable Anti-mason: "I have not entered a Masonic lodge for seventeen years; I have refused to pay the dues, and I will never darken their doors again." That statement should be satisfactory, because St. John has incurred the penalty by refusing to pay dues, and his determination never to "darken their doors again" shows his disregard of another clause of the oath, that he will "obey all summonses sent, handed or thrown to him, if in his power to obey them." In some Masonic jurisdictions (territories), when the tyler of the lodge hands the written notice to the Mason whose presence is required at the lodge meeting, it is accompanied with the words, "Attend under penalty of your O. B." Consequently no slight importance is attached by Masons to their power to compel attendance. And if Mr. St. John views with contempt this feature of the Masonic network, and I have confidence in him that he does, he is entitled to the support of anti-secret voters.

Very truly yours,

Arthur Robinson.

A DAY OF PRAYER.

LL FROM THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION COMMITTEE.

To the People of the United States:—In view of the isery and crime resulting from alcoholism, and of the ilt fastened upon the people by governments, municil, State and national, by permitting and even licensing e traffic in poison drinks, the executive committee of e Prohibition party call upon the people of this country observe Wednesday, October 29, 1884, as a day of fast-g, humiliation and confession; and in view of the fact at many all over the land are aroused, realize the enor-ty of the liquor crime and are willing to be at cost and ins to put it away, we call upon all Christian believers unite in prayer to Almighty God, that his aid may be ven to those measures which will result in the speedy tting away of this guilt, and the suppression of the ffic in alcoholic drinks.

On behalf of the committee.

A. J. JUTKINS, Cor. Sec'y.

OW WOULD JERRY M'AULEY HAVE VOTED?

The wonderful man whose labors for the salvation of e outcasts of New York in his Water street and Cre-orne Missions would, if he had lived, been as faithful Christ with his vote as he was with his voice, his pen, d every energy. The paper connected with his mis-on says: "Had Mr. McAuley lived long enough he ould have voted the Prohibition ticket at the forthcom-g election. This is not a political journal, and we shall t discuss politics, but Mr. McAuley had seen all sides the drink question, and he believed that the triumph the Prohibition cause would eventually lead to the triction of the rum traffic, at least, as effectually as we e it restricted in the State of Maine. He had too much th in God to regard a vote for St. John and Daniel as ost vote. He believed that the votes cast for pure mes and the closing of rum holes and other drinking ves, would be taken care of by God, and work out his vereign purpose. One thing only will ever move either e Republican or the Democratic party, to give the peo-e a chance to vote on Prohibition, and that one thing is nanifest balance of power in Prohibition keeping. In is matter, if casting a vote for St. John and Daniel is ing it, let such voters take courage. He who loses his te shall find it. Who will come out of the ranks of e great parties and vote in Mr. McAuley's stead for St. hn and Daniel?

HEZEKIAH AND 1884.

If we are to measure the acts of this Reform King by me standards now set up, it will be easy to show that ezekiah made a very great mistake, not only in the be-nning, but throughout his whole reign. When he me into politics at the age of twenty-five, the worship Baal was wide-spread among the nations of the earth it had grown hoary with years and crime. It had ver been suppressed, only restricted, a little now and en. Ministering, as it did, to the lower appetites and ser passions of mankind, it was not confined to any cality or section. Like intemperance of modern days, had spread its baleful influence over all civilized na-ons, and kindled the fires of Moloch in sight of every velling. It required for its victims the gray head, the ong man of middle age, and even children at the other's breast were not sacred against its greed. It ew alike the beloved first born in the best families, and e outcasts of society. Its god was a god of passion d ruin. Its altars of sacrifice were on every hill and der every green tree. This most debasing and de-uctive system was outlawed by every prophet of God, d execrated by all good men; but its votaries were any; its vested interests great; its hold on the wealthy asses, many of whom made merchandise out of it, was ong as iron. It robbed manhood of all that is noblest d purest; it undermined society, and at last threatened e utter extinction not only of civilization but of the orship of Jehovah himself.

Hezekiah undertook nothing less than the radical and mplete overthrow of this whole system. All precedents ere against him. Others had tried to regulate it. Heze-ah demanded its absolute prohibition. All the domin-t political parties of the time were against him. There ere two other courses open to him in his treatment of is evil:

First. He might have licensed the system. This would ave been a plausible plan, and at first sight satisfactory o doubt to a great number of the opponents of Baal orship. A high license at first would have destroyed me of the smaller altars; drawn off the worship from few of the lesser groves, and concentrated it on the eat ones supported by wealthy men. But Hezekiah as set in his old-fashioned notion that a system which evil and malicious in all its workings, no government uthority can make right. He might have seen that a gh license of the worship of Baal would have brought great deal of money into the treasury of Jerusalem, ld would increase the revenues of Judah very largely. ut then there was Isaiah, who would not keep out of olitics; who would not attend to religious matters holly, but insisted on mixing them up in politics, and n making the application of great truths to national fe, and individual conduct; and Isaiah never would ave consented to anything of that kind, even if Heze-ah had been willing.

Second. Hezekiah might have dodged the issue. He ould have said, "Gentlemen, this is not a national ques-on. It belongs wholly to tribal affairs. I am the can-idate of a great national party, and therefore I decline o vote either for or against this matter. It is true that Isaiah and those who are with him have an understanding that when the pinch comes I will vote with them against Baal; but the pinch has come, I have my reasons for taking no action either way, and I want your votes."

But he did none of these things. He issued an order that the altars of Baal should be destroyed, and that at once, that the groves should all be cut down. The record says that some of the people mocked him. The Daily Trombones called him a fanatic, and a fool; said that he was a lunatic, and proceeded to stir up all the baser sort against him. In the estimation of all the demagogues Hezekiah was making a political blunder. They were sure that men could not be made moral by law, or legislated into righteousness. Besides this action of their leader would endanger the very existence of the dominant party in Judah, and then the Egyptian party would seize on the opportunity of getting all the offices. The whole movement was declared to be a piece of sumptuary legislation anyway. It was thoroughly impracticable. All efforts to overthrow Baal worship had failed. Such good kings as Joash and Uzziah had left these altars standing and the groves untouched. It was very plain that Hezekiah was being lead to this act by the women, and the prophets who were never satisfied unless they were crying out against some evil.

Why could not Hezekiah be content with moral suasion as others had been before him? But Hezekiah was firm. The reform was complete. The people of God triumphed, and now in the nineteenth century Leopold Van Ranke, the great historian and critic, in speaking of that period of the world's history says:

Amidst the universal ruin Jerusalem alone stood erect. Here Hezekiah had renounced all the religious infidelities of his predecessors, put an end to the idolatrous rites, and restored the service of Jehovah in its purity. It is necessary to realize widely the whole situation at this time in order to comprehend and to do justice to such a presence as that of the prophet Isaiah, the most gifted of all the prophets in intellectual and spiritual power. He united together the king and the people, so that Jerusalem was regarded as a bulwark against the Assyrians, and the neighboring people who sought to save themselves from them took refuge thither.—The Advance.

A TRIBUTE TO ST. JOHN.

If Governor John P. St. John should be elected president of this United States, there would be a perfectly unspoiled citizen in the White House. The elevation would not hurt him a particle, and the friends of to day would still be his dearest friends to-morrow. Unassuming, modest, strong in his friendship and convictions, I believe there is no honester man in public life in America; no man more conscientious, more consistent in his teaching and his practice. Through a long, hard, single-handed struggle with adverse fortunes, St. John at last reached a high place and reaped high rewards, and he has come through the long flight with clean hands; without a smear or taint upon his character. And, strong and pronounced as are his qualities as a leader of men, an executive officer, an orator, the brightest traits of the man's character shine forth most brilliantly in his domestic life, in the social circle.

It has often been my good fortune to have him a guest in my home, and no man meets a warmer welcome at its doors. From the little woman whose voice will never bid him welcome to an earthly home again, down to the Prince, the whole house was glad when his well known voice was heard in the hall, and many a long afternoon and merry evening has flown away like an hour with anecdote, reminiscence, argument, suggestion, story of travel and adventure of long ago dropping from his lips. All children love St. John; and he knows how to talk to them.

Some of the best addresses to the little people I ever heard were made by him in the little villages of Ardmore and Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, to the most delighted audiences that ever listened to a Presidential candidate. His voice, his manner is pleasing, easy and attractive; his eyes are tender as a woman's; his sympathies quick and earnest, and withal he carries in his well poised head a stock of hard, honest, rare common sense. He comes of good old Huguenot stock, as his name indicates, and "Saint" is the quaint and pleasant name by which his near relatives address him. He makes friends of men without apparently trying to win them; where he is best known his strength is greatest, and whether he polls ten thousand votes or ten million he will be the same St. John—a big-hearted, clear-headed, honest, consistent man. I am aware, by the way, that the Hawkeye isn't an overwhelmingly enthusiastic St. John paper, but then it is a great, broad-souled paper that rejoices to speak the truth about a foeman worthy of its steel pen.—R. J. BURDETTE, in the Burlington Hawkeye.

Listen to "Aunt Hitty" on "Throwing away your vote." "Wal now, Jonathan, mebbe yere right, and then agin, mebbe yere wrong. I s'pose 'tis ruther agin a man's pride to be a doin' suthin' that can't count right away, but if I recollect rightly, the Lord has allez hed a way of askin' people to do jest that sort o' thing for righteousness' sake. Don't ye mind them seven air walks roun' Jericho, one walk aroun' a day thet never amounted to nothin'. I spect some of them ole Israelites pestered Joshua's life half out o' him, runnin' up every day or two an' sayin' within like, 'Don't ye see, Joshua, yere just throwin' away yere walk?' But Joshua kept right on, coz God had commanded of him tu, an' I guess thet's the best thing you kin do, Jonathan; keep right on votin' prohibition, blowin' ram's horns and all thet, an' bime-by 'll come the long blast, an' Jericho 'll be flat before yere face an' eyes."—Union Signal.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MRS. GOUGAR AGAIN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In the interest of woman suffrage, and of Christianity as well, which has done more than all else for the elevation of woman, and through a knowledge of the principles of which the rights of women have come to be recognized, I wish to make a few additional notes of Mrs. Gougar's recent lectures in Menomonie, that your readers may see that some of the ablest Christian women of the land are engaged in this movement, and have the best good of society at heart.

Mrs. Gougar was present at our Sabbath-school, took part in the Bible class, and addressed the school, giving an account of some of her observations of the Salvation Army; commending their work, and exhorting the school to a wise improvement of the more favorable circumstances and opportunities they are enjoying than the street Arabs for whose salvation the "Army" is laboring. Mrs. G. is a thorough believer in the divinity of Christ. In defining his person and character in the Bible class, she said: "He is the best of man and the best of God."

We are very sorry that any of the leading woman suffragists refuse to confess the divinity and supremacy of Christ, and to acknowledge him as their personal and only Saviour. But Christ, who is the "Head of all principality and power," is fast giving the leading strings of this movement into the hands of those godly women who delight to "crown him Lord of all." Then notice how a favoring providence arranged for the rapid and unexpected spread of truth upon this subject.

There was at the time a large Teacher's Institute in session here, so that representatives from all parts of the county were privileged with the opportunity of listening to her words. She addressed the Institute by special invitation, and her words will not soon be forgotten. She would have teachers make a special confidant of the "bad boy," and conquer him by kindness and firmness combined. She made a powerful plea for the Bible in the schools, and regards the expulsion of it from the schools as the greatest calamity that has happened to our people. She would have it read and taught in the schools not in the interest of any sect, but for its controlling power over the character and habits of the young. She says that the great lack of reverence and respect for age, so apparent in the schools, is largely owing to the absence of the Bible. She told the School Board of Lafayette that if they took the Bible out of the school she would not teach; and they didn't, for they knew she would do as she pleased about it anyway.

Mrs. G. urged upon the lady teachers that if they would have the same wages for the same work as men they must have the ballot. After teaching a couple of years in Lafayette, as assistant in the Central school building, the Board surprised her with a request to take the principalship, assuring her that she would, in their judgment, do better work than the man who had occupied the position. She accepted the proposal, naturally expecting wages to correspond. The Board in their magnaminity proposed that as the man had received $50 per month, and she as assistant only $20, they would, in consideration of placing her in his shoes to do better work than he, pay her $25. So she was to have the honor and the "experience," but not the "capital." She said that she had received a letter of confession from a lady she had met with a few days before, and who at the time was stoutly opposed to female suffrage. She was associated as a school teacher with two gentlemen. They all went in company to the School Board to ask for an increase of wages. The clerk frankly told the gentlemen that he was anxious to retain his position, and assured them that if they would promise to vote for him at the next election he would grant their request. To this they agreed, and their wages were raised. But he could offer no encouragement to the lady. She is ready now to accept the ballot. Now this proves the power of the ballot as a means of securing the rights of woman. There might be some women base enough to "sell their votes." But if the women of the land could vote, we think they would soon "fix things" by law so that men who would offer bribes out of the public funds, for personal reward, would have to take a back seat, and women would have equal wages for equal work.

The evening lecture was devoted mainly to the moral and political phases of woman suffrage. She would not claim the ballot for woman on the ground of what it would accomplish, but as a natural right. Men of all nations come among us, and the ballot is put in their hands before they can read the first line of our Constitution; but the women of the land, as a whole, no matter how learned and refined, are denied this right. An ex-slave, engaged in whitewashing for Mrs. Gougar, listened attentively to a discussion between her and a friend on the subject of woman suffrage. Squaring himself around, and leaning upon his brush-handle, he said: "Mrs. Gougar, do you think you are eddicated up to the pint of casting the ballot?"

As a quietus to the alarm so many express lest women should get out of their spherc, she claims that the sexes do not have different spheres, but different duties in the same sphere. And surely, as men and women have so many duties and privileges in common, why should the best and cqually intelligent portion of our citizens be denied the privilege of casting a vote for the man they want in office, or against the man they do not want?

Mrs. G. gave the name of the woman in St. Louis who looked up and exposed the vile and rascally proceedings that werc carried on therc under the act legalizing public prostitution, and the arresting by secrct police of innocent girls upon the street, and dragging them to the dens of infamy and despair. This lady, appealed to by one of those victims, secured the repcal of the infamous law. There is, Mrs. G. affirms, a project on foot for the passage of an act by Congress legalizing the same infamy in the District of Columbia. She says a few sharp, good women in that body would watch and thwart all such infamous plans. And such women are needed in the Legislatures of the States to protect the morals of the country. In Wyoming women cannot be manipulated in the interest of party. It is not unusual to hear the remark in caucus and convention, "There is no use nominating that man, the women will not vote for him," when an attempt is made in the interest of "party" to nominate a man not up to the standard of women in character and conduct. And, as she says in her paper, "It would be a happy and hopeful change if some element could be introduced into politics, not only in Wyoming, but all over the country, that could not be manipulated in the interest of party, but would hear the truth, for or against all parties, and vote for principle instead of party. This element can be found in no other place but in the women at the polls."

True, Mrs. Gougar advises voting for Blaine, as do Mrs. Stanton and Miss Anthony, for several reasons. "Woman suffrage is a national issue, and, as such, has secured a footing in Congress, and stands to-day on the calendar waiting for its turn in the decisions of the United States Congress." "Judging from the votes of the last two sessions of Congress, it is reasonable to belicve that when both branches shall have a two-thirds majority Republican, that the Sixteenth Amendment will receive such a vote as to send it on to the States for adoption or rejection." Then it is vastly important to keep Cleveland and the Democratic party, the open advocates of the liquor traffic, out of office. But she gives Mr. Blaine a most terrible scathing in the last issue of her paper:

"One would suppose Mr. Blaine too conscientious to sneeze if to sneeze were not a 'national issue.' No, Mr. Blaine, if your party were not better than you are, we would say, Retire a man to private life who makes indecent haste to boast of neglected duty. Too much demagogue, Mr. Blaine, in this unmanly act. We will endure you because we must."

There are some of us who, with Mrs. Gougar, believe that as a matter of simple justice to the women they should have the ballot, and appreciate its indispensableness to the success of prohibition and other great reforms. But the Prohibition party has the woman suffrage plank in its platform. Furthermore, the great W. C. T. U. has been the means of developing the woman suffrage sentimcnt more rapidly and effectively than any other organized agency. The old party has passed resolutions from time to time, partly for the sake of justice to the women, and partly to save the life of the Republican party. But if from fear of the whisky element the great party leaves both these great issues out of its platform, what guarantee have we that a Republican Congress will not, for fear or favor, find "how not" to favor a Sixteenth Amendment? We believe the shortest and surest road to victory is to vote for St. John and trust the Lord.

POLYGAMY IN JERUSALEM AND THE UNITED STATES.

Polygamy and its penalty in the case of David and his two rebellious sons, Absalom and Adonijah, may furnish Americans with warnings against this sin against the divine law for mankind in all that pertains to the family relationship.

The father and mother as one are jointly interested in training each of their children, and love naturally rules in all their hearts. But polygamy leaves each family chiefly to the mother, and the father, by neglecting them, entails future misery upon himself and all concerned. Not only the family, but the social relations around and the political rights are all affected; while, instead of loyal adherenee to the established forms divinely ordered, selfishness becomes the sole law and corruption and treachery run riot, as in the case of Adonijah and his supporters.

As David was sovereign of Israel, the American people rule their land. As polygamy caused two rebellions against David by two of its sons, how many rebellions shall result from the sons of polygamists growing up in Utah and extending over other territory?

Our national legislature should enact laws against polygamy; should have done it from the first, and compelled allegiance to this fundamental law of our country, or let such men forfeit their allegiance and continue as aliens. The foundation principles of our people and government are Christian, not pagan, and pagan principles of polygamy are de facto alien in all respects, and as fraught with evil as ever were those of negro or any other slavery of mankind.

LESSON IV.—Oct. 26, 1884.—The Temple Built. 1 Kings 6: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Mine house shall be called an house of prayer. Isaiah 56: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

MASONRY AND SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

1. Masonic falsehoods. Vs. 2–11. King Solomon and his temple are very conspicuous features in Blue Lodge Masonry. We have in this chapter and the parallel places in chapters 3 and 4 of 2 Chronicles, a minute description of the building of this wonderful edifice, but Masonry tells us a great deal about it which cannot be found in the Bible. In the lecture on the Master Mason's degree the candidate is told that "it was Solomon's wisdom which contrived the mighty fabric. But if we look at 1 Chron. 28: 11, 12, 20, we shall see that God himself was the designer; that he gave the plan of it to David, who in turn gave it to Solomon. The candidate is further informed that "during the seven years the temple was building it rained not in the daytime that the workmen might not be obstructed in their labors." If such a miracle were wrought we should certainly find it recorded here. The master workman, Hiram, in the legend of Hiram Abiff, is said to have been buried under the Holy of Holies, though a dead body was by the ceremonial law unclean and could not have been lawfully brought into the temple at all, much less into the most sacred part. We are also told that it was in the Holy of Holies that the two Hirams and King Solomon held their lodge. How could this be when only the high priest had a right to enter, and he but once a year? Yet these are only a small part of the ridiculously false and unscriptural statements with which Masonic lectures abound.

2. The temple a type of ths redeemed soul. V. 7. We have here a beautiful illustration of God's method of working when he would build a human soul into a spiritual temple for himself. Like those hewed stones prepared long previous, the influences which go to shape it, the pious ancestry, the words or the life of some Christian friend, the book or the sermon read or heard in childhood, reach far back of the special hour of conversion. And as the temple rose silently, without the noise of axe or hammer, so rises the spiritual fabric, without a sound to tell of the wonderful work going on within. God's kingdom is a growing thing, and like the mustard tree it grows in silence.

3. God's house a house of prayer. Vs. 12, 13. This promise involved the keeping of the temple sacred. God cannot dwell in a polluted house. Our Golden Text shows us the grand plan and purpose of every Christian church to be a house of prayer. When we use it for purposes of worldly pleasure, or turn it into a place for money getting, though for a good object, we make it a den of thieves. But when we allow the lodge to intrude with its pagan ceremonies we do even worse, for it is enthroning anti-Christ in the very seat of Jehovah. God cannot dwell among a people who deliberately insult him by bringing their false worships into his sanctuary.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What words of Scripture apply to pastors who teach or approve Masonic falsehoods? Jer. 23: 26, 32; Ezra 13: 8, 9, 22. How did God look upon false worships in his holy place? Ez. 8: 15–17. By what vision did he show the punishment? Ez. 9: 1–7.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

The Building of the Temple. The erection of this splendid sanctuary was, no doubt, the greatest event, both in Jewish and Gentile eyes, in the history of the Holy City. It made Jerusalem what it had not been till then, —the religious capital.—Hammond. The temple was purely Jewish, and was not copied after the architecture of other nations. The walls were of hewn stone, and were lined inside and out with cedar wood on which were carved figures of palm-trees, cups of flowers and cherubim, and these were overlaid with gold.—Geikie. The rugged top of Moriah was levelled with immense labor; its sides, which to the east and south were precipitous, were faced with a wall of stone, built up perpendicular from the bottom of the valley, so as to appear to those who looked down of most terrific height—a work of prodidgious skill and labor, as the immense stones were strongly mortised together and wedged into the rock.—Milman. Dr. Robinson mentions some immense stones in the foundations, of great antiquity. One of these, in the south-west angle, measures 30 ft. 10 in. long, and 6½ ft. broad; several others vary from 20 to 25 ft. long by 5 ft. in thickness. These large stones are carefully hewn and bevelled at the edges. There seems little doubt that some of these stones remain in the very place where Solomon's workmen placed them. Amid the wreck and havoc of war, amid the changes and chances of the world, the colossal foundations of Solomon remain undisturbed. Everything upon them has perished; not a trace of tower or temple remains; nay, their very sites are doubtful. But "through all these great and various demolitions and restorations on the surface, its foundations, with their gigantic walls, have been indestructibly preserved" (Ewald). After the lapse of nearly three thousand years, "the foundation standeth sure." We may see in the Solomonic foundation (1) A Picture of Christ. We have most certain warrants of Holy Scripture for seeing in these venerable relics an image of the Eternal Son. He is the one foundation (1 Cor. 3: 11); the chief cornerstone (Eph. 2: 20); the same yesterday, to-day and forever (Heb. 13: 8). That sure foundation can never fail. How many systems of philosophy, how many oppositions of science have had their day and ceased to be! How many proud empires have tottered to their fall! How many dynasties are extinct and forgotten! But the carpenter's son still rules in the hearts of men, and the cross of Christ "towers above the wreck of time."—Hammond.

"And the house," i. e., the main building, the temple proper. "The length thereof was threescore cubits." The cubits were probably 18 inches, so that the building was 90 ft. long, 30 ft. wide, and 45 ft. high. The whole height was 30 cubits, but the rooms into which this space was divided, the Holy Place, and the Holy of Holies, were finished only 20 cubits, "30 ft." in height (1 Kings 6: 16–20). In all its dimensions, length, breadth, and height, the sanctuary itself was exactly double those of the Tabernacle.—Pulpit Com. It was rather a monument of the wealth than the architectural skill and science of the people. It was a wonder of the world, from the splendor of its materials more than the grace, boldness, or majesty of its height and dimensions. Compared with the religious buildings of Assyria, Babylon, or Egypt, a structure like the Temple, apart from its vast substructures, was hardly worthy of notice, either for size or splendor. The great Temple of Amon, at Thebes, for example, ultimately extended to a length of 1170 feet, while the ruins of its associated edifices still cover a plateau nearly four miles in circumference. Nor is the contrast between the simplicity of the Israelitc temple, and that of those on the Nile, less striking. Its exterior seems to have been entirely plain, and though there was a pillared porch, it shrank into insignificance before the long avenues of mighty columns of Egyptian sanctuaries, the alleys of sphinxes, the obelisks, and the vast pylons all in common with the temples themselves, covered with sculpture and ornament. But the lavish employment of gold for the decoration of the interior of Solomon's building exceeds anything told us of other ancient temples.—Geikie.

"Against the walls of the house round about." In order to preserve the sanctity of the Temple, and at the same time to allow the attachment to it of secular buildings,—sleeping apartments, probably for the priests and other attendants, and for store-rooms,—Solomon made rebatements in the wall of the Temple, or, in other words, built it externally in steps. The beams, which formed the roof of the chambers and the floors of the other stories, were then laid on the steps or "rests" in the wall, not piercing the wall or causing any real union of the secular with the sacred building. It resulted from this arrangement that the lowest chambers were the narrowest, and the uppermost considerably the widest of all, the wall receding each time by the space of a cubit.—Peloubet

"And the house....was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither." This was probably in obedience to the prohibition recorded in Exod. 20: 25 and Deut. 27: 5. It expressed the king's sense of the sanctity of the work. The tranquillity of the scene must not be broken by the clang of inharmonious sounds. "Like some tall palm, the noiseless fabric grew." The fact is suggestive. The building up of the Church of God is a silent, hidden process. Outward visible agencies must be employed, but the real constructive forces are out of sight. Truth works secretly and silently in the souls of men. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation."—Pulpit Com.

A spacious quadrangle, on all sides enclosed by a wall, formed the boundary of the sacred grounds. The portion nearest the walls was the Outer Court. Part of this, on a higher level than the rest and nearest the Temple, was enclosed by a low wall of squared stones, with a coping of cedar beams, and formed the court of the priests. A higher wall ran all around the area. Its surface was lower than the Temple, so that the holy building rose above it on all sides. Trees adorned the open space —the dark cedar, the palm, and the olive especially.—Geikie.

"Concerning this house." The meaning is, "So far as this house goes, thou art obedient (2 Sam. 7: 13; 1 Chro 17: 12, etc.); if thou wilt be obedient in other things also, then will I perform my word," etc., God's promises being always conditional.—Peloubet.

"My word which I spake unto David." The promises made to David were—(1) that he should be succeeded by one of his sons (2 Sam. 7: 12; Ps. 132: 11); (2) that the kingdom should be established in the line of his descendants forever, if they were faithful (Ps. 132: 12); and (3) that the Israelites should be no more afflicted as beforetime (2 Sam. 7: 10). These promises are now confirmed to Solomon, but on the express condition of obedience, and two further promises are added (see the next verse). —Cook.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

This twelve-page pamphlet is now issued in a new and attractive style, with a neat cover. The orders for it which more than exhausted the first edition testify to its popularity.

"AMERICANS HAVE NO CONFLICTING INTERESTS RESPECTING SECRET SOCIETIES. WE SHALL HAVE BUT ONE OPINION WHEN WE UNDERSTAND THEM."

Thus opens an exposition of the relation of the Secret Empire to Civil Government, which will remain of great and permanent value to every citizen until the triumph of the American party shall have put the secret lodge system under the ban of law. SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Flizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St, Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

Advertisers who wish to secure the attention of the best class of purchasers, will find it to their advantage to secure space in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

BIRNEY.

The sketch of JAMES G. BIRNEY, candidate of the Liberty Party for President, in pamphlet for 25 cents. A limited number of copies of this handsome pamphlet for sale at the N. C. A. office.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of history a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD,
HENRY L. KELLOGG, } Editors.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1884.

Dissenters are the electric lights of reform. The Puritans, Scotch and English, were outside dissenters from the English Establishment from Elizabeth to Victoria. D'Israeli and Bright, a Jew and a Quaker, have been members of the British cabinet in spite of religious tests, and dissent is wearing away the "Established Church." Gerrit Smith and C. C. Foote were run by dissenters from the Free Soil party in 1848. They would not give up "Abolition" for "Slavery Restriction;" and they kept the watch-fires burning, till they saw the slave-holders would fight slavery-restriction as savagely as they would abolition and drove off thousands on thousands to our ranks who saw slavery was for the whole country or none. Then they turned in with us and were "in at the death." So dissenters from St. John and Daniel, though fewer than in 1848, are among the most devoted and honest men we have.

Ever on before
They scold, and fret, and study, and explore:

and will continue to do so till they find in truth that the American party loses neither name nor platform.

"Why has ex-Governor St. John not announced to the American party his real position on the anti-secrecy question?"—Geo. T. Dissette, Seceded Master Mason.

Ans. Five months ago St. John was a Republican. Then Prohibitionists asked: "If he is against liquor why does he not answer our letters and join our party?"

The reason was, he wished to wait till June 3d, when thousands would follow him out of the Republican party, who would not follow him then.

July 23d ult., St. John was nominated by the Pittsburgh Prohibition convention and accepted their nomination; though he has said to Senator Pomeroy, before witnesses, "I can stand on every plank of the American platform." And he (St. John) had our printed platform in his hand when he said it.

Pomeroy expressed a wish to withdraw, and did withdraw; and advised to go for St. John, and Conant joined in the advice, and our National Committee and two conventions, Iowa and Illinois, ratified their advice.

Why then does not St. John come out and accept our nomination, and show his colors? The answer is: His colors are the colors of a Prohibitionist who stands on this plank with others:

"That the charters of all secret lodges should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law."

Why not then come out and join the American party? Because, if he would do so, ten thousand men who will now vote for him, would say and think he had sold out the Prohibitionists to the Americans. Because he does not wish to flit from one platform to another. Because he has given his word to our candidate, Pomeroy, before witnesses, and that is enough.

"Ah, well! I would rather have an out and out American candidate."

Ans. So would we, but we have not got one, and so we thank God for St. John; shall vote for St. John; hurrah for St. John, and we mean to elect St. John.

THE ADVANCE.

This bright paper seems to be following in the wake of the Independent, the New York Weekly Witness and a host of other religious sheets, in their call to the voters of the United States, to stand, next November, against the Janizaries of the brewery and the still. We anticipate trouble for its editor, because, as honest Sancho Panza says, "In our bad world, virtue was always more persecuted by the bad than supported by the good." We hope our brother of the Interior will not descend to the littleness of seeking to profit by the head winds which the Advance must meet in sailing along the coast of Prohibition. Let us rejoice in good, whoever does it. Theoretical orthodoxy is good. The practical orthodoxy of the ballot is better.

Old Dr. Bishop of Miami University used to say in the Abolition war: "Brathraen, if we cannot braest the storm with our Abolition brathraen, let us at least have grace to stand at their baacks." If the Interior cannot touch prohibition with one of its fingers, let it at least have grace to "stand at our backs." We shall enjoy its able editorials and sound theological teaching all the better for it. The grog-shop is the fountain of our national heresies, and the lodge is their school and temple.

Do not fail to read, and re-read the Advance editorial in this number—"Hezekiah and 1884."

A DAY OF PRAYER.

Dr. A. J. Jutkins, Corresponding Secretary of the National Prohibition Committee, sends us the call to prayer which appears on a preceding page. It is a Christian muezzin; the first, we believe, ever issued from a political party in the United States, as the Prohibition convention in Pittsburgh was the first political gathering we ever heard opened with "Nearer My God to Thee."

The secret lodgites who act with the Prohibitionists will not keep Oct. 29th. If they do their prayers will not be heard, for Christ is not, never was, and never will be in secret lodges. "Wherefore if they say unto you, behold he is in the secret chambers; believe it not." Matt. 24:26. This makes the argument all the stronger why the American party should join in this day of fasting and prayer. Has not our venerable Paxton brother a word for our next number on this great theme?

"O come let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker, for he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand."

STATESMANSHIP OF WOMEN.

Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert repeated her Washington lecture of last March, to the students of Wheaton College last week. On the evening after the lecture the Cynosure editor, who introduced her in the College chapel, in company with Francis Bradley, Esq., called on Mrs. Harbert, who lives with her husband and children in Evanston, Ill., near neighbor, both in distance and in spirit, to Miss Frances and Mrs. Mary B. Willard.

The lecture exhibits the genius of industry and research, and no one can listen to it without a profound impression, amounting to astonishment and admiration for the capacity and power of woman over mind, and the record she has made in history. It resembles, in its impression, the speech of John Quincy Adams in the House of Representatives on the women of the Bible, which equalled or excelled any other speech he ever made.

The women of antiquity, presented by Mrs. Harbert, are rather the prodigies than the models of the sex: like the Vermont boy, Zerah Colburn, who knew arithmetic by instinct when a child, but who made but a moderate Methodist minister when a man. But one must hear the lecture to judge of it. In research, it is immense; in spirit, Christian; and, in theory and practical effect, intended to make the ideal woman (in her own words) "a help-meet for man." And she illustrates her theory in her own pleasant home.

The great defect of the lecture is less hers than that of the woman movement. Wendell Phillips makes a much larger figure in Mrs. Harbert's lecture than another reformer, to whom woman is infinitely more indebted, Jesus the Son of Mary, outside of whose ideas and teachings, woman is to-day a menial, a bauble and pawn.

The American party wishes to give the ballot to woman as a defense of her weakness, a purifier of politics, and a prevention of crime; but not to make her less like herself and more like a man. Nor do we imagine that she is to find her millennium in the suffrage. And as to statesmanship; though we should not faint away to see a sprinkling of good women in Congress, and our Capitol turned into a Quaker meeting house, filled for the transaction of business, we do not expect that we or our children will live to see that sight. Nor do the history and present state of the woman movement give us tokens of the near approach of that change in human society.

Mrs. Harbert lauded Mr. Garrison, Lucy Stone, etc., as the harbingers of woman's enfranchisement. Now, in Boston, this stellar host of harbingers met in Peace Convention and

"Resolved, As every government is upheld by physical strength, and its laws are enforced at the point of the bayonet, we therefore exclude ourselves from every legislative and judicial body, we repudiate all human politics, worldly honors, and stations of authority. If we cannot occupy a seat in the Legislature or on the bench; neither can we elect others as our substitutes in any such capacity.—Declaration of Boston Peace Convention, Sept. 20, 1838."

Who penned this creed of disorganization and anarchy, we, at this writing, do not recollect. It is the style of Mr. Garrison. But we know that it was the creed of the Garrison party, and neither Phillips nor Wright, nor Parker nor any female leader of that day, uttered one word of protest; though they could not fail to see that it takes from property, home marriage, and every human relation and interest, all legal protection; leaving them no shield but mere human good will.

At what time these Christless people changed their creed to their present sound doctrine of prohibition of crime by law, we know not. Then, it was a sin for men, even, to vote. Now, they hold it sinful to keep women from voting. The editor of the Cynosure, then a youth, disowned the Garrison faction; took his stand by the communion table and the ballot box, and has stood there till slavery is fallen, and the gentle groups of womanhood, like fawns from thickets, are entering into the arena of public life. And the Cynosure confesses that it feels no particular pride in the earlier woman suffragists, in this present Presidential campaign. The editor paid his dollar and admired the speeches of the woman suffrage convention in Washington last March. We have received the annual report of that body, and, in it, a circular, signed Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony, headed "Stand by the Republican Party!" We see that Mrs. Livermore is electioneering for Mr. Blaine, and are informed that Phœbe Cousins goes for Gen. Butler; and, at Marshalltown, Iowa, Oct. 1st, a lady Prohibitionist told us that Mrs. J. Ellen Foster was opposing the Willard women, and seeking a division of the Prohibitionists, and diverting votes from St. John to Blaine! Whatever this means, it does not mean "statesmanship." But no follies of Babel-builders, male or female, can ever induce us to wrench from the light fingers of the woman who wants it, the feathery ballot. The vast, overwhelming majorities in our prisons are men; and in our churches, women. And if our churches contain the "salt of the earth" we are willing the ballot-box should be salted.

—Secretary Stoddard went to Wisconsin Saturday on N. C. A. business, expecting to be gone several days. His first stop was at Bro. M. R. Britten's, Vienna, Walworth county.

—The lines glow under the pen of our Oberlin correspondent this week and his enthusiasm will catch and glow in a thousand eyes. Oberlin seems to have had one of her old-fashioned tremendous days: and the triumph is all the more complete as we have just read in the Wooster, O., Herald, this item:

"When Prof. Frost announced last week to the students of Oberlin College that Gov. St. John would speak in that place on Monday, it was greeted by hisses from a considerable portion of the house. That was smart."

—The next page looks like a return to business on the part of our reform friends. The lecture work has lagged for over a year deplorably. Let us make amends this winter and make the land resound with fact and argument earnestly but kindly laid before the thinking men and women of hundreds of neighborhoods.

—A continuation of the Reform News Department lays by till next number—and it's the best part of the story: how they organized in Danville, Mo., and gloriously triumphed against the lodge foe.

—The Illinois State Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last week in Peoria. Eighty-three counties were represented, and the word from every quarter was hopeful. Miss Mary Allen West of Galesburg was re-elected president of the body.

The National W. C. T. U. holds its next, the eleventh, annual meeting in St. Louis, October 22 to 25. The prominence of prohibition as a political issue will give a special interest to this meeting. The officers of the Union appointed the 7th inst. as a day of prayer for the convention; on the Sabbath before it meets, meetings will be held in all the churches of St. Louis, and each morning during the convention, from 11 to 12 o'clock, all business will be suspended and a prayer and consecration meeting held under the care of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith.

JOHN A. CONANT.

Lima, Ind., Oct. 9th, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—In your "reply to several letters," in the last paper, you say: "Notice that he (Mr. Lewis of Willimantic) was at the Pittsburgh convention, but neither he nor Mr. Conant were at Chicago."

Whether so intended or not, the above sentence seems to imply, that Mr. Conant has not "stood boldly, manfully, and eloquently" for our cause, as had Mr. Pomeroy. Without any wish to make invidious distinctions between the friends of our cause, I wish to say that the cause has no truer friend than John A. Conant. He was not, it is true, at Chicago, nor at Washington, simply because he could not be at either place; but he paid the full expenses of one to go in his stead, to Washington, and in part to go to Chicago. This ought to be known. J. L. Barlow.

Note.—There was no thought of a slight to Mr. Conant. We all know him too well to believe his absence was from any want of fidelity or zeal to the American cause.—Ed. Cynosure.

THE KANSAS CONVENTION.

INTERESTING REPORT FROM THE SECRETARY.

Dear Cynosure:—Though Bro. Stoddard has likely ırnished you the main items of interest arising in our awrence convention, yet in looking over the minutes I ote and send you the following:

The State Christian Association of Kansas met accordg to arrangement in the United Presbyterian church, awrence, Kans., at 7:30 o'clock Monday evening, and as called to order by Rev. R. Loggan, first vice-presient. After reading the Scriptures and prayer, Rev. J. Stoddard delivered an able address, showing chiefly he influence and workings of Freemasonry within the omestic circle.

Tuesday morning, after devotional exercises, the time as chiefly spent in discussing matters of business. Rev. F. Worrell, president of State Association, appeared nd took his place in the convention.

On assembling in the afternoon, an address showing he false teachings of Masonry, as to the great doctrine a resurrection and its opposition to Christ, was delivred by Bro. Worrell. Various questions were asked by udience, and answered by the speaker.

While considering the items of unfinished business, ev. R. Loggan reported that he had fulfilled his appointent to attend the convention of the N. C. A. at Washgton, D. C., and expressed himself well satisfied with he purchase of the property by the Association. The onvention re-affirmed its recommendation of last convenon, "That each congregation or Sabbath-school, in mpathy with the Christian Association, be urged to nd one or more delegates to the State conventions."

The convention appointed the following officers:

Rev. J. A. Richards, Ft. Scott, president.
W. W. McMillan, Olathe, secretary.
Revs. B. F. Worrell, Adams and Loggan, vice-presients.
Rev. S. Alexander, Linden, treasurer.
Brethren Richards, Brooks (of Olathe), Worrell, McMillan, and State Agent, were made an Executive Committee.

After convening in the evening, S. E. Starry worked nd explained, with fitting comments, the first degree of Masonry, with telling effect. This being completed, ev. P. S. Feemster being called made a statement reecting the mobbing of S. E. Starry and himself at the own of Dunlap, Kansas. He said the first night eggs ere used, the second stones, one striking Mr. Starry on he side of his head, with stunning and almost fatal effect.

After devotional exercises Wednesday morning, Oct. st, Pres. Worrell in the chair, the Association resolved o hold its regular annual meeting on the first Tuesday of eptember. The Executive Committee was directed to dvertise the time of meeting for at least four weeks in he Cynosure and other papers friendly to the cause. The ame committee to fix the place of meeting. The State gent, P. S. Feemster, presented his report of work one and of finances connected therewith. An expreson of thanks was given to the churches and individuals ho have contributed in aid of our work.

Selected from the report of the Committee on Resolutions, we send you the following:

"Resolved, That the English language fails to furnish uitable epithets whereby we can express our abhorrence f the late outrage, committed at Dunlap, on all that we old dear and sacred, in the brutal assault on our State gent and his co-worker, S. E. Starry. The tidings of he riot awakens us from slumbers in which we were reaming that the days of lawless violence were passing way, and that the millenium of equal rights was about o dawn on the free and sacred soil of Kansas, at least; ut we are sorry to say that the former things have not ntirely passed away, and that there is a secret power broad even in this commonwealth which hesitates not o smite to the earth those who dare to lay bare to public iew the inner workings of the mystery of iniquity. We ain would believe that not a few members of the soalled craft of ancient, free and accepted Masons are eartily ashamed of the course pursued by their deluded rethren to prevent the workings of the Sublime or Master's degree, and also that not a few of them regret the ecessity imposed on them by their obligation to defend heir erring brethren, 'right or wrong,' and hope they will hrow as few obstacles as possible in the way of sifting his outrage unto its final conclusion.

"Resolved, That the injury sustained by Bro. Starry hen about to work the third degree in Masonry at Dunap, Kans., on the 20th of Sept. last, endears him the more to us, and we do most devoutly thank our kind Father in heaven that the stone thrown did not become he messenger of death, as was evidently intended that should, and that our brother is in no wise intimidated y his injury from doing as he has heretofore done, and e take great pleasure in endorsing him in his arduous and dangerous duties. We cannot but admire the 'grit and grace' of Bro. Starry and we hope all may learn from him a lesson in this direction.

"Resolved, That we repeat our assurance of confidence in, and approval of, the Christian Cynosure, and heartily commend it to the patronage and support of all Christian people.

"Resolved, That we approve the American Publishing Company at Washington, D. C., and its organ, the American, and recommend this agency as a proper channel for the party's political discussion of our reform and its extended circulation among the voters and people of Kansas and other States.

"Resolved, That we are deeply interested in whatever affects the civil as well as the social and religious condition of our country, and that while disclaiming any partisan or sectarian character as a Christian association, we do as citizens express our sympathy with the principles embodied in the American platform, especially with planks announcing the position of that party on the recognition of God in civil government: the abolition of all secret lodges; and the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, sale and use of all intoxicating liquors."

After the election and resignation of Rev. P. S. Feemster, as State Agent, Rev. R. Loggan, of Clifton, was requested to act in that place for the coming year, the Executive Committee being authorized to fill any vacancy that may arise in the State agency.

During the afternoon S. E. Starry, being called, gave his experience in leaving the lodge, and the unceasing efforts of his Christian wife in rescuing him from the snares by which he was entangled.

A committee was appointed, Rev. J. P. Stoddard chairman, to investigate carefully the recent outrage committed Sept. 19th and 20th at Dunlap, and publish the same if thought advisable.

On the third and last evening of our convention Bro. Starry worked the third degree in Masonry, explaining and commenting upon the same as he proceeded. The house was well filled, and good order prevailed to the very end. The convention adjourned. Benediction by Rev. B. F. Worrell.

UP AND DOWN IN NEW ENGLAND.

Willimantic, Conn., Oct. 7, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—The typical New Englander is thoughtful, earnest, not easily moved or changed, with profound moral convictions and capable of impressing them on others. Such has been the New Englander of the past; such were the men who have mainly given character to the great North-west. But the New England er of to-day has been largely displaced by foreign immigration, and, as a result of the vast and rapid growth of manufacturing interests, has society undergone a great and undesirable change.

It is only in the rural villages that we see New England character as it existed fifty years ago.

This is seen in the vote of yesterday on license, in which the no-license vote was not largely increased, and was in most places overborne by the baser elements of society.

Since I last wrote I have visited Westerly, Providence and Pautucket, R. I. At the latter place I attended the annual State meeting of the W. C. T. U. The large Music Hall was well filled and a more earnest, able and thoroughly Christian assemblage I have rarely met. The convention continued four days.

Here I met Rev. Mr. Burley, pastor of the Christian church, who highly appreciates the Cynosure, and amidst abounding opposition and difficulties endeavors to bear testimony against the unfruitful works of darkness. At Providence I met our beloved brother, A. M. Paull, who took me to his pleasant home at Riverside, where I was kindly entertained and met the Perry brothers, who are also earnest in Christian reform.

From Providence I went to Willimantic, where I addressed the St. John and Daniel club; from there to Simsbury, where I spoke in the town hall; and on Sabbath brother Phillip Bacon took me to Unionville, where we attended service in the Congregational church in the forenoon, and preached for the M. E. minister in the afternoon on the question of to-day. From thence we returned to Montague and attended service in the schoolhouse conducted by the Congregational pastor of Simsbury.

Here I took the cars Monday morning for Plainville, and was most providentially saved from death or serious injury. A mile or two before the train reached that place both the connecting rods and one of the driving wheels suddenly broke and fell down under the engine; and yet the train was not derailed, but stopped so slowly that none of the passengers knew that anything unusual had occurred. Walking to the station I took the train to New Britian, called on our faithful friend, J. C. Fuller, and took the train to Willimantic, where I arrived at 3:30 P. M., and found preparations being made for our convention and good prospects.

I will add that I have found evidence of much activity and earnestness among the Prohibitionists. They will doubtless poll a much larger vote in November than ever before. Judging from the report of yesterday's vote I should call Connecticut a doubtful State, with the chances on the Democratic side. I return from here to Washington. Yours, H. H. Hinman.

STARRY AT MERIDEN, KANSAS.

On the eve of the 25th of September, the people of Meriden had a view of the secret workings of Masonry by an illustrated lecture on the ceremonial of the first degree of Masonry. The first evening the Masons did not seem to be quite reconciled to have their pet institution brought to view so conspicuously, and for a time sought to divert the attention of both speaker and hearers from the main subject by various questions, interrupting in some measure the exercise, but not materially affecting the force of the argument.

On the second night the third degree of Masonry was brought to the view of a crowded audience, who gave a listening ear to the ceremony attending the degree of Master Mason. A desire to get at the truth seemed to animate not only the people generally, but some of the Masons, who had but recently taken the first degree, looked on with a close attention. Possibly they were anticipating another step in Masonry and desired to know how the next degree would appear when brought to light.

May we not hope that many who have never entered the lodge will hereafter be cautious before taking a leap in the dark, and that some who have already taken a step on this ladder will stop where they now are?

M. N. BUTLER IN SOUTHERN IOWA.

Clearfield, Iowa.

Editor Cynosure:—Mr. M. N. Butler, one of the editors of the American, made us glad by his appearance in the western part of Ringgold county, and has done effectual work in a good portion of this vicinity, He distributed, or had it done, nine hundred pages of Anti-masonic literature to one hundred and ten houses, and put forty-three Cynosures in as many country dwellings. He sold several expositions of the lodge, and added to the list of the American readers.

He lectured two nights in the United Brethren church to good and attentive audiences. One seceder from the Masonic lodge endorsed all that was said. There has been a good work done in this neighborhood. Bro. Butler is is doing a very effectual and eminently useful work—he is successful above our expectations.

His lecture on the American platform shows up the mission of the movement in its true lustre, for he throws light on the wisdom, grand ideas and pure principles of the American patriot's platform, which falls little short of inspiration. He has lectured in all twelve times in Ringgold county. Cyrus Smith.

FROM THE OLD BATTLE GROUND.

Woodhull, Steuben Co., N. Y., Oct. 6, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—At the request of Bro. Philo Millard I am at work in this section for the present. Since coming to this place we have received new courage to press this battle on. The foe is strong, but there is victory on our side. We find Bro. Millard to be a man of strong determination and conviction. A man who will stand for principle, even if Ben. Butler or Cleveland is elected. He has been a reader of the Cynosure from its beginning, and has an extensive Masonic and Anti-masonic library. Among other curiosities is an old paper, The Tocsin, published in Cooperstown, N. Y. The first copy dates June 8, 1829.

In reading these papers one seems taken back to the days when our fathers were contending for the principles which have made us as a nation what we are to-day. Here we find the great questions discussed, in a soul-stirring manner, that gave birth to the Republican party, namely, Anti-masonry and anti-slavery. We place Anti-masonry first, because it was made a political issue before anti-slavery, and would have been forever settled had it not been for the fact that the attention of the people was called to the anti-slavery movement. "While the good man slept, the enemy sowed tares." Here also is the trial of Elihu Mather, the man who drove the carriage which conveyed Morgan to his doom. A little further on we read:

THE HOME.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

Some day,
When others braid your thiek brown hair,
And drape your form in silk and lace;
When others call you "dear" and "fair,"
And hold your hands, and kiss your face—
You'll not forget that far above
All other is a mother's love.

Some day,
'Mong strangers in far distant lands,
In your new home beyond the sea,
When at your lips are baby hands,
And children playing at your knee—
Oh, then, as, at your side they grow,
How I have loved you, you will know.

Some day,
When you must feel love's heavy loss,
You will remember other years,
When I, too, bent beneath the cross,
And mix my memory with your tears.
In such dark hours be not afraid;
Within their shadow I have prayed.

Some day,
Your daughter's voice, or smile, or eyes,
My face will suddenly recall;
Then you will pause in sweet surprise,
And your soul unto mine will call,
In that dear, unforgotten prayer,
Which we at evening used to share.

Some day,
A flower, a song, a word, may be
A link between us strong and sweet;
Ah, then, dear child, remember me!
And let your heart to "mother" beat.
My love is with you everywhere—
You cannot get beyond my prayer.

Some day,
At longest, it cannot be long,
I shall with glad impatience wait,
Amid the glory and the song,
For you before the Golden Gate,
After earth's parting and earth's pain,
Never to part. Never again!

A MOTHER'S TACT.

The mother was sewing busily, and Josie, sitting on the carpet beside her, and provided with dull, rounded scissors, and some old magazines, was just as busily cutting out pictures.

"It would litter the carpet"—so said Aunt Martha, who had come in for a cosy chat. Mamma knew this, but she knew that a few minutes work would make all right again, and Josie was happy.

All went well until the little boy found that he had cut of the leg of a horse that he considered a marvel of beauty. It was a real disappointment and grief to the little one.

"Mamma, see!" and half crying he held it up.

"Play he's holding up one foot," the mother said quickly.

"Do real horses, mamma?"

"O, yes, sometimes."

"I will;" and sunshine chased away the cloud that in another minute would have rained down.

It was a little thing, the mother's answer; but the quick sympathy, the ready tact, made all right. The boy's heart was comforted, and he went on with no jar on nerves or temper, and auntie's call lost none of its pleasantness.

"I am tired cutting pies, mamma," said Josie after a while.

"Well, get your horse wagon, and play those bits of paper are wood, and you are going to bring me a load. Draw it over to that corner by the fire, and put them into the kindling-box; play that's the wood-house."

Pleased and proud, the little teamster drew load after load till the papers were all picked up, without his ever thinking that he was doing anything but play.

"Well, I declare," said Aunt Martha, "old as I am, I've learned one thing to-day, and I wish Emily would come in and take lessons, I do."

Mrs. Waldo looked up in some surprise.

"What do you mean, auntie?"

"Well, I spent yesterday afternoon over there," the old lady had a weakness for visiting, and was "auntie" to people generally, "and things were in a snarl, and high-de-low all the time, starting with less than Josie's given you a dozen times since I sat here. I've had a good talk with you, and you've given me pleasant thoughts for a week to come; over there we couldn't hear ourselves speak. It was, 'Don't do that,' and 'You naughty child,' spill and scratch and break and tumble, scold and slap half the time. Emily means well; she loves her children, and never spares herself sewing for them, or nursing them when they are sick. She has a world of patience some ways, but she don't seem to have any faculty for managing them. Well, well, I'll send her over here, only I won't let on why," and the old lady rolled up her knitting as the bell rang for tea.

A little tact springing from thoughtful love, how good it is!—Sel.

TOO STRICT WITH CHILDREN.

"You are too strict with your children," said a good Christian woman whose bright eyed, active little boy was playing about the streets, to another mother who held her own mischevous son under strict yet kind control, and would not allow him to associate with rough boys, or enjoy the advantages of the "street school."

Twenty years have passed away. The boy whose mother was too strict with him is in college—sober, temperate, and respected; the other squandered his parents' property, contracted habits of intemperance, became on inmate of a prison, and at last has gone to an untimely grave, though not, we trust, without penitence or hope.

"You are too strict with your daughter. Young folks must enjoy themselves," said a kind mother. But the daughter that was guarded and watched over has grown up in safety, while those who had their liberty brought sorrow to their mother's heart.

Where love tempers authority, there is little danger of being "too strict." The world is very evil. Times are perilous; snares are many; parents are responsible for the training of children; and, "A child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." Prov. 29: 15.—Ex.

THE ART OF GETTING THINGS DONE.

I suppose the art of getting things done, so far as one is personally concerned, depends very much on system and perseverance. There is a homely proverb about the head saving the heels, which has a good deal of pith in it. You know how many needless steps may be taken in the course of a morning's baking, for instance. One cook thinks of everything which she will require,—the spice, the sugar, the butter, the pans, the salt, the sieve, the sundries,—and arranges them on the table in an orderly manner, before she begins her mixing and moulding. Another has her hands in the dough, and remembers that she has not adjusted the oven dampers properly, and that the lard is in the cellar, and the apples are in the barrel, and the milk in the ice-box. The house-keeper who has no method is obliged to take a half-dozen steps for every one which is taken by her orderly friend.

Leaving cooking and turning to other kinds of work, we all know women who sometimes see the bottom of the mending basket, and occasionally can announce that the family seweing for one while is accomplished and out of the way. I speak less confidently about the sewing problem than any other, because it does seem as though a mother's work with the needle is almost endless, let her plan as carefully as she may. Little knees goes through the stockings and trowsers so soon, little dresses are so often caught on projecting nails, and little people grow so quickly out of everything, that the mother, even when well seconded by a good seamstress, and aided by the sewing machine, has still her hands full.

Applying the art of getting things done to such a duty as that of making calls, how much time may be saved by going to the house of friends who live in the same neighborhood on a single afternoon. City distances are so great that we who dwell here are obliged to consider this way of economising time and strength. It may be otherwise in the country.

The art of getting things done by other people is quite distinct from, much more difficult and necessarily much more of a fine art, than that of doing things one's self. Anybody may learn self-government, it would seem. Evidently, without it, it is useless to attempt directing others.

There are mothers whose children become the most charming little helpers from a very early age. One such I happen to think of now. Her very babies seem to cry when it was most always convenient to fly right to them, and to sleep just when it is easy to let them lie in the crib. Once when I was visiting her, I noticed seven little nails in the closet, graduated precisely so that seven small pairs of hands could reach them to hang up hoods and cloaks. All the children were taught to wait on themselves, and put away their things when done with them,—toys, books, etc., as well as clothing. Delicate health, limited means, and a large family this mother has had, but she has never let the poetry of life be blotted out by its prose, has kept up her music, has found time to read the best books, and is the efficient secretary of a missionary society, as well as the adviser and friend of a number of poor people, and all because she understands the art of getting things done both by herself and others under her roof.—Christian Intelligencer.

HARMONY AT HOME.—1. We may be quite sure that our will is likely to be crossed during the day; so let us prepare for it.

2. Every person in the house has an evil nature, as well as ourselves, and therefore we are not to expect too much.

3. Look upon each member of the family as one whom Christ died.

4. When inclined to give an angry answer, let us lift up the heart in prayer.

5. If from sickness, pain, and infirmity, we feel irritable, let us keep a very strict watch over ourselves.

6. Observes when others are suffering, and drop a word of kindness.

7. Watch for little opportunities of pleasing everybody, and put little annoyances out of the way.

8. Take a cheerful view of everything, and encourage hope.

9. Speak kindly to dependents and servants about the house, and praise them when you can.

10. In all little pleasures which may occur put self last.

11. Try for that soft answer that turneth away wrath.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

"LITTLE BROWN HANDS."

They drive home the cows from the parture;
Up through the long shady lane,
While the quail whistles loud in the wheat-field
All yellow with ripening grain.

They find, in the thick waving grasses,
Where the scarlet-lipped strawberry grows;
They gather the earliest snow-drops,
And the first crimson buds of the rose.

They toss the hay in the meadow,
They gather the elder-blooms white,
They find where the dusky grapes purple
In the soft-tinted October light.

They know where the apples hang ripest,
And are sweeter than Italy's wines,
They know where the fruit is the thickest
On the long, thorny blackberry vines.

They gather the delicate seaweeds,
And build tiny castles of sand;
They pick up the beautiful sea-shells—
Fairy barks that have drifted to land.

Those who toil bravely are strongest;
The humble and poor become great;
And from those brown-handed children
Shall grow mighty ruler of state

The pen of the author and statesman,
The noble and wise of our land—
The sword and the chisel and palette,
Shall be held in the little brown hand.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

CITIES OF REFUGE. Read Num. 35: 9–34.

I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress; my God; in him will I trust. Psa. 91: 2.

1. Where were the cities of refuge? Josh 20: 7–9.
2. For whose benefit were these cities provided? Num. 35: 15, 22–25.
3. Who were forbidden to flee to these cities? Num. 35: 16–21; Deut. 19: 11–13.
4. Who is the sinner's refuge from the avenger of blood? Heb. 6: 18.
5. Are any too guilty to be received into this refuge? Heb. 7: 25; Isa. 1: 18; John 6: 37.
6. What does the danger to which the slayer exposed himself, if he left the city of refuge, point out? John 15: 4–6.—Notes for Bible Study.

AN EASY PLACE.

A lad once stepped into our office in search of a situation. He was asked:

"Are you not now employed?"

"Yes sir."

"Then why do you wish to change?"

"Oh, I want an easier place."

We had no place for him. No one wants a boy or man who is seeking an easy place; yet just here is the difficulty with thousands. They want easy work and are afraid of earning more than their wages.

They have strength enough to be out late at night, to indulge in vices, and habits which debilitate them. They have strength enough to waste on wine, or beer, or tobacco, all of which leave them weaker than before; they have strength enough to run, and leap, nd wrestle, but they think that they have not the trength to do hard work.

Will the boys let us advise them? Go in for the ard places; bend yourself to the task of showing ow much you can do. Make yourself serviceable to our employer, at whatever cost to your own personal ease; and if you do this he will soon find that e cannot spare you. And when you have learned ow to do work, you may be set to teach others; and o, when the easy places are to be had, they will be ours. Life is toilsome at best to most of us, but he easy places are at the end, not at the beginning f life's course. They are to be won, not accepted; nd a man who is bound to have an easy place now, ay as well understand that the grave is about the nly easy place within the reach of lazy people.— he Little Christian.

MOTHER'S TURN.

"It is mother's turn to be taken care of, now," said winsome young girl, whose bright eyes, fresh color, nd eager looks, told of light-hearted happiness. ust out of school, she had the air of culture, which s an added attraction to a blithe young face. It was nother's turn, now. Did she know how my heart ent out to her for her unselfish words?

Too many mothers, in the love of their daughters, ntirely overlook the idea that they themselves need ecreation. They do without all the easy, pretty, nd charming things, and say nothing about it; and ie daughters do not think there is any self-denial nvolved. Jenny gets the new dress, and the mother ears the old one, turned upside down, and wrongde out. Lucy goes on the mountain trip, and nother stays at home and keeps house. Emily is red of study, and must lie down in the afternoon; ut mother, though her back aches, has no time for uch an indulgence.

Dear girls, take good care of your mothers. Coax iem to let you relieve them of some of the harder uties which for years they have patiently borne.— ntelligencer.

MAXIMS FOR HOME.

Let God be ever first.

Remember, spare moments are the gold dust of xistence.

Be always in haste, but never in a hurry.

Forget not the power of littles.

It is but the littleness of man that sees no greatess in a trifle.

"I will try." Resolve practically:

I will try to do all the good I can.

I will try not to offend any one.

I will try to walk humbly with my God.

I will try to conquer myself.

I will try to live under the power of Christ's love.

Never be idle.

Be happy, and make happy.

Attend to "minor morals."

Never say we must do as others do.

Dare to be singular, if to be singular means to be hristian.

What One Girl Did.—A young lady who had cently become deeply interested in our W. C. T. U., ashington, D. C., work, was called to spend several ays in the home of one of our citizens, where on the ble a wine glass was placed at every plate, even e children's. With an earnest prayer to God and ntle girlish tact, she spoke of the evil influence of rong drink, the ruined homes, and how the beginng of all this lay in the lighter drinks. The result: efore she left every wine glass was removed from e table, and the father only took his wine, and that ry slyly.

Intelligence in Cats.—About twenty miles from is, in the town of Larne, there resides a gentleman the possession of a cat, which is so great a favore that every day a plate and chair are placed for er beside her master, whose repast she shares with upreme content. One day, for some reason, the nner was postponed, but the cat came in at the sual hour. She was evidently much disconcerted seeing nothing going on, walked once or twice sconsolately around the table, then disappeared. iortly afterward she returned with a mouse, which e laid on her master's plate, then going away, she me back a second time with a mouse, which she t on her own plate. She postponed further proedings until her master returned, when she immeately began to pur and rub herself against his legs, much as to say, "See how nicely I have provided r you." Between this town and the village of olywood there is a country house which happened take fire last week. The cat of the house, which had access to the servant maid's apartments, ran up and pawed the young woman's face. Being very drowsy, the girl turned to sleep afresh. The cat, however, returned and proceeded to scratch the girl's face to such purpose that she rose, and smelling the fire, awakened the other members of the household, and the flames were extinguished. A nephew of mine who is fond of cats, generally keeps three or four, and by dint of pains and kindness, teaches them a variety of tricks. I saw one of them sipping cream from a teaspoon, which it held between its fore paws. —Ex.

Good temper, like a summer day, sheds a brightness over everything. It is the sweetener of toil and the soother of disquietude.

Don't be afraid of loving people too much, or throwing away too much kindness. It is just such things the world stands in need of, and they have the great advantage of enriching the giver.

TEMPERANCE.

THE GOVERNMENTAL LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

What is the governmental liquor business? It is the more than three-fifths interest of the government in all the spirits distilled in the country. For instance, whisky is quoted at $1.10 per gallon to-day in the market reports. Of that sum the distiller gets twenty cents and the government ninety cents. It costs the distiller about fourteen cents to manufacture a gallon of whisky, and it will be seen that his profit is less than 50 per cent. It costs the government about six cents per gallon to secure its lion's share of the price per gallon, and it will also be seen that its profit is 1600 per cent. Considered as a partner, the government is a success. Its ability to dictate such terms of partnership rests upon its ability to abolish the business. The government holds the key of every distillery and distilling warehouse in the land. Every gallon of spirits manufactured in the country is made under the strict superintendence and by the co-operation of the government. A man who would engage in the business must first bond over to the government his entire premises, land, buildings and appurtenances thereto. He must build the distillery in accordance with plans approved by the government and submit it to government control when built. The government weighs every bushel of his grain and locks it up securely after the distiller has paid for it. The government measures it into the tub, knows how much of the manufactured article it will yield, and takes out its profits, not on the exact amount manufactured, but upon the capacity of the distillery. The government watches every step of the distilling process, draws off the finished product and stores it away under its own lock and seal until the distiller can find a customer who will pay both partners their profits and take away the goods. Even here the government steps in and says to the buyer, if he be a dealer in such merchandise, "pay me $200 (if a rectifer of spirits) $150 (if a wholesale dealer) or $25 (if a retail dram seller) or I will seize your property and close out your business." It says to every illicit brewer, distiller or saloon keeper in prohibitory States, "Pay me my profits, no matter what State laws may require." The governmental partnership in the liquor traffic of the country is to day the backbone of the traffic. It is worse: its tacit sanction of that by which it benefits so largely, is the benumbing, vice-like grip upon the national conscience, which stifles conviction and smothers the agonizing cries of the nation's victims.

But some will say: Is it not far better to place the restriction of a heavy tax upon liquors and the traffic in them?

Restriction is only good by as much as it restricts. As a general rule no restriction is of much use save as it may be in the direct line of prohibition; e. g., the prohibition of sale to minors, to drunkards, and on certain days is restriction which, enforced, may be very useful. But a restriction whose active principle is permission, is not and cannot be, in the nature of things, much hindrance to evil.

Levying a tax of 90 cents on every gallon of spirits is a species of permission. It is permission after the tax is paid. It is the government's promise to interfere no further. It is not, therefore, a real restriction. But does it not restrict? Read the revenue reports for the last twenty years. Note the amount collected in 1863, $5,176,530.60, and then read that with an average tax of 75½ cents through the twenty years, the revenue from distilled spirits has increased nearly 1,500 per cent in that period, the returns for 1883 being about $75,000,000. Does that look like restriction, and is not that sort of restriction just the sort distillers like? Could the free and untrammelled traffic have been worse?

And now is it not patent that a national movement is necessary to dislodge and destroy a national evil? Is it not moreover clear that the government will not reform itself? that it will not condemn that which fattens it?

The government partnership with the traffic is the great legal and moral (?) scaffolding by which that traffic has reared itself into a national institution, and an institution that will inevitably bankrupt and ruin the nation.

Let the people, to whom only government is amenable, and whose creature it is, decide if the national partnership with evil shall be continued.— Issue of To-day.

An English Judge's Indictment.—Justice Hawkins, in charging the jury at the Durham Assizes, said he had had considerable experience in courts of law, and every day he lived the more firmly did he come to the conclusion that the root of all crime was drink. It affected people of all ages and both sexes—the middle-aged, the young, the father, the son, the husband and the wife. It was drink which was the incentive to crimes of dishonesty; a man stole in order that he might provide himself with the means of getting drink. It was drink which caused homes to be impoverished, and they could trace to its source the cause of misery which was to be found in many a cottage home which had been denuded of all the common necessities of life. He believed that nine-tenths of the crimes of this country, and certainly of the county of Durham, were engendered within public houses.

Maine's Prohibition Amendment.—A committee of the United Kingdom alliance, a temperance organization, has adopted a resolution congratulating Neal Dow and the State of Maine for having in the recent election secured such a majority for the measure incorporating into the State constitution the prohibition amendment. They say that by reason of this vote they anticipate great results to accrue to the rest of the world.

Insanity and Intemperance.—So large is the number of persons taken to Bellevue Hospital in New York city, who have been made insane through intemperance, that the insane pavilion way well be named after this class of patients. From five to ten persons are taken to the hospital every day for examination, and of these the majority are the outcome of intemperate habits. So far as appears, the insanity so produced is not a form of delirium tremens, which is more or less temporary in its nature, but a loss of reason which may be as permanent as from any cause whatever. What is still more serious, this class of sufferers has doubled within a year and is five times as great as it was five years ago. No wonder that one of the officials at the hospital remarked that it was the strongest and most practical kind of temperance lesson that he knew of.—The Churchman.

In a dispute over the payment of drinks at Hessville, Ind., a window was broken, when the saloon proprietor, Joseph Hess, plunged a pitchfork into the breast of one man, while Hess' son fired a double-barreled gun into the crowd, wounding three persons, two of them mortally.

At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Sept. 29, sixty-three barrels of beer, the entire stock of Schneider Bros.' brewery at Marion, was turned out upon the ground, they preferring to have that done than to have the suit against them for selling beer continued.

No liquor has been sold for the last six years in one of the wealthiest and most prosperous counties of Texas, and consequently the jail is empty.

Every year sees the consumption of spirits increasing in the most disquieting manner. The physicians who treat insanity continually raise their voice, exposing the fearful ravages produced by alcoholism. It is found by their reports that the consumption of alcohol in France is yearly increasing by from four to seven million gallons. —Le Moniteur Universal, Paris, France.

The drink statistics of Belgium have a deep interest. The population of the kingdom, now amounting to about 5,500,000, consume annually alcoholic liquors to the value of 480,000,000f., which is 66 per cent. more than thirty years ago. Compared with forty years ago, the number of the insane has increased by 104 per cent.; of suicides by 80 per cent., and of condemned criminals by 135 per cent. In 1850 the number of places where alcoholic liquors were retailed was 53,000; it is now 130,000.

William J. Lansing, a well known lawyer of Cohoes, N. Y., rushed into the police station in that city, August 6, and requested to be locked up. He was suffering from delirium tremens. While in the Recorder's Court next afternoon, which is now held in the Common Council room, he picked up a sample block of granite, which had been left for inspection by the Aldermen, and before anyone could interfere he struck himself two blows on the head and fell unconscious. The court ordered that he be taken to the station house, and when he recovered consciousness he was taken in that direction by two policemen. On the way there he broke away from the licemen and dashed his head against an iron fence and was again rendered senseless. He was then shackled hand and foot and taken to a hospital.

Mr. Krumm's beer shop in New York had a sacred concert on Sunday, the music being chiefly of the minstrels. In one corner of the place lay the dead body of Frank Blumm, who had killed himself that morning for the love of Krumm's wife. The concert could not be postponed, Mr. Krumm said, because it would hurt his business.

Cincinnati, Sept. 26.—H. B. Scharmann, president of the Brewers' Association, New York, and I. Therman, who has charge of the literary bureau of the same association, have been several days conferring with Cincinnati brewers. At a meeting called at a request of Mr. Scharmann in the interest of Cleveland and Hendricks, it is reported that a majority of the Cincinnati brewers, of whom there are nineteen, have determined to support the Democratic ticket.

England has 27,050 brewers, and brewed 990,000,000 gallons of beer last year. Germany has 25,902 breweries, and brewed 900 000,000 gallons of beer during the same period. These two countries lead Europe in the manufacture of this article.

Up to Sept. 26th 2,487 whisky and 582 malt licenses have been issued in Chicago for the second period, which ends Dec. 7th; twenty-seven licenses have been issued for the balance of the year, which gives a total of 3.097. The money realized on these amounts to $452,595.11. The money paid in on the first period amounted to $549,-901.70.

"Infamy cannot brand nor justice fully retribute the wretch [to-day the rum-seller] who dares usurp, as it were, the prerogative of the Almighty—appropriate to himself the unwilling services of his fellow! True, true! is responded from east to west, from north to south..... America, brave, magnanimous and strong; yet will not—shall we say it, durst not?—bid itself be free! Blush! Land of Liberty—we a soil, fruitful as Eden; but tears, sweat, and blood, and unrequited toilings make it so. We shout our freedom in long, loud huzzas; but sighs, groanings, and the clanking of chains mingle with the strain. Oh! cruel policy that will not see, and sordid interest that will not hear. Go to; ere long vengeance will make it plain, and yield the negro his inherent right."

This question, thank God, has been forever settled, but there are chains galling hundreds of thousands of our citizens. Shall they be broken? What say you, Christian voter?

Again, November 16th, 1829:—

"['Anti-Masonry is nearly extinguished in the district where it was first enkindled'] The above language was held by the Masonic central committee to the citizens of Otsego. We are happy of having it in our power to lay the following returns, copied from the official canvass, before the committee, with the request that they compare them with the above quotation from their address.

BATAVIA.

Anti-masonic.	Masonic.
For Senator.	For Senator.
Albert H. Tracy, 451	Samuel Russell, 145
For Assembly.	For Assembly.
Calvin P. Bailey, 437	Isaac Sutherland, 163
Timothy Fitch, 442	Solomon Norris 156
Stephen Griswood, 437	Jas. Sutherland, 159
Justice.	Justice.
Chas. M. Russell, 441	Charlton Towner, 141.

But perhaps the committee will tell us that this 'district' is not a fair sample of the county. That they may not charge us with unfairness, we give the following towns also, all of which are in the 'district' where 'the excitement' first began in the county of Genessee:

ELBA.

Anti-masonic.	Masonic.
Albert H. Tracy, 275	S. Russell, 21
C. P. Bailey, 276	S. Morris, Jr., 24
T. Fitch, 277	I. Sutherland, 24
S. Griswood 275	J. " 23

Stafford gives the Anti-masonic ticket a majority of 161 for the Senate and 144 for the Assembly.

Bergen gives an average majority of 60 for the Anti-masonic ticket.

Bethany gives 80 Anti-masonic for Senate, and 122 for the Assembly.

Middlebury gives an Anti-Masonic majority of 168 for Senate, and 171 for Assembly.

Leroy gives an Anti-masonic majority:

Tracey, 432	Russell, 91
Fitch, 421	S. Morris, Jr., 92
Bailey, 419	I. Sutherland, 93
Griswood, 413	J. " 93

The whole county has given a majority to the Republican Anti-masonic ticket of twenty-six hundred or upwards. So much, gentlemen, for your assertion that Anti-masonry has subsided in the district where it was first enkindled.

Anti-masonry dying away in the west!! Erie county has elected her Anti-masonic candidates by a majority of 1,000; Ontario, 1,200; Livingston, 1,150; Monroe, 648; Niagara, 991; Wayne, 600; Seneca, 500; Orleans, 456. Genesee county, where the 'flame' was 'nearly extinguished,' has elected an Anti-masonic ticket by a majority of nearly 3,000! Drive a bolt there, Croswell. In addition to this, other counties, as Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, and Yates, and Washington, have all elected their Republican Anti-masonic tickets by handsome majorities. Let us hear no more about Anti-masonry dying away."

Had we the time and space we might copy the canvass of other States and counties. Let it suffice to say that the Republican Anti-masonic vote for representatives was estimated on the average, 8,000 above that for senators. The total Anti-masonic vote cast in the State of New York, November, 1829, was 69,763. In 1828 it was 33,335; increase, 33,519. Thinking that the younger readers of the Cynosure would be interested to know how their fathers spoke on the question that we are called to-day to settle, we have quoted the above statistics. Don't throw away your votes but plant them for God and humanity. The harvest is sure. Those that sow in tears shall come again bearing precious sheaves.

We speak to-night in the Town Hall, Woodhull; to-morrow night in a Baptist church some three miles distant; Wednesday evening at Hedgeville, etc. Any friends in the State desiring work done in their section during the campaign should write to F. W. Capwell, Dale, N. Y., at once.

W. B. Stoddard.

—An International Missionary Conference was held lately at Niagara Falls, N. Y. There were missionaries present from China, India, Africa, Japan, South America, etc. Among those attending the Conference was Rev. Dr. Morse, of the Presbyterian Mission in Siam, and Rev. Mr. Marling, of the Gabboon Mission in western Africa. A permanent organization was effected, to be known as the International Missionary Union, which proposes to hold an annual reunion of missionaries who are in their own land either as visitors or permanent residents.

The Churches.

—Maj. D. W. Whittle has conducted meetings in lower Farwell Hall, Chicago, for the two weeks ending Oct. 4. The attendance averaged about one hundred and thirty-five, and each evening there were a number of professed conversions—some rather noted ones. Commencing with the following Sunday evening, Maj. J. H. Cole took charge, and continues the services begun by Maj. Whittle. Their continuance for any special length of time depends upon their interest and attendance.

—At the Wisconsin annual conference of the church of the United Brethren in Christ, representing a membership of about two thousand, held near Monroe, in Green county, the following resolutions were passed:

"Whereas, Neither of the two greatest political parties of this nation has inserted any plank in their respective platform favorable to the cause of temperance, nor do they bring any issue before the American people which involves a moral principle; and

Whereas, A third and independent party has been organized in the interests of the greatest moral issue known to the world—namely, the prohibition of the liquor traffic; therefore,

Resolved, That we as a conference do heartily endorse the nominations of the said party, both State and national, and pledge to it our sympathies, our prayers, and our votes: that we recommend the Prohibition ticket to all voters who are members of our church in this State as worthy of their support, and urge them to do their moral and religious duty at the ballot box regardless of former party relations."

—At the Michigan Free Methodist conference held in Coldwater last week, Rev. Edward Mathews was appointed chairman of the Lawrence, Coldwater and Ft. Wayne districts of the church.

—The Boston city pastors have concurred with the Young Men's Christian Association in its invitation to Mr. Moody to preside over a three days' convention of Christian workers of the New England States, to be held in Tremont Temple October 15, 16 and 17. Mr. Moody has accepted the invitation, and Mr. Sankey will have charge of the music.

—Mr. Ben. Hogan, the converted prize-fighter, well known in Chicago, who has returned from the West, has lately taken part in Mr. Sawyer's meetings and those at the Cremorne Garden, New York, with marked effect. He has also been holding meetings nightly at the old McAuley Mission in Water street. The results were above expectations, there being twelve or fifteen inquirers each night.

—Mr. Moody has been speaking at Amherst, Mass., Sept. 28 preaching in the morning to students at the College church. He was engaged by the Faculty of Williams College to speak there next day. He spoke five times during the meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Convention at New Bedford during the week, having three appointments for the closing day, Sunday.

—The thirty-eighth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association is to be held at Salem, Mass., October 21–23. A debt of $50,000 threatens the Association. For the first ten months of the financial year, ending July 31, there was a total decrease of $31,814 from last year's receipts for the same period. Of this falling off $30,292 is in legacies.

MISSIONARY.

—The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions met last week in Columbus, Ohio. The sessions were held in the Second Presbyterian church, and Mark Hopkins, D. D., presided. During the year eleven missionaries and twenty-one assistant missionaries have entered upon the work in foreign fields. Of these five go to Africa, four to Turkey, five to India, nine to China, four to Japan, one to Micronesia, one to Austria, and three to Mexico. Twenty-seven laborers, after a period of rest in this country, return to their posts. The following are interesting facts from the general survey of the foreign work during the year. The revival among the Zulus shows permanent result in a higher tone of Christian life and a remarkable movement in behalf of temperance. Portuguese traders have succeeded in temporarily driving missionaries of the west central African mission from Bihi and Bailunda down to the coast, but the mission will continue to be vigorously prosecuted. The labors of missionaries in Micronesia are attended by a remarkable transformation of character among the natives. More than five hundred additions have been made to the churches in Turkey, and the outlook in European Turkey was never more hopeful. Eighty thousand copies of the Scriptures, or portions of the Scriptures, were issued from the press at Constantinople, amounting with other Christian literature to over 11,000,000 pages. In India forty-three out of seventy native churches are self-supporting. No detriment as yet has come to missionary work in China through the invasion of the French. The government officials are much more friendly in attitude than formerly, and the rapid advance of the Gospel leads this mission to call for a reinforcement at once of twelve or fifteen missionaries. Great spiritual awakenings have come upon the churches in Japan, which have added to their number, in converts, the past year, more than 60 per cent. The year has been one of large promise in the missions in Mexico, Austria and Spain. The missionaries of the board preach the Gospel in twenty-five different languages, in more than eight hundred towns and cities. It has nearly four thousand young men and women in colleges and high schools, and more than thirty thousand children in Christian common schools. Fourteen new churches have been organized, and about twenty-four hundred converts have been received into Christian fellowship—a larger number than in many preceding years.

—The Queen of Sweden has sent $10,000 to the English fund for translating, printing and distributing Gospel tracts among the children of different lands.

—A four-o'clock morning prayer-meeting at Akashi, one of the American Board missions in Japan, is one of the features of the late revival there. The city has 17,000 inhabitants, and three of the largest liquor-dealers have attended the meetings. One has reached the point of considering a change in his business.

—Horace G. Underwood, who graduated last Spring from the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, has been appointed by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, to Corea. He is expected to start for Japan about December 1st, remaining there some time to study the language before entering Corea.

—The first missionaries to establish themselves in Corea will be Rev. John Ross and a colleague of the Scottish United Presbyterian Mission in China. Mr. Ross, it will be remembered, translated a considerable part of the New Testament into the Corean. The British treaty with Corea is said to be more favorable than the American, giving British residents larger privileges, and opening to them more cities, including Seoul, the capital.

—At the Friends' Indiana Yearly held at Richmond, Ind., last week, the venerable Eli Jones, in demonstrating the practical workings of peace principles, gave some of his personal experience among heathen and semi-barbarous people in foreign lands. He had several times been placed in apparently very dangerous positions, but never found an instance where the possession of a deadly weapon would afford him any protection. On the contrary, in some cases, had he possessed such weapon this fact of itself would have undoubtedly caused the loss of his life. Several other earnest addresses were made on this subject. It was said there could be no doubt that peace principles throughout the world were becoming more generally accepted than ever before, mainly through the efforts of Friends, and they ought not to slacken their persistent propagation of them.

—Last week Tuesday there left Atlanta a party of missionaries bound for China, around whom centers more of interest than usual, owing to the high social position of the parties and their extensive acquaintance throughout the country. The party consists of Mrs. Young J. Allen and three children, Rev. W. B. Bonnell, wife, and four children, and Miss Laura Haygood, of Georgia; Rev. M. Dukes of South Carolina, Miss Jennie Atkinson of Alabama, Miss Dora Hamilton of Texas, and Miss Mildred Philips, Miss Lou Philips, and Miss Baldwin of Missouri. Mrs. Young J. Allen is the wife of the missionary of that name, who has been kept in the Chinese mission by the Methodist Episcopal church South ever since 1859. She is now returning to China after a visit home of two years, which has been also utilized by giving her children a term in American schools. Her husband's success in China has been phenomenal. He is now superintendent of the missions of the southern Methodist church in China. The salary to be paid Rev. W. B. Bonnell will be $1,200 per annum, and that of the ladies $750 per annum each. The ladies will at once take charge of a school for the education of girls in Shanghai, and will organize a girls' high school there. Miss Haygood is a sister of the well known Rev. Atticus G. Haygood, and was for many years principal of the girls' high school of Atlanta. The entire party will take the steamer at San Francisco on the 18th.

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the Word and Spirit of God and that Christ must be acknowledged King of Nations, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the Divine Word.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 207 pages. IN THE COILS;

— OR —

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulatioa."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the Americau church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the anthor in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fictioa. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomiuation. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We cougratulate the author aud the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh aud blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commeuced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correctiug false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregatiou where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

HOME HINTS.

SLEEP.

I think the intellectual and moral connections of sleeping have not been sufficiently appreciated. Men and boys have been praised for burning the "midnight oil." Now this "midnight oil" is a delusion and a snare. The student who is fast asleep at eleven o'clock every night and wide awake at seven every morning, is going to surpass another student of the same intellectual ability who goes to bed after twelve and rises before five. In sleep the plate on which the picture is to be taken is receiving its chemical preparation; and it is plain that that which is best prepared will take the best picture.

Men who are the fastest asleep when they are asleep, are the widest awake when they are awake. Great workers must be great resters.

Every man who has clerks in his employ ought to know what their sleeping habits are. The young man who is up till two, three or four in the morning, and must put in an appearance at the bank or store at nine or ten o'clock and work all day, cannot repeat this process many days without a certain shakiness coming into his system which he will endeavor to steady by some delusive stimulus. It is in this way that many a young man begins his course to ruin. He need not necessarily have been in bad company. he has lost his sleep, and losing sleep is losing strength and grace.—Hall's Journal of Health.

HOT WATER AS A REMEDY FOR NAUSEA.

Dr. Morton, writing in the Louisville Medical News, states that "several years ago he learned from his own personal experience that no agent relieves nausea and vomiting so satisfactorily and promptly as water as hot as can be drank. He has since used it in a large number of cases, and no remedy that he ever administered in any condition has proved more uniformly reliable. He has preserved records of many of these cases, and makes the following classification:

1. Cases in which nausea and vomiting occurred at the onset or during the course of acute febrile disease; 2. Cases in which these symptoms were caused by overloading the stomach when its functions had been impaired by protracted disease; 3. Cases in which they were produced by nauseous medicines (not emetics) at the time they were taken; 4. Cases of acute gastritis caused by the indigestion of irritants; 5. Cases in which these symptoms were purely reflex; 6. Cases of chronic gastritis; 7. Cases of colic in newly born infants; 8. Cases of flatulent distention of the stomach in adults."

We have used hot water in similar cases for the past ten years with most excellent success, and can recommend it as one of the best known means for the purpose. It should be borne in mind, however, that the water must be hot. Warm water increases the nausea. The hot water will often accomplish the desired result, even when the nausea is the result of indigested food in the stomach, affording relief by causing contraction of the stomach, so that its contents are expelled, either by vomiting or into the intestines.—Good Health.

WHY CHILDREN SHOULD EAT HONEY.

Thousands and tens of thousands of children are dying all around us, who, because their ever developing nature demands sweetness, and crave and eagerly demolish the adulterated "candies" and "syrup" of modern times. If these could be fed on honey instead, they would develop and grow into healthy men and women.

Children would rather eat bread and honey than bread and butter. One pound of honey will reach as far as two pounds of butter, and has, besides, the advantage of being far more healthy and pleasant tasted, and always remains good, while butter soon becomes rancid and often produces cramp in the stomach, eructations, sourness, vomiting and diarrhea. Pure honey should always be freely used in every family. Honey eaten on wheat bread is very beneficial to health.

The use of honey instead of sugar in almost any kind of cooking, is very pleasant to the palate, and is very healthy for the stomach. In preparing blackberry or raspberry short-cake it is infinitely superior.

It is a common expression that honey is a luxury, having to do with the life-giving principles. This is an error—honey is food in one of its most concentrated forms. True, it does not add so much to the growth of muscles as beefsteak, but it does impart other properties no less nccessary to health and vigorous physical and intellectual action. It gives warmth to the system, arouses nervous energy, and gives vigor to all the vital functions. To the laborer it gives strength—to the business man mental force. Its effects are not like ordinary stimulants, such as spirits, etc., but produce a healthy action, the results of which are pleasant and permanent—a sweet disposition and a bright intellect.

—Excellent okra soup is made by following these directions: Cut one pound of round steak in small pieces; brown them nicely in butter; slice an onion in very thin slices and put into the saucepan with the meat. Put three quarts of cold water in the soup kettle; put the meat and onion into this, and boil and simmer for about three hours; season with pepper and salt, a little butter, strain it, and serve while very hot.

A wag, of whom the Advance tells, in a Connecticut Valley Tobacco Growers' Convention, offered a resolution that the "use of tobacco ought to be encouraged in the public schools!" He broke the dead silence that followed, with, "Gentlemen, why do you balk? If this is a legitimate business, why not push it?"

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

IN BRIEF.

Norwegians are said to excel all other ontinental countries for the number of atives who can speak English. They pend their long winter evenings in study.

The Brooklyn bridge expanded over welve inches at the hip-joint in the cen-er during one hot day this summer. With the 6,600 tons of iron in the super-tructure and the heavy planking it works rcely and is wonderful for its delicacy.

In eight years the four-hundredth an-iversary of America's discovery will be elebrated. The people of Genoa, Italy, re already discussing the contribution hey shall make. Some are in favor of ending over twelve Genoese sea captains s typical both of Columbus and Gari-aldi, to debark on the same spot that Columbus first trod. Others favor the hipping over, for temporary exhibition n the New World, the fine statue of the reat navigator that stands on the Piazza i Colombo.

A very pretty story is told in New York f Mrs. William Astor. She sat at her arlor window on Fifth avenue watching gang of one hundred men who were xcavating in the street for steam pipes. The day was hot, the labor severe. Toward noon she sent her butler to inform he foreman that when the men stopped ork she wished them to march past her ouse in single file. As they did so the utler stood at the foot of the steps and ave each man a dollar with which to urchase something extra for lunch. It s related that the men were very profuse n their thanks, and that one of them vho, having passed once, undertook to et into the line again, was instantly dis-nissed by the foreman.

Two young city ladies in the country ere standing by the side of a wide ditch hich they didn't know how to cross. They appealed to a boy who was coming long the road for help, whereupon he ointed behind them with a startled air nd yelled, "Snakes!" The young ladies rossed the ditch at a single bound.

There is need of prayer similar to that ade by an old colored woman, who, raying for one who had been guilty of lander, said: "O Lord, won't you be ind enough to take the door of his outh off, and when you put it on again, ust hang it on the gospel hinges of peace n earth and good will to men? Amen."

The happiest hit of the season was ade by a lady at Waverly the day Gov-rnor Bate and Judge Reid spoke there. The Judge became very nervous at the rying of a baby, and asked if it could ot be made to stop crying. Its mother acified the child and it was still awhile, ut it began crying again, and the Judge aid: "Let that child be taken out; it has o business at a public speaking." The nother promptly said: "Sir, my child is rying to hear Governor Bate speak."—Memphis Ledger.

Dr. Xenker, after a long investigation, oncludes that the strained, peculiar po-ition into which the legs and feet are hrown while digging and gathering po-atoes has been found to produce, in some ases, a singular disease, thought to be a eurosis of the locomotor apparatus of he feet and legs, the thighs and trunk ot being affected.—Scientific Paper. Dr. Xenker's observations have been of a very superficial kind if he has failed to notice the intcresting fact that neurosis of the locomotor apparatus usually occurs when the boy who digs wants to stop and go fishing, and his pa won't let him.

Beallsville, Ohio, Oct. 3.—For the ast ten days a strange and fatal disease has afflicted cattle in several portions of Belmont county. The discase killed in from one to two hours, and, what was a still greater wonder, rarely affected any stock but cows. No explanation could be given, but the brutes had all the symp-toms of mineral poison. Yesterday morning John R. Sweitzer, a dairyman, fed his seventeen Jersey and Durham cows dried bundles of sorghum blades, and in an hour fifteen were dead. This led to an examination and experiment, and it was found that the sorghum blades were the cause of the disease. The long drought has dried up all grass, and the corn fodder is not yet ready to feed. In this emergency many farmers prepared sorghum leaves for food for their milch cows. This shows why they almost ex-clusively were attacked. Sweitzer's loss is $1,200. The loss in the county from this source is estimated at from $5,000 to $7,000.

Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Freemasonry at a Glance Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00 per dozen, $9.00. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen. $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lehheus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Lecehburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—The National Republican Committee has issued a circular in which they claim to have information from a reliable source that the Mormon church at a council in Salt Lake soon after Mr. Cleveland's nomination, voted to give one-tenth of the church tithings (a very large sum) to aid in electing the Democratic ticket. In return, the Democratic National Committee promised that if a Democratic Congress shall be elected Utah will be admitted as a State, the council pledging that in that event the State will send two Democrats to the United States Senate.

—Frank Reisch, the president of the Illinois Liquor Dealers' association is begging Thomas A. Hendricks to come and make a campaign in Illinois.

—The German Advisory Committee of the Democratic State Central Committee held a secret session in a saloon last week. Committees were appointed to canvass the several districts in the State, to labor for the success of the party this fall, and to secure funds from the saloonkeepers toward the defeat of candidates for the legislature who are known to be inimical to the interests of the liquor dealers.

COUNTRY.

—The United States Supreme Court meets next Monday. The number of cases on the docket is 1,025, or 54 less than at the corresponding time last year.

—Ten workmen engaged on the temporary crib of the new Hyde Park waterworks, near Chicago, were drowned last Wednesday morning in the sight of a number of residents of the village, who were unable to render them any assistance on account of the furious storm which was prevailing. The life-saving crew rescued four men, and a fifth swam ashore, using a plank to buoy himself up.

—The Burlington and Santa Fe Roads have organized the Chicago and Pacific Coast Fast Freight Line to take freight from here to the Pacific coast in nine days. Rates between Chicago and Kansas City are still growing smaller.

—In Elkhorn Cut, twenty-five miles from Omaha, on the Union Pacific, a light engine and a freight train dashed together Wednesday, one of the locomotives and several cars being demolished. The engineer and fireman of the freight were caught in the wreck and roasted to death.

—Near Marysville, Mo., Tuesday night, a bridge collapsed under a freight train laden with hogs, nearly all of which were drowned. The engineer was killed, and the brakeman and fireman badly injured.

—A section of the Calumet and Hecla mine, near Calumet, Mich., is burning fiercely, two men who were sent down to start a pump losing their lives, and a party of rescuers narrowly escaping. A number of men are still working in the lower levels, but are supplied with plenty of air, and no uneasiness is felt regarding their ultimate escape.

—The Grand Opera House and a number of buildings at South Bethlehem, Pa., were burned early Tuesday morning, the loss approximating $150,000. The firemen broached barrels of whisky and drank the liquor freely, many of them becoming helplessly drunk, and one breaking his back by a fall.

—A barrel of whisky exploded Wednesday at Canton, Miss., the liquid immediately taking fire, though there was neither light nor fire in the room.

—While John Sherry and family were at supper Saturday evening at Edenburg, Pa., five masked men entered, commanded all to hold up their hands, and then bound and gagged them. After securing $6,200 the robbers drove off in a carriage.

—Forty Italian railroad laborers, who demanded their pay, created a riot Monday at Tamworth, Ont., and with knives, clubs and revolvers chased one of the contractors about the town. The citizens armed themselves and took a hand against the Italians, the fight being a bloody one. The majority of the rioters were wounded, five dangerously, and half a dozen of the citizens were also painfully injured. The militia are now on duty.

FOREIGN.

—A terrific explosion occurred in the mills of the Hamilton Powder Company at Cumminsville, Ontario, Thursday. Nearly all the men employed in the mills were at dinner when the explosion happened, or else it would have been accompanied with a frightful loss of life, as the buildings were almost totally demolished, and large pieces of timber and parts of heavy machinery were hurled a quarter of a mile from the scene by the force of the explosion. Of the six men who were in the factory at the time, four were killed and two badly injured.

—Twenty-seven persons were killed and 400 injured by the cyclone in Catania on the island of Cicily. The damage will amount to 4,000,000 lire.

—The first portion of the British expedition up the Nile, en route to the Soudan, has passed the first cataract. The camel corps is encamped at the Pyramids waiting for orders to advance.

—At Esseg, Austria, Monday, fourteen children, while playing in a boat on the river Drave, capsized it and all were drowned.

—Premier Gladstone has issued a circular notifying his supporters to a the opening of Parliament, as he pr es at the earliest moment to subm portant and pressing business.

—Bismarck has prepared a proj be laid before Parliament the comi sion for the purchase by the Germa pire of all railways owned by the ent States, and placing the control of the same at Berlin.

—The university at Kieff has been closed by the Russian authorities, and will not re-open until January. One hundred and sixty-eight students have been arrested for alleged connection with the Nihilists. Three Socialist journals, which were suspended some time ago, are about to re-appear.

—Madagascar advices state the Hovas will resolutely resist the French advance into the interior of the island. The military preparations made by the natives indicate that a desperate struggle will ensue if the French make the threatened advance.

—The Paris Temps publishes a letter from Brussels which states that delegates representing the governments of England, America, France, Portugal, Spain, Holland, and Belgium, will attend an international conference in Berlin, probably the latter part of November, at which the West African question will be considered. The letter states that France and Germany have agreed to submit proposals to the conference securing freedom of commerce to all nations in the Congo country and upon the river Niger.

—The Bombardment of Tamsui, China by the French fleet was in progress last week. On the 6th inst. the fleet had destroyed the Chinese forts. The houses of Europeans in the city are riddled with shells, but the inhabitants have not suffered any fatal casualties. The Chinese are strongly entrenched.

—General Briere de L'Isle has telegraphed the French Government, confirming the report announced from Hanoi of an engagement between the French and Chinese in the valley of the Loo Chuan Rivet, in Tonquin. The encounter took place Monday, Oct. 6th. The Chinese were attempting to execute an offensive movement on the Upper Loo Chuan River. They lost 1,000 men.

TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The Christian Cynosure will be sent to any address eight weeks on receipt of twenty-five cents.

Much of the progress made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neighborhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

New York City.

It aims to promote every Christian Reform Measure on the following

PLATFORM:

God, who is the source of all authority, has appointed our Lord Jesus Christ the Ruler of Nations. The Bible, God's revealed Will, contains law for Nations, and is the Standard by which all Moral Issues in Political Life are to be decided. National acknowledgement of this authority, and obedience to the law, constitute a truly Christian Nation.

SOME TESTIMONIES.

The Christian Nation has an able corps of writers and contributors.—Sacramento Daily Record-Union.

EXTRACTS FROM PRIVATE LETTERS.

"I congratulate you most heartily upon the success which has thus far attended your enterprise. It already holds its place among our best religious journals, and has put itself abreast of the advanced movements in journalism."

"I like it well. It is growing better every week, and has the true radical ring."

"I like this issue of paper very much, and think it is growing better and better."

"I am more than satisfied with the paper."

"Allow me to congratulate you on the make-up of your paper; the matter is very good, and, in fact, the whole is far beyond what I expected. It is par excellence."

"I received the sample copies of the Christian Nation, and I am well pleased. You can enter my name as a regular subscriber."

"The paper should be in every house in the land."

"I received a sample copy of your paper from a friend, and finding it to be entirely satisfactory in every respect, I wish to place my name on your list of subscribers."

"It is bright, warm, cheerful, and I have publicly commended the enterprise as one sincere in spirit seeking to occupy vacant room, devised by a successful man, a safe and profitable investment for all interested in reforms."

THE REFORM STORY, having waited long, begins in this mber. Being anxious that as much as possible appear is week and next, it is printed in finer type than will be ed thereafter. We can heartily recommend it to all our aders, even to those who scruple at facts presented in is form. The gifted author has chosen to elucidate the ature and operations of the Odd-fellow and some of the sser orders in this story, and derives its characters and ot almost entirely from actual life; more even than in er popular "Holden with Cords", though every careful ader of that work knows how little it depends on the nagination. Let no one take up the Cynosure without ading "BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS."

The result of the Ohio election dignifies the labor the political statistician, and every party organ has s own methods of marshalling the columns for the est effect. The average Republican majority for ongressmen over the Democrats was more than 18,-00; while Gen. Robinson, for Secretary of Stats, ad but 11,421 more voters than his Democratic opnent, and a thousand less than a majority of the hole vote. Mr. Robinson has been known as an pen and earnest advocate of temperance, which ould affect his standing among liquor-loving voters. udge William W. Johnston, candidate for re-election as Supreme Judge is also a temperance man, and is vote, though ahead of Robinson's, fell behind the est. In a decision awhile since he said: "If in the dgment of the General Assembly it be necessary, in rder to prevent evils resulting from the traffic, that ne sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage e absolutely prohibited, we can see no constitutional round upon which such exercise of its judgment and iscretion can be reviewed by the courts of the tate." Such a decision is a fortress of strength for rohibition.

The reply of Gov. St. John to the letter of Prof. . D. Woolsey, Judge Noah Davis, Dr. R. M. Hatfield, ohn V. Farwell and others is one of the best argunents of the campaign. There is in it a touch of indignation, such as might be justly felt at a demand that a candidate of unimpeached honor, upon a platform confessedly superior, should withdraw at the end of a self-sacrificing and masterly canvass. Let now the same committee of gentlemen present their request to Cleveland; or let the representatives of thousands of Republicans who cannot vote for Blaine send a request of like character to that gentleman in the midst of his triumphal tramp about the country. With equal reason can the impertinence be shown either of them. If temperance men, or Anti-masons, or anti-monopolists have not the privelege of taking their convictions to the polls and expressing them there, let us know it.

The tragedy at LaCrosse, Wis., last Thursday evening suggests a word. A respected young man is shot by a rough character in the crowded street while marshalling a Republican torch-light procession. After the murder the crowd surrounded the jail for several hours before leaders of sufficient nerve could be found to attack the jail with determination, and lynch the murderer. During these hours of suspense the whole city was in a tremor of horror at the murder and dread that another life would be given up to the rage of men. That the leaders of the crowd were unknown it is not possible to believe, yet sheriff, police, and a number of eye-witnesses of the murder and lynching were examined before the coroner, and no one knew who did the lynching! There were doubtless scores of Masons in the crowd, possibly the murdered man was of the fraternity, and very possibly the leaders of the mob also. It cannot be doubted that many Masons were actively concerned, and the testimony before the coroner is such as might be expected from Freemasons. These men must at the same time be aware that the just impatience at the law's delay is largely the result of Masonic legerde main in our courts. They thus appear to be the supporters of a system by which justice is defied and set at naught, while at the same time they engage in a lynching protest at the very delay and defeat of law which their lodge occasions.

At the State convention of the Illinois Young Men's Christian Association in Joliet the other day earnest addresses were made by O. S. Lyford, general superintendent of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois railway, and T. M. Bates, superintendent of transportation of the Chicago and Alton road. The latter said that railroad managers had come to recognize the fact that to compete successfully for public patronage requires sober employes; that sober, Christian men would have less accidents, and that they made more money for the stockholders. He hoped to see still grander results in the Y. M. C. A. work accomplished all along the line with which he is connected. The same testimony would doubtless be given by Robert Harris, long at the head of the Burlington and Erie roads and now president of the Northern Pacific, by Marvin Hughitt, general manager of the Northwestern road, and by every other great railway manager; and the stringent rules of many companies show that this judgment has become law. The railway companies need also to recognize the fact that "God requires and man needs a Sabbath," and in obedience to this law of nature and revelation all running of trains should cease on the Lord's day. The example of our great railway corporations throughout the country taking a stand against intoxicating drink and in favor of the Sabbath would approach the moral sublime. Who could estimate the effect of their example upon the nation.

The approach of election brings out the fact that there are a few naturalized Chinese who can take part as American citizens. It is a stump argument against the Republican plank on the Chinaman that it condemns him because he cannot vote, as do the Irish and German political pets. Had he a vote his cue would be forever safe. This argument falls somewhat short of a demonstration from the very fact that the Chinaman don't want a vote. If he did he could have had it once, and it would have Americanized him. The strongest argument against the Chinese is that they will not conform to our civilization, but maintain their own, and the result would resemble that which came to pass in the South with its large class of slaves kept by infamous laws and customs outside the pale of American citizenship and social order.

Mr. Blaine has refuted the charge that he was a member of the Know Nothing order. In his speech at Flint, Michigan, last Friday he said he had never been connected with that order, and did not support Millard Fillmore, its candidate for President in 1856, as the files of his paper, the Kennebec Journal, will testify. His opponents have claimed that he did so, both on the stump and in his paper. The files exist somewhere and can be appealed to. It would have been pleasant reading, had Mr. Blaine said yet more of his relations to the secret lodges As he has kept clear of them a word to that effect would not, to the Anti-masonic ear, have been out of place; nor would the reason, in brief, for such disregard or contempt of the lodge been lost upon the young men who look to Mr. Blaine as a model.

These words were unsaid, but Mr. Blaine did not hesitate to give the patronage of a friendly visit and speech to the first Roman Catholic institution of the West on the Sabbath. He spent the day at South Bend, Indiana. In the morning he listened to Dr. Hatfield, a well known Methodist clergyman of this city who has disappointed many of his temperance friends by opposing St. John. The afternoon he spent in visiting one of the residents of the city and then called on Mother Angela, the superior of the Catholic academy of St. Mary, who is his cousin, and on an aunt and sister in the same institution. At Notre Dame University he was next warmly welcomed by the very reverend fathers in charge, the 800 students and their band, whom he addressed briefly after being formally escorted about the place. His remarks were similar to those at Ann Arbor University the day before. There was nothing that would offend the meanest political striker; whereas, the day, the audience, and Mr. Blaine's Christian profession would have permitted—nay, they required a positive testimony for Christianity. It is safe to say that Mr. Blaine would not repeat his Notre Dame Sabbath at Oberlin. Will he help to honor the day when he gets to Washington?

Mrs. Addie C. S. Engle has a fine portrait in the Voice of Masonry as representing the Eastern Star degree, initiated by Bro. O. M. Hatch. Every Master Mason may have access to this night lodge of women. A comely woman in that loathsome degree reminds one that the colors of a snake may be beautiful, nothing else.

THE LODGERY OF GOOD TEMPLARISM.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

Of all the secret society follies, a secret temperance society is the silliest. But the worst part of the folly is the fact that these societies, "Good Templars." "Temple of Honor," etc., are evidently off shoots of Masonry and under Masonic control. And that these lodges are, generally, hot-beds of mixed mischief, I have no doubt whatever, for I have the personal experience to prove it, to my own satisfaction at least.

About twelve or thirteen years ago we lived in Fort Wayne, Ind. The Good Templars were quite active in that city at that time; that is, they were active in their efforts to increase the membership of their lodges. We were induced to join, my wife and I. We went and were initiated one evening. After that we never attended another meeting of the lodge. Why? We were both disgusted and ashamed before the ceremony of initiation was completed.

First, we were disgusted to notice the levity of the members, evidencing that they regarded the whole ceremony as a farce.

Second, we were ashamed to find that we had fallen into bad company. We found persons occupying prominent positions in the lodge with whom we would not have dared to associate in public, for they were "free lovers" and prostitutes. We also saw enough to convince us that social enjoyment was the chief object of the meetings, and that "temperance" was merely the convenient cloak wherewith to hide their sins.

In the year 1877 we were living in Wisconsin. The town where we were located—in charge of the Presbyterian church—with only about 300 inhabitants, had seven, and part of the time eight, saloons, and one Good Templar lodge. This lodge claimed to be "in good running order" when we came to the place, and some of the best people in that community were members. We came to the conclusion that this, at least, was a lodge to which I might join myself without disgracing myself. Like many others who were earnestly striving to find the best way and method to work efficiently for the cause of temperance, I could then see no better way than to join a lodge of Good Templars—provided I found it to be composed of respectable people.

By this time I had had some Masonic experience, and, hence, I soon saw the ear-marks of the Masonic beast in all the ritualistic ceremonies and modes and usages of the lodge. Distrust soon grew into disgust; and disgust changed to indignation when I found a man who made no religious profession occupying the chaplain's chair offering up prayer (?) to God! I felt, too, that I had just cause for indignation when there were in the lodge Christian men who could have been elected to fill the place.

Moreover, I had joined the lodge to do temperance work; but the "work" of the lodge was, to go through the regular routine of ritualistic tomfoolery and tedious child's-play; temperance was there only in mottoes on the walls, and in printed forms. Thus the whole evening would be consumed in "lodge-work," and not a thing done, or a word said, which would count, effectually, for temperance. A minister of the Gospel must have an elastic conscience if he can thus idle away precious time, and aid and encourage others in doing the same thing. The phrase has become an American proverb: "Time is money," and we forget that it may, and should, be applied to the service of God as well as to the service of "Mammon," the god of this world.

As in Fort Wayne, so I found it also in this lodge: social enjoyment was evidently the principal thing sought after, and to this end everything else was subservient, even the tender conscience and love of principle of some of the members. Dancing was one of the regular pastimes of this lodge. I say of this lodge, because I do not mean merely that some of the members attended dances, but that dancing parties, or lodge balls, were planned and arranged in open lodge, and were held in the lodge room. Not only that, but they did not scruple to patronize a hotel (?) where the principal business was selling intoxicating liquors every day in the week, for the supper of the dancers.

In my next letter I shall, with your permission, relate how the lodge treated my protest against this kind of "lodge-work."

HONEST MONEY.

BY PROF. O. F. LUMRY.

There is no more pregnant source of deception, especially in the sphere of politics, than the catch-words that wily politicians or their dupes use to influence the public mind.

When the greenback was first issued by Secretary Chase all Republicans became at once Greenbackers, and notwithstanding the partial demoralization and consequent depreciation of the same by act of Congress at the dictation of bankers and gold gamblers and stock jobbers from Wall street, they still continued to be such, in spite of adverse legislation, till they were shamed and cheated out of their honest views by the above and such other flings as "rag baby," "fiat money" and the like. Men are only children of a larger growth. You shall see a little child tenderly caring for and talking baby-talk to her doll. Tell her that it is only a dirty rag, enforcing your words by a look of disgust, and see how quickly she will throw it away and assume your tone and manner toward it.

When our bankers, at the suggestion of British bankers, given in Hazzard's circular issued in 1862, wished to get the greenback, on which they could get no interest (and which, in spite of the violence done to it by legislation, had again justified the words of Jefferson, that it was the only resource of a nation in war or a money crisis, and, if had in sufficient amount, was adequate to the needs of a nation in war and peace), out of the way so as to make room for national bank issues based on our bonds, on which they could draw double interest, they induced Congress to legislate against it and put in the mouth of men of influence such epithets as the above. But by all of these means they have not yet succeeded; and, if God has in store any mercy for our country, financially, they will not succeed in entirely destroying the "people's money."

They know well that unless they do, it is only a question of time when their issues which profess to be money but are not will have to retire.

As the country could not remain "half slave and half free," so its currency cannot remain half the people's, or in the language of law, "lawful money," and half promises to pay money that have none of the qualities of money, but make a fraudulent pretense having them.

What then is honest money? A man is an honest man when he fairly meets his obligations. If he knows before hand that he cannot or will not do so, and still makes the contract, there is no propriety in giving him that title. Honest money is that kind of money that always does exactly that which on its face it promises to do. If I have made a purchase or owe a debt that requires dollars to pay, and have in payment for my property or labor received that which on its face claims to be dollars, but when I present it, it will not pay my debt or purchase, at all times and under all circumstances, such cannot be honest money. That farmer who had the misfortune to have a mortgage on his farm held by a Shylock of a money-lender, and who, by hard toil had scraped together at the latest moment enough of what professed to be money, National Bank bills, to pay it, and which, on presentation, had been refused on the ground that it was not money; and, as a consequence, had to raise five hundred dollars more of hard earned money, could hardly be made to believe that National Bank bills were honest money even though he should read it in the platforms of both the great political parties. No money of whatever material made is honest money that has not the fiat of government behind it, making it always receivable at its face value in payment of all debts and contracts. The eminent English banking house of Baring Brothers is responsible for the statement that after England demonetized gold in India, 20,000 pounds of that metal would not command a single shilling in money.

For over twenty years about one-half of the paper currency of the nation has been greenbacks, the first 60,000,000 of which are full lawful money and have always been above par in gold, for the good and sufficient reason that they would pay all debts and make all purchases that gold would. The rest have always been lawful and honest money as between individuals but were depreciated by the law, that made them not legal tender for duties and interest on the public debt. Ever since the so-called resumption of specie payments all the greenbacks have been above par in gold, and many millions of gold bonds and interest have bee paid in them at the urgent request of the holders. During the same time there have been in circulation about the same amount, some 350,000,000, in National Bank bills. The former, in the law creating the National Banks, is called "lawful money;" by the Supreme Court is declared to be money, always and in full amount, where not crippled by mischievous legislation, has performed perfectly the functions of money; is the representation not of one or two commodities, and those, from their nature, the most variable in quantity, but of all commodities, or of the power of government to tax all commodities, and has cost the people practically nothing.

The latter has cost the producing classes, all told, probably not less than three times their face value, or more than half our present national debt; has imperfectly performed the functions of money; has created a great, soulless, money monopoly that dictates all the financial legislation of the country in its own interest, and actually has a majority of the members of our national legislature that are personally interested in it.

When such patriots as John Quincy Adams were in Congress, and the question of recharter of the first national bank came up, they would not vote on it till they had disposed of their stock in the concern; holding, rightly, that they had no right to vote on a question where they had a direct money interest. Men have no such scruples now, but openly avow the fact that, when they want instructions as to how to vote on money questions, they go, not to their constituents but to the bank in which they are interested. Is such a concern an honest concern? and is what they issue honest money?

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. The handful of men interested in this great scheme of robbery have it in their power, and have very great money interest in perpetuating the system after the bonds on which it is based are all paid. The Comptroller of the Currency has actually been insane enough to propose to base our currency on British securities. If the people don't wake up to their interests in the case they may find themselves crushed in the folds of the monster they have warmed into life.

GOD'S WORD AGAINST SECRETISM.

I. Secretism Unauthorized. There is not a sentiment set forth by God's Word which gives encouragement to the formation of secret societies. Were such a sentiment taught what clans, cliques and endless divisions in families, churches and nations would be sanctioned! Do secret clans, honeycombing a nation, make it appear strong and solid for order? No. They look like conspiracy, and God's Word condemns the very appearance of evil.

He who approves secretism must show that Christ in word or deed approves it, for, "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," is divinely commanded. But Christ's word and deed are in direct opposition to secretism. Standing before Pilate accused of conspiracy against the Roman government, Jesus clearing himself said, "In secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20. These words, declaring that Christ was not a conspirator, prove that secretism looks like conspiracy. Our exemplar, Christ, avoided the appearance of this evil, and should not we follow his steps?

The church should reject wrong doers and exclude false teachers,—Matt. 18: 14–18; Rev. 2: 14; 1 Cor. 5: 13. The Bridegroom, condemning secretism, should his bride, the church, practically approve it?

II. Idolatry. To join any secret society a candidate must pledge himself to conceal that of which he as yet knows not the moral character; thus he surrenders his conscience to the judgments of others, besides, he commits himself to the liability of concealing and abetting wrong. Who purposes to do only right cannot consistently commit himself to this liability.

This conscience-surrendering feature, vital to secretism, is despotism and idolatry. The Jesuits commit no greater idolatry when they surrender their consciences to the Pope than they who join secret societies. Secretism stands forth a vast, dark temple of idolatry. Shall we fellowship the works of darkness (Eph. 5: 11), binding ourselves with infidels, libertines and other un-Christian characters to keep their secrets? Can a Christian consistently surrender his conscience into the judgments of such men? "What part hath he that believeth with an indidel? * * * Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils. * * * Flee from idolatry," says the Word of God.

III. Mock Worship. The Lord said of men, practicing for worship, rites and ceremonies invented by men, "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." How vain are the invented ceremonies of secret societies falsely termed by them, worship! How empty of adoration! What matters it with them who performs the hollow mummeries,—a mocking priest or blasphemous infidel? What an easy step from this is it for lodge-loving preachers, when burying the worst characters that ever disgraced the earth, to say, "Gone to the lodge above!" What infidelity to God's Word! With such men as guides, is it any wonder that places noted for secretism are also noted for infidelity? Lodge-worship is "will worship," and, as such, unclean and full of death. Col. 2: 21–23. To fellowship it is to sanction mockery and encourage infidelity. "Be not ye therefore partakers with them." Eph. 5: 6, 7.

IV. Revengefulness. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord." But these secret orders without authority, assume the prerogative of the Almighty and impliedly or explicitly threaten those who for conscience' sake escape from and expose their fraudulent pretensions and festering corruptions with the infliction of vengeance upon their persons, business or honor. That this threat is not vain, is almost daily verified by facts. Should such a base, God-dishonoring, vengeful brood be sanctioned by the church of God? Not while the infallible Word declares, "Abhor that which is evil."

V. Criminal Appearance. Had secret societies no uninitiated community around them of which they could take advantage and upon which they could prey, of what account were their secrecy? The very face of secretism does not look honest. Some one says, "Marriage is not ashamed but adultery is. Were not the trials of the Inquisition conducted in secret? Are not all the lowest and meanest felonies committed in secret, and forty-nine fiftieths of them in the night? Where do counterfeiters ply their trade? Where does licentiousness breed its pollution? Do these seek the daylight, the open street, the market place, the common resort of virtuous men? No! they all belong as by the tie of natural affinity to the order of secret societies." Shall we sanction these orders the whole of which essentially wear the face of crime? Not while God says, "Abstain from all appearance of evil."

VI. Soul Robbery. Secretism, judged by its fruits, is a robber of Christianity, robbing it of the soul energies which belong to it. The professed Christian who is a lodge lover attends the lodge in preference to the revival or prayer-meeting, and is locked up with haters of Jesus while his place in the prayer circle is vacant. The world before the church! How Christianity has been traduced, the prayer-meeting despised, revivals checked and the house of God prostituted to pompous installations (advertising exhibitions of vanity) by these idolatrous institutions! Why then wonder at the thrift of infidelity keeping pace with the thrift of secretism? Churches fellowshiping secretists are victims of cliques, shorn of spirituality and dead in their forms of worship. "From such turn away," says the apostle. 1 Tim. 3: 5.

VII. General Observed Bad Character. Who carefully views secret societies observes that "they bind men together in brotherhood with wicked and unholy persons; they tend to produce jealousies and alienations in the church of God; that they employ the forms of religion in unwarranted services; that they enjoin under oaths and solemn obligations obedience to laws and regulations unknown to the civil government within which they are organized, or to any government divinely ordained; that they pervert the Holy Scriptures to foolish and unholy uses; that their ceremonies encourage many of their adherents in hopes of eternal life without a truly evangelical faith; that they are contrary to that openness of conduct and guilelessness of character enjoined by the Word of God, and that Christians should not be connected with them, for the apostle expressly says: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

VIII. Secretists' Defense. From whom do anti-secret advocates receive opposition? From infidels, drunkards, adulterers and gamblers, assisted by professors of religion who are in brotherhood with these bad characters. What is their defense?

1. "Secretism is not directly mentioned and condemned by the Scriptures." Nor are gambling, dancing, the prize-ring nor many other evils which are shown to be sinful by the equitable principles of God's Word.

2. "Families are secret societies." Some are, but not all. Generally and essentially they are not. The privacy of a household is not secretism more than Christ's was. True, a family may in part become a secret society; for instance, three, in a family of twelve, may combine under a bond of secrecy to the exclusion of the others. Here is a secret society in a family, and how villainous does it look! Have not the other members of the family great reason to fear, and jealously watch this little secret society? A whole family may become a secret society, bound together by the strongest pledges of secrecy. But were this known to the public would not that family be justly regarded as a dangerous family? "The meaner the family the more need of secrecy!" To gravely charge a family with being a secret society is to lay upon it a grevious reproach, which an honest family, feeling the keen insult, would disdainfully repel.

3. "But many secretists profess to be Christians." So do Mormons, Catholics, Unitarians, slave-holders, Universalists, and man other errorists.

4. "Secret temperance orders do some good." So do Mohammedans, Jesuits and Spiritualists,—shall we sanction them? The fair pretensions of secret temperance (as well as other) orders are deceptive and make many dupes. Their secrecy does temperance no good,—rather harm by dividing temperance workers. In defense they affirm that their secrecy is very trifling. So it is, too trifling for an earnest (Rev. 3: 15) Christian to endorse; so is the work they accomplish for temperance, and so, too, is their foolish flare, fuss, feathers and fun (their chief attraction) furnished for their young. They prove vastly more effective as "fun-shops" and as nurseries for more reprehensible orders than for temperance. Sharks that under guise of lecturer or officer, or in other ways, manage to fleece them will of course encourage their existence and growth.

D. L. Moody, the noted evangelist, quoting Paul's words, 2 Cor. 6: 14, answering the question, "What do you say about these secret temperance orders?" said, "I say the same thing. Do no evil that good may come. You can never reform anything by unequally yoking yourself with ungodly men. True reformers separate themselves from the world; 'But,' you say, 'you had one of them in your church.' So I did, but when I found out what it was I cleaned it out like a cage of unclean birds. They drew in a lot of young men of the church in the name of temperance and then they got up a dance and kept them out till after twelve at night. I was a partaker in their sins because I let them into the church; but they were cleaned out and they never came back. This idea of promoting temperance by yoking one's self up in that way is abominable. * * * Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up. * * * What right has a Christian man to be in some of those lodges where there are infidels and skeptics that care not and scoff at the Word of God? The Word of God pumps right through such a profession of faith." (Addresses at Chicago and Boston 1876, 1877.)

IX. The Only Consistent Attitude. To permit adhering secret church membership approves the moral quality of secretism as to willingly permit an unrepentant saloonist membership sanctions saloonism. Can these blackening, burning coals of fire be taken into the bosom of the church harmlessly? The blasting, corrupting power of these idolatrous orders is clearly seen where churches receive their adherents. How lukewarm and fruitless! Give them entrance and pastor and church are domineered into worldliness. Give the least harmful secret order an entrance and it proves the entering wedge for others,—votes and sentiment are quickly increased to receive the whole unclean brood. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." To protect itself the church must neither touch nor taste, but must exclude and stand aloof from the unclean, idolatrous thing. Read Rev. 2: 14–20.

Can an anti-secret Christian consistently remain in a church—(giving it his money and influence)—which practically sanctions this idolatry? Actions as well as words should speak loudly against it. Be consistent. Come out from among them and touch not the unclean thing. Stand on the safe side.—W. H. Clay, in the Wesleyan Methodist.

SOULS, NOT DRESSES!

Who shall judge man from his manners?
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket,
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest tho'ts and feelings,—
Satin vest can do no more.

There are streams of crystal nectar
Ever flowing out of stone;
There are purple beds and golden,
Hidden, crush'd and overthrown.
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same;
By the sweat of other's foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom,
Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right.
God, whose world-wide voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Links oppression with His titles
But as pebbles in the sea.

THE CREMORNE MISSION, NEW YORK.

Jerry M'Auley's death makes a large vacancy which cannot be easily filled, in a most necessary Christian work in this city. It is not true that the places of the dead are filled and that the work of the world goes on as before, after but a temporary interruption. The places of some men are not filled, or are only partially filled, and important enterprises go on with diminished energy and success, and often languish and die. Communities, classes of men, churches, and various organizations often suffer by death losses that are irreparable or only partially made good. Men can no doubt be found whose religious experience has been almost identical with that of Jerry M'Auley, and who have also many attractive qualities, but the men are rare in whom strength, courage, sympathetic tenderness, simple faith in God, self-denying love of Christ, strong common sense, clear and sharp discernment of the characters and purposes of men are blended harmoniously as they were in the departed evangelist. He was seldom deceived, and as seldom turned away a vicious man or woman for whom even a faint hope could be entertained. He was eminently endowed by nature and by grace for the most blessed work he has conducted in this city for twelve years. In that short period he has made a record of deeds of Christlike devotion and of success in winning souls that few men make in two or three times as many years. And this work of rescuing vicious and degraded men and women has been performed without ostentation, with a purity and simplicity of motive unsurpassed. Unknown to the metropolis and to the country and to Christian hearts the world around it could not be. Such heroic devotion cannot be hid. Such successful inroads upon the kingdom of darkness attract general attention by the fierce resistance of the powers of darkness, if by no other cause.—Intelligencer.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION ANSWERED.

The following plain, straightforward answer to a question about the un-Christian work of secret societies is from the Gospel Banner, a Mennonite paper of Goshen, Indiana, whose correspondent, M. C. Boner, writes without circumlocution or hesitation of what he has seen and heard:

A brother stated "that he had occasionally seen in the Gospel Banner some very severe criticisms on secret societies, and I cannot help but believe that the influence of the paper for good is to a certain degree lost." He further says that he would not make a plea for secret orders or societies, but would like to ask radical anti-secret men this question: "Do you believe that all men belonging to secret orders are wicked and not Christians?"

I want to say that I have been a member of two different secret societies, and a part of that time I was a professed follower of Christ, and walked in what little light I had. I had but very little light, because I did not make an effort to get light. Neither was I taught by the ministers in charge, or other Christians, that it was necessary to our salvation to live close to God. At that time there was no special effort made by ministers or class leaders, to impress on the minds of believers, that to inherit eternal life, we must not be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," that we must "come out from among them and be separate," that we should "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." We never heard these and kindred passages of Scripture enlarged on. "Now we command you, brethren, in the fear of the Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly."

It was on account of ignorance, darkness, and wrong teaching, that I was then an Odd-fellow. It was for the same reason and the fear of bringing reproach upon my character, and injuring my practice as a physician, that I still remained a member of the lodge at Larwill, Whitley Co., Ind., after the Grand Master of the State visited that lodge, and in an address stated that he was authorized by the Grand Lodge of the United States, to forbid the members of subordinate lodges to use the name of Jesus Christ during lodge hours, because, he said, we have men belonging to our order, that do not believe in a Saviour, and it would wound their feelings to have this name mentioned in their presence. My father was then chaplain of the lodge, and on account of old age, we had to help him up the long flight of stairs to the lodge room. The Grand Master said unto him, Brother, when you close your prayer don't close it by saying for Christ's sake or Jesus' sake. At the close of the lodge that evening, I heard my father for the first time pray without using the name of the Blessed Master. I want to say that father was not an Odd-fellow at the time of his death. Praise God forever for light. Amen.

Was I a Christian during this time? Was I fit for heaven? In reviewing my life during that period, and until between three and four years ago, I don't remember of a single moment of time in which I could say to the living God, Thy will be done in my heart as it is done in heaven. I had a great desire to get to heaven, and likely as much so as anyone could have, but I had no positive assurance that I would, it was only a hope-so religion. There was no depth to it; it was not the saving kind, and I cannot help but think, that there is no more depth and saving properties in the religion of the members of secret orders of the present day. May God let the real saving, cleansing light on the hearts of his professed followers.

Since God has taken full possession of my heart, and given me grace to blow the gospel trumpet, I have met and become acquainted with a great many professed followers of Christ, in Illinois, Indiana and Michigan, and I have not found a single one that ever belonged to a secret order (whether Mason, Odd-fellow, or even the Grand Army of the Republic) that was saying yea and amen to God, and still remained a member of either order.

About two years ago I met an intelligent Mason in Knox, who told me that he had his feelings badly hurt the evening before, at what Bro. Welsh said during a sermon about the Masons. "Oh my, how he did go for us. Why," he said, "we could not be Masons and Christians at the same time. I have helped him a great deal, but I will never give him another dollar. I know you go straight, but I never heard you say a word on the subject. Now I want your opinion." I said to him, "Brother, you get real salvation, deep down in your soul, the kind that cleans a man all up, and you will find it will take all the love you have for the lodge out of your heart." He said, "Do you believe it?" I answered, "I not only believe it, but I know it to be a veritable fact, and if you will only kneel down on this sidewalk with me, and submit yourself to the will of God, I will prove it to you." As he walked away he said, "I don't want to talk to you." Since then I have had more to say about secret orders than ever before. Praise our God for victory.

I do thank God for the privilege of belonging to a church that does not admit members effected with the secret order malady. And I am real glad that there is an infallible remedy for everyone effected with the disease. I want to say to all who have had their feelings hurt on account of what is said against the order, that one drop of the precious blood of Christ, if applied to a willing heart, will so effectually cure anyone of secret orderism, that they will not have the least desire to again visit the lodge, nor participate in its follies. May God help us all to hold up the standard higher.

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER I.

A SON OF THE PURITANS.

His birthplace was an old-fashioned farmhouse among the New Hampshire hills; his parents an equally old-fashioned couple who believed in keeping the Sabbath, doing right by their neighbors and opposing evil wherever they found it. This uncompromising type of Christianity in the case of the Howlands seemed to be hereditary, descending from father to son in true apostolic succession. The Howland from whom the family dated its beginning was a Puritan clergyman, who, falling under the ban of the Star Chamber a few years before King Charles lost his head, sought for liberty of conscience in the colonies; but for all practical purposes of this history we need not go farther back than Josiah Howland, the sixth in lineal descent; a plain, hard working son of the soil, a good farmer and a good citizen, but with nothing about him that distinguished him to common eyes from the great mass of his fellow-men.

Though the family line boasted one or two judges, to say nothing of a score of ministers and deacons, Josiah Howland had never seemed to feel any earthly ambition beyond the desire to raise good crops and stand square with the world. He read much, especially his Bible; prayed much and talked little. He never sought office, nor did office come to him; his voice was never heard in town meetings or caucuses, yet it was a common expression with his neighbors "that though Josiah Howland never seemed to say or do much, there wasn't another man in the township that would be missed more"—which is, after all, the highest tribute that can be paid to any of us when we leave our earthly places vacant forever.

He had married early in life his second cousin, Phœbe Howland—a woman who combined with sound common sense and great practical energy of character, a deep, almost mystical type of piety. Had her lot been cast among the Quakers she might have developed into a female preacher, but being on the contrary born among those whose traditions and practice were all against a woman's voice being heard in any public assembly, the gift was stifled without anybody's suspecting its existence. Still, she was considered an uncommon girl; and when, instead of marrying a minister or foreign missionary she quietly united her lot for better or worse with a plain farmer, many people laid her choice to oddity; of which, however, Phœbe had no more than is common to human nature. The fact was she had a very keen spiritual insight and saw what other people did not see—that Josiah Howland, slow of speech and with none of the varnish of the universities upon him had the soul of one of God's princes who walk the earth encompassed with an invisible royalty.

Such a couple would not fail to give their children religious training, and the best education their means could afford. One of their sons at the time our story begins was pastor of a small country church, while the second was teaching, with prospects of a professorship. But the youngest boy, Stephen, was a secret disappointment to both their hearts, especially his mother's. She had rejoiced with trembling over his queer, wise sayings when a little child, his strange questionings into the infinite mysteries of the life beyond, seeing in every new sign of spiritual precocity, that made old gossips shake their heads with lugubrious prophecies of an early grave, only another gracious indication that the Lord had heard her prayer as he did Hannah's, and her youngest and favorite son might yet prove a second Samuel called of God from his birth. He had passed an exemplary boyhood and youth without the sowing of a single crop of wild oats, but when it came to the choice of a profession, instead of treading in the steps of his elder brother, he shattered all her motherly dreamings and sorely confounded his father by declaring his intention to be a lawyer.

Now this good Puritan farmer had about as poor an opinion of lawyers as is anyway consistent with Christian charity. He believed that, like the Cretans of old, they were "always liars"; busybodies, meddling with other men's matters; keeping up quarrels between friends and neighbors just to fill their own pockets, and browbeating bewildered witnesses till they were ready to say black was white and white was black. Did not even the Bible say, "Woe unto you lawyers!"

But Stephen had fortified himself beforehand against all probable and improbable objections to his chosen career. He reminded his father that the Scriptures made honorable mention of "Zenas the lawyer;" that even if these things were all true of the profession generally, the more need that good men should enter its ranks; that for himself he would not stoop to any mean pettifoggery to win the most important case; that he meant to be always on the side of justice, the champion of the weak and oppressed against the powerful and strong; he quoted the resounding and classical words of Hooper: "Law hath her seat in the bosom of God"; and, in short, he argued the matter with a skill and fluency that promised great things for his future clients, and even staggered Mr. Josiah Howland not a little.

He put some more wood into the kitchen stove over which he was sitting, and by that time he recovered the ideas which had been nearly swept away in the rush of his son's eloquence—very old-fashioned ideas they were, and obtained from a very old-fashioned book, but not yet obsolete in the quiet hill districts of New England.

"Now, Stephen, I want you to be an honest man, and hen I don't care what else you are. I don't care how rich, or how smart, or how famous anybody is that ain't honest, and its next to impossible to be an honest lawyer. It may be there are some that are, but it is like the camel going through the needle's eye, or the rich man entering heaven—a hard rub. To be sure the Bible tells us that what is impossible with men is possible with God. But we ain't to be presumptuous. Because a thing is possible with God is no reason why we should always reckon on his doing it for us."

There was an unpolished logic in the words of the elder Howland which the younger found it hard to gainsay, but he had as yet advanced only a little way in that knowledge which an old heathen has somewhere declared to be the highest a man can acquire—"know thyself." So he accepted his father's last remark with some slight amendments—that because a thing was impossible with the majority of men, it by no means followed that it was not very possible and easy with Stephen Howland.

"Well, father, I must say as I have said before, I don't see why a really honest man should find it difficult to keep his honesty under any circumstances. The world needs lawyers, and the question is, what kind it shall have. Shall we leave it to the base and tricky to expound our national and State laws, to defend the innocent and unmask the guilty—to sit in the places of Story and Wirt and Marshall? Shall we have jurists on the bench or charlatans?"

"I've had my say, Stephen. You've got my mind about it," was his father's only response to this grandly sounding speech. "Now it is time we heard your mother's."

Mrs. Phœbe Howland had not joined in the debate, and even at this direct appeal continued her work of paring and coring apples as if she had not heard it at all. One who did not know her would have thought her indifferent to the subject; but the truth was she was a woman who never spoke hastily when any important matter was under discussion, and the more deeply her personal feelings were engaged either pro or con, as in the present instance, the more firmly did she hold by the rule which in her girlhood she had written out with a list of other resolutions by which to guide her daily conduct. It ran as follows: "Resolved, when my mind is not clear on any point affecting another's duty, never to open my lips until I feel that God has given me something to say." No wonder that in her family this Puritan woman was queen, Sybil, prophetess; that there was a deep, sweet gravity in her lightest speech, as of one who lived in the constant hearing of heavenly oracles.

So father and son waited, the one in reverential, the other in eager silence. Five, ten minutes passed, and but for the monotonous leaping of the quarters of apple into the bright tin pan in her lap it would have been still enough for a Quaker meeting. Then she spoke:

"It may be, father, that God has called Stephen to be a lawyer, and what are we that we should withstand his voice? I only want him to be fully persuaded in his own mind."

The point was settled. This Puritan couple, with their simple honesty, their unworldly faith in God and each other, had solved the vexed question of marital supremacy without quarreling with either Peter or Paul. Mrs. Phœbe Howland believed implicitly that her husband was the best man in the world, and though she had all the refinement and most of the book knowledge, she gloried in the opposite element in his nature as the vine glories in the rough-barked oak. Mr. Josiah Howland, on his part, looked on "mother" as a superior being who held constant communion with the unseen and the eternal; he followed reverently in the path of her lightest opinion, and would no more have thought of calling in question anything she said after one of those long, sacred "silences," than Dante would have thought of contending with Beatrice about the right road to Paradise.

It was under these circumstances that Stephen became a student in the law office of Judge Howland, a distant relative of his father's, where he remained the customary period; then, a full-fledged young barrister, opened a tiny office in a new-made western city, hung out his sign, and waited for fortune to chance that way.

The reader will please to consider this chapter as merely introductory to the story I have to tell, and pass on to the next, where he will find it begun in due and proper order.

GOOD WORK FOR LOCAL POLITICS.

THREE RIVERS, Mich., Oct. 15, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The wisest plan politically I believe to be this: In all of the little towns of our country let the Anti-masons circulate a paper and get as many to sign it as are opposed to Freemasonry. Keep agitating the question and circulating the paper for signers until a majority of the voters of the precinct are on the Anti-masonic side.

Then at the spring election vote for men to fill the local offices, justice of the peace, etc., who are free from all secret lodge affiliation. After a while we can have American party clubs in all towns, and lodge men will be out of office. I will do my share. Yours truly,

WILLIAM MACHEMER.

THROWING AWAY VOTES.—John Quincy Adams said:

"No vote can be lost or thrown away when it is cast against corrupt political parties, or to express desire for a reform in government. Always vote for a principle though you have to vote alone, and you can cherish the sweet reflection that your vote is never lost."

"He lies like a newspaper," is a German proverb. One may read the Blaine papers and scarcely know there were Prohibitionists in Ohio.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

WILLIAM DANIEL,

OF MARYLAND.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

VOTE AS YOU HAVE PRAYED.

Ye sons of freedom who have knelt,
And prayed for wisdom true
To teach you in this time of need
Just what you ought to do;
Have you not heard the answer
From the King of kings, conveyed
By his most cherished messenger,
"Go vote as you have prayed?"

You've prayed that this fair government,
The grandest ever given,
Might be a glory and renown,
An honor to high heaven.
But, ah, across her fair, white breast
Lie stains foul wrong has made,
That still must darker grow, until Men vote as they have prayed.

You have prayed that souls which languish
In the prison house of sin
Might be rescued from their bondage,
And a better life begin.
But you never thought how safe a wall
Your own hands might have laid
Around these weaker brothers
Had you voted as you prayed.

The Almighty waits your action,
Time is hurrying to reveal;
He will read it on the ballot
You will cast for woe or weal.
Then shall haste heaven's swiftest angel,
With the answer long delayed;
Lodge and rum shall curse no longer,
When you vote as you have prayed.

Wives with pale and tear-stained faces,
Daughters with their cheeks of flame,
Are imploring aid for loved ones
Cursed beneath the cup of shame.
O, my brothers, can you hear it,
This deep cry from souls dismayed?
Are you truly friends to woman?
Then go vote as you have prayed.

—Adapted from Mrs. Anna Barton.

To DISSENTERS FROM ST. JOHN.—Sir Robert Peel's nd was so filled with the state and opinions of pars, constituencies, etc., that it was said, "No door of understanding was wide enough to let in a fullwn principle." Garrison was so full of the non-perty-holding of human beings that he smashed urches, parties, governments even, which obstruct-his one principle. We wish and hope, neither to sake principle for policy, nor in our zeal for princito forsake good sense. So did not Christ. He tenced corrupt church-rulers to "greater damna-n;" yet he commended to the people their orthodox chings, and praised the poor woman who gave m her two mites.

The Cynosure sustains St. John, because he loves rist and stands square on every plank of our plat-
m (though he was nominated by another party), ainst the rule: "Americans must vote only for out-
d-out Americans."

Now Secretary Stoddard intends to ask Rev. Jos. avis, chairman, to call together the Directors of the
C. A. as soon as the election is over:

1st. To make clear the distinction between the N.
A. and the American party, or religion and poli-
s. Church and state are both divine institutions; but the state includes Ingersoll and his followers, the church does not.

2d. Would it not be well for the American party to meet in connection with the N. C. A. as heretofore; to consider the state of the nation, reorganize, and provide for future operations? Will the National Committee call a meeting at the same time and place, to nail our flag to our top-mast, to repair leak if there are any, and put the American ship full on her course? Praying men have votes, and voting men need prayers. Let us hear from chairman Capwell.

IOWA ELECTORAL TICKET.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Iowa, Oct. 12, 1884.

THE CALL TO FASTING AND PRAYER.

A few short, pointed, direct words. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

First, thanksgiving to God for the call. "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go up to the house of the Lord." David felt this all the way through his soul and body. He danced before Jehovah when the Ark was brought to its place. Let us praise God that we are called by fasting and prayer to bring God, Jehovah of Hosts, into the center of the reform, to dwell there, our wisdom, our power, our defense, our joy. Such a call was never heard before from a political party in this land. Again I say, let us praise God. Let us be bathed in the depths of humility, sunk out of sight, for our want of faith and faithfulness; while we praise and magnify and glorify God because he has done "exceeding abundantly, more than we can ask or think."

What are we called to do? To fast and pray. It is not a little thing we are called to do. If it is really done, the whole moral condition of the nation will be grasped by an unseen, almighty power, and shaken with mightier vibrations than the solid earth by the recent earthquake. Blind eyes will be opened, deaf ears will be unstopped, stony hearts will be made flesh, iron wills subdued, dead souls brought to life, and the insane and bewildered and possessed of devils will be healed and cleansed, and delivered, and clothed and in their right mind and sitting at the feet of Jesus and learning of him; and in our political gatherings, instead of cunning and craft, and selfishness and deception, and appeals to all that is low in the human heart, there will be humility and prayer, and trust in God, and noble, heroic devotion to truth.

Is not the call a great one? Do not we all instantaneously cry out, "Who is sufficient for these things?" And yet it can be done. It has been done by men and women weak as we. I speak as unto wise men. You know it has been done. When God's truth, the world's hope, was thrown over with infinite crushing weight on to the souls of men and women like us for its existence on earth, O! how they cast themselves on God in prayer; and O! what wonders God has done in answer! How did Elijah pray! and he was a man of like passions as ourselves. How did David call on God and the whole earth has felt, and is feeling the answers of his prayers, and if any man was human like us David was! I need not repeat to you who read your Bibles, what God has done in answer to prayer.

But you say, these were exceptions. No, they were not. Take Edward Payson, Charles G. Finney, David Livingstone. But I will stop right here. Let prayer be prayer and fasting be fasting, and God will hear it, and answer in terrible things in righteousness.

But how are we thus to fast and pray? Brethren, be men. Don't let this call be a sham—a mockery. Rather die than trifle. Don't be lazy; don't be shiftless. Settle your individual cases with God as though it were the last act of yours on earth, so that there will be nothing in your souls individually that will shut you away from God, and prevent you from fasting and praying. Let God's judgments which he has been pouring out upon the land move you, as you feel that they should move everybody else. Look at the terrible wickedness of the world and the church, its selfishness, its greed, its indolence, self-love, corruption, and ruin. Look at the terrible havoc of human hopes and human life which flow from such God-defying, God-dishonoring disobedience and sin, and come David, Luther, Knox, Finney, the crusade women, and hosts of others came, and God will hear and answer by terrible things in righteousness.

THE OLD CONGREGATIONAL MINISTER.

AN APPEAL TO OUR AMERICAN MEN.

Some time ago I sent an article to the Cynosure entitled, "An Appeal to Women." Now I want to say a few words to the men—to our men of America.

How many of you, husbands, fathers and brothers, are going to vote the temperance ticket this fall? How many will vote for "God, and home, and native land?" How many, in the face of "Blaine and Logan" clubs, will vote for St. John? My husband wears his badge and will vote for him, and were I a man I should do the same. There are two questions I should like to vote on—Temperance and Mormonism, and if these curses are not removed in any other way, please God, woman suffrage shall help to do it some time. But we need not wait for that time if you who have the power now will only vote as you pray.

Pray for purity in high places, but remember that prayer alone will not suffice. There is work to be done and the call has gone forth for workers. Who will answer? Who is on the Lord's side? "He that putteth his hand to the plow and turneth back is not worthy of me."

WISCONSIN WIFE.

A STRONG CLUB AT PAXTON, ILL.

God is doing wonders for us in Paxton. I thought I was the only one to cast a prohibition vote. God has been moving, and suddenly a Democrat, and he a Christian, has called on me to help him. The result: Last night the Rev. Mr. McClish, president of Grand Prairie Institute, gave us one of the best of prohibition speeches. It was good; no slang, no criminations, and twenty-five formed a Prohibition club, and still there is more to follow. Bro. Benj. Ferris opened the meeting with prayer. The Holy Spirit indicted his petitions, and God was in the assembly. Glory to his name. W. W. B.

A SHORT TALK WITH TEMPERANCE PEOPLE.

FAIRFIELD, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Under the above caption I desire to notice a few of the many things that might be said concerning the great evil of intemperance, and to point out some of the methods by which we may successfully combat it. The liquor traffic exists, and exists under the authority and protection of statutory laws. The effect of this traffic may be seen in thousands of ways: in the visage of the dram drinker; in the drunkard as he comes reeling forth from one of the legalized dens of this traffic, and an important station for carrying on the missionary system of Satan for the tearing down of all that is pure, and good, and for the preparation of material for the peopling of his dominion; but more forcibly in the horrid crimes and misdemeanors that it incites; the poverty, misery and want that it creates; in the scalding tears, heartaches and haggard looks of her who had pledged love and fidelity to him who had fallen from respectability and honor through the power of the drink habit to degradation and shame. Again, we may see its effects by the great number of jails, penitentiaries and prisons filled with the victims of this drink curse, and in the number of human lives taken and lost.

All these are some of the effects. The cause is the statutory, legalized, licensed liquor traffic. Is there no remedy for all these evils?

There is. Let all of God's people, all temperance people and all other people who love sobriety and good government, who desire to see an educated manhood and womanhood free from the evils of this drink demon, begin now to cease signing petitions for saloon license; and when druggists and merchants who have drug departments fall in with the habit of giving away, and resort to evil devices for evading the law, withdraw from them your patronage and tell them that they must come up to a higher plane before you can help them with your trade.

Then we come to the point directly at issue. As we are just on the eve of a great national election, we must analyze the platforms of the political parties who come before us asking our votes; see which party is contending for principles and which parties are struggling for no principle at all, but merely a scramble for power; and we will be found working with that party who are nobly struggling and battling against great odds for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Let all who can engage in this conflict for principle, talk, write, preach and pray for prohibition; and on the morning of the election in November let all praying people be found in their closets, in the silent grove, or collected together, praying God to direct the minds and hearts of the people aright, that their ballots may be right, that we may elect a God-fearing man for our next chief magistrate. That man is St. John, who will not wince, but will have nerve and grace enough to throttle the drink monster, and say, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." Whisky is doubtless good in its proper place, and we propose to let Dr. Guthrie tell what that place is: "There is nothing like whisky in this world for preserving a man when he is dead; but it is one of the worst things in the world for preserving a man when he is living. If you want to keep a dead man put him in whisky; if you want to kill a living man put whisky into him." Let us look well to our duty here and be found endeavoring to save life and ameliorate the condition of our race and country by working for and voting prohibition both now and on until prohibition shall prevail and its benign influences are felt and recognized in every nook

CORRESPONDENCE.

FREEMASONRY AND OUR RELIGIOUS JOURNALS.

A very fair sample of the courteous treatment of the secret brotherhood by religious journals more or less Masonized—say magnetized, like our party newspapers in regard to Mormon polygamy, or as they used to be in regard to slavery—may be seen by the following quotation from one of them. After noticing the meeting at Farwell Hall of the Grand Lodge, and nearly six hundred lodges represented, it closes with the statement that "the business, being confined mainly to the order, is of no great interest to the general public."

No? Perhaps, however, it ought to be of some interest to the religious public. The declaration of Rev. Dr. Thomas at the feast in the spring of 1882 of the Knights Templar that Masonry is a religion and Templary its gospel, ought to have attracted some sort of denial if it could be done, but it was easier to pass over the claim as if it was in harmony with Christianity, and so a Baptist reverend stood up and by his oratory shared in the applause of the worshipers of the gospel of Knight Templary! And yet, the religion of Masonry is as truly anti-Christian as Mohammedanism, and reverends and church members may as well profess to be Mohammedans or Buddhists or of any false worship as Masonry, and continue to profess that no salvation for man can be preached by God's authority except through the Lord Jesus Christ. Salvation by Masonry or "any other" is but a delusion of the wicked one.

Yes, send out missionaries and support preachers and churches and religious papers, but let them all be dumb dogs on Masonry or be shot at by the half million and sixty thousand in the United States. Senex.

NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

Editor Cynosure:—I desire to express my approval of the project to maintain a stand at the New Orleans Exposition for the sale and distribution of anti-secrecy books and tracts. Nothing that we could do would attract the attention of so many people toward our reform from all parts of the United States and from every civilized nation on the globe. It would be better than the Weed Letter or the Pittsburgh riot in bringing it to the public notice. Remember this is what we want. The people must find us out, and as yet the vast majority of the American people know nothing of us. Besides it is highly appropriate that we make an effort in the metropolis of that misguided South, which, under the blinding, contaminating influence of slavery and Freemasonry, was led to strike a blow at her best friend and protector, the Federal Government. Slavery is no more, but Freemasonry yet remains, a menace to free institutions; and who knows how soon traitor hands, united in a brotherhood that recognizes no superior among the powers of the earth, will be again raised against the "best government under the sun." Freemasonry was undoubtedly a powerful factor in the great secession movement, as the events of the day clearly indicate. By all means, then, let the New Orleans project be carried out.

Columbian.

PITH AND POINT.

MAXIMS FOR THE MASONS.

The poorest of a poor thing is a poor bridge, and the worst of all bridges is an unsafe one over which the soul essays to change worlds. A bridge should reach from shore to shore, be wide enough to be secure, and strong enough to hold up. Masonry is a poor bridge to(?) heaven, but good enough, we presume, to the G. L. A., i. e., to the gulf-lodge-abyss Ye lodgites, remember Ashtabula. N. C.

WHOM DOES GOD APPROVE?

Should not every Christian voter in our country ask the question in regard to the nominees for the Presidency: Which is the one that God approves? Will a Christian dare vote for one whom God does not choose lest he be found to be fighting against God? Some one suggests that prayer be offered on Sabbath P. M. for the election of a God-fearing man, but I would suggest that earnest prayer be not limited to that time, but at any time when the election comes into our minds silent prayer be offered that God would speed the right, and that our nation be so purified that the church will choose the right. M. P. N.

THE FOG ABOUT OATHS.

No one can see clearly in a fog, and thus it is with every Masonic deluded Christian who is content with the lodge oaths. This first step in Masonry is lost sight of in the talk about its good deeds and great benefits in comparison with those of churches. But if this first step was duly considered it would save many a simple soul from being snared by this anti-Christ. The oath in the civil court requires a witness to tell what he knows; or if a man is elected to an office, the oath requires him to faithfully perform its lawful, well known duties. But the Masonic oath binds a man to conceal and never reveal what he has yet to be told. There were right oaths and wrong ones under the law of Moses, and Jesus himself as under that law answered on being adjured. But the New Testament command, "Swear not" . . by heaven or earth, etc., assuredly includes and prohibits every and all Masonic oaths. It was declared to be sin to swear to do evil (of course), or to do good if "hid" (Lev. 5: 3, 4), and when such an oath-taker knew what had been hid he was guilty and had to confess and make his offering. When Eve was befogged by Satan's advice in Eden she was precisely as obedient to God as men are now when they take the oath of Freemasonry, and thereby profane that holy name by whom such oaths are condemned and utterly prohibited. T. H.

THE "INSURANCE" LODGES.

"The kings of the earth hated the whore, and burnt her flesh as with fire." If this is intended to be an allusion (it is not a quotation) to Rev. 17: 16, did not the writer notice the next verse?—"For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." "Business integrity and faith in Christ" will not immediately follow that charge. See Rev. 17: 12, 13, 14. A. H. Springstein.

HERE'S ONE—SEND ON THE REST.

You ask for the names of secret orders not commonly known. In 1868–70 there existed in Kalamazoo—and I do not know how far it did extend—a society known as "Children of Light," under the government of the Spiritualists. It was simple and silly. You had an unlighted candle on entering. Passing from one officer to another for a "lecture," you finally come to one who lights your candle, and you become a "child of light."—O. H. P., Banfield, Mich.

LITERATURE.

Shoppel's Building Plans for Modern Low-cost Houses gives in an expensive form some forty plans of cottages and villas, houses of moderate value, many of them of attractive construction and convenient arrangement. Working plans are supplied for all at ordinary rates. While many of the plans drawn in this work are doubtless too elaborate in detail and fanciful in exterior to please many who wish a house for a home, yet every builder and mechanic will find a hundred valuable hints which will well repay careful study. Published by the Co-operative Association, 24 Beekman street, New York.

Choice Literature for October reprints a very important contribution to the discussion now agitating British politics most profoundly—What shall be done with the House of Lords? Prof. Goldwin Smith, who writes, is among the ablest students of historical and economic questions. He shows that the Lords as a body are no longer needed in national affairs, their hereditary character effectually interfering with their usefulness, and with the sense of responsibility which such a grave body should feel. Elective bodies only are suited to our age. Other articles in this valuable magazine are "The Women of Chaucer," "Longer Life," "Mohammedan Mahdis," "Jacob's Answer to Esau's Cry," "The Steppes of Tartary," "About Old and New Novels," "Greece in 1884," "Afoot Across St. Bernard," "Dynamite" and "Beaumarchais." John B. Alden, New York.

Home Science is a new candidate for public favor among the monthlies, and deserves an honorable place in the home reading. Among the contributors to the October number, ex-Governor St. John, Mrs. Julia McNair Wright the well known authoress, Mrs, J. A. Froiseth of Salt Lake City, Dr. Felix L. Oswald and Rev. Dr. Hugh S. Carpenter will be recognized and greeted. Dr. Oswald's plea for pure air and loose clothing in the nursery; St. John's argument for prohibition as a necessity for American homes; Mrs. Froiseth's analysis of Mormonism as a home-destroyer; Mrs. Wright's department, "A Mother's Portfolio"; and Prof. E. P. Thwing's "Evening Home talks"—these articles make a journal that should be welcome to many firesides. These contributions fill about half the october number, which is published at 29 Warren St., New York.

"The proof of the pudding," etc., is verified in the bright pages of St. Nicholas, which furnishes the eager eyes of young readers with attractive pictures and some good reading, and some that is not so good. The pages given to Captain Pratt and his Indian training-school at Carlisle, Pa.; to a description of a Breton fete day; to a little menagarie story; and to a few hints on the first principles of perspective, will be useful and entertaining to every reader.

The B. & O. Red Book for Illinois is replete with political statistics and condensed data, not only as regards the latest Presidential, State and Congressional elections in this State, but relating as well to elections since admission into the Union. The forwarding of a stamp to C. K. Lord, Baltimore, is all that is necessary to secure a copy.

The Christian Cynosure for Sept. 11th is before us. As usual it is strong in its opposition to secret societies and intemperance. It gives no uncertain sound in reference to these evils. Its mission is a good one, and we wish it abundant success. Our people would read this paper with interest and profit.—Gospel Messenger, Huntingdon, Pa.

There were thirty temperance camp-meetings held in the State of New York this year. A few seasons like that ought to make an impression on even the Empire State, with its large foreign population to educate in the principles of total abstinence.

—On Thursday, September 26, a conference of representatives of the United and the several Reformed Presbyterian churches of the country, called by the Associate Reformed Synod of the South, was held in Pittsburgh. Sundry resolutions looking toward greater unity and cooperation of the psalm singing churches, but not toward organic union, were passed. Also a resolution recommending the denominations represented to take no part hereafter in the Presbyterian Alliance unless only the psalms are used in its devotional exercises.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON V.—Nov. 2, 1884.—The Temple Dedicated. 1 Kings 8: 22-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee. 1 Kings 8: 27.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Obedience to God a condition of national life. V. 25. The promise, "There shall not fail thee a man in thy sight to sit on the throne of Israel," was a pledge of national continuance, based like all God's promises, on a condition, "so that thy children take heed to their way." Open to almost any chapter in the prophets and we shall see that while God was faithful to his part of the covenant, pride, luxury, oppression of the poor, false worships, drunkenness, profanity and Sabbath-breaking became common national sins among the Jews, and in time "the sceptre departed from Judah." "The sin of Sodom, pride, fullness of bread and abundance of idleness" will always bring the fate of Sodom. The great Assyrian Empire fell through a drunken debauch; Greece and Rome, when they left their early republican simplicity to copy the luxuries and vices of the effete monarchies of the East. Our own Republic is to-day threatened with a similar danger. There is a very general inclination to copy European fashions, especially as regards making the Sabbath a day of diversion and pleasure-seeking. Emigration is not entirely responsible for this change. If many of our American-born citizens had not themselves drifted away from the Bible principles of their forefathers there would be little or no danger to our institutions from foreign sources. But if we copy the morals of the nations of the Old World we shall find ourselves gradually sinking to their level politically and socially. If we graft a monarchical institution like Freemasonry on the tree of our republican liberty we must expect strange fruit—Nihilism, communism and atheism, with anarchy and national ruin at last.

2. God the true author of all civil government. Vs. 31, 32. Solomon here recognizes Jehovah as the true King of Israel, the great Judge and arbiter between the righteous and the wicked. The first plank in the American platform is but a return to an old truth, that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever he will." To ignore this truth is a dangerous experiment for any government to make, especially one like our own, on whose shores the Old World pours its surplus population, and which from the freedom of its institutions is beset on every hand by peculiar dangers.

3. God is a hearer of prayer only when our actions and prayers agree. Vs. 33–36. "If they confess thy name and turn from their sin," is an important condition often overlooked. Drink is an enemy before which, as a nation, we are smitten down. Christian men who pray, "Thy kingdom come," and then vote for rulers pledged to support the rum power, or what is the same thing, not pledged against it, must not expect that their prayer will be answered. Oath-bound secrecy is another foe which will continue to triumph over us unless the Christian's vote and prayer go together. Prayer and action are like a pair of oars, one useless without the other.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How did the Jews copy the luxuries and vices of heathen nations? Amos 6: 1–6; Jer. 2: 18; Is. 28: 1, 7. What was their punishment? Jer. 26: 18; Mi. 8: 12; Math. 24: 2. What text is applicable to those who pray against great evils but do nothing? Jas. 2: 20.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

The Dedication Ceremonies. The Temple and its courts being completed, the solemn dedication took place with the greatest magnificence which the king and the nation could display. It was the grandest ceremony ever performed under the Mosaic dispensation, and one of the brightest days of Jewish history—

"a day in golden letters to be set Among the high tides of the calendar," for on that day the holy and beautiful house, which had been seven and a half years in building, for which preparations had been made for a much longer period (1 Chron. 22: 5), and on which a force of some one hundred and sixty thousand workmen had been in different ways employed; on that day of days this house of houses was solemnly dedicated to the service of Almighty God. It is an enormous concourse that is gathered in and about the holy city. From "the entering in of Hamath to the river of Egypt" (ver. 65), every town and hamlet had sent up its tale of men. No Israelite who could be present—and in the seventh month the labors of the field were well-nigh over—would be absent. We must not think of the heads of the tribes alone; it is a nation keeps festival to-day. And such a nation, with such a history! And its glory culminates to-day in the dedication of its temple. What child of Israel, then, but would be there? With early morning all Jerusalem and its neighboring hills and valleys (Ps. 125: 2) was instinct with life. The Easterns always rise early, and that day was a high day. It is still early when the great procession is marshalled. At its head is "Solomon in all his glory." The dignitaries of the state, of the church (chap. 4: 1–19) all are there. —Pulpit Com.

"In the presence of all the congregation." Note the fact that it is a king who leads his people to God's footstool. The influence of earthly rulers degrades or exalts the moral life of their people. Apply the same principle to other kings of men, i. e., to rulers of thought in literature and science. How heavy the responsibility of those who use their kingliness to lead men from God into the dreariness of skepticism; how glorious the powers they may employ to exalt the Lord our God.—Pulpit Com.

"The heaven of heavens." That is, the heaven in its most extended compass. Although the heaven of heavens cannot contain the Unmeasurable and Infinite One, and no building how great and noble soever can suffice for him, yet in his mercy he will make his dwelling place in the heart of that man who loves him and keeps his word, and it will truly become a temple of God (1 Cor. 3: 16).—Bahr.

"The place of which thou hast said, My name shall be there." The reference seems to be, not to any single text, but to the many passages in Deuteronomy where God speaks of a place which he will choose in one of the tribes to "set his name" there, to which the Israelites are thenceforward to bring their offerings (Deut. 12: 5, 11, 18, etc.; 14: 23; 15: 20; 16: 2, etc.). The choice of Jerusalem as the place seems to have been made by special revelation to David. (See Ps. 78: 68; 132: 13; and comp. 1 Chron. 22: 1.)—Cook.

The Dedicatory Prayer—Special Petitions. Vs. 31–36. Like those in the Lord's Prayer, they are seven in number.

"If any man trespass against his neighbor." The king implores the covenant-keeping God to watch over the covenants of words made in the now consecrated sanctuary, and to protect their sanctity by punishing the false swearer. Now every oath, whatever its form (Matt. 23: 16–22), is in reality an affirmation "by the God of truth" (Isa. 65: 16); it is an appeal to the knowledge and power and justice of the Most High (Lev. 19: 12; Deut. 6: 13; 10: 20; Isa. 48: 1; Jer. 12: 16; 44: 26). A false oath, consequently, dishonored the divine name, and polluted the sanctuary dedicated to that name; and, if it went unpunished, encouraged falsehood and impiety. It is, perhaps, because of the direct dishonor which perjury offers to the divine name that, as Bahr suggests, this prayer stands first among the seven, thus corresponding to the "Hallowed be thy name" in the Lord's Prayer.—Pulpit Com.

The Answer to the Prayer. See 2 Chron. 7: 1–22; 1 Kings 9: 1–9. As the king concluded, the cloud which had rested over the Holy of Holies grew brighter and more dazzling; fire broke out and consumed all the sacrifices (2 Chron. 7: 1); the priests stood without, awe-struck by the insupportable splendor; the whole people fell upon their faces, and worshiped and praised the Lord, "For he is good, for his mercy is forever."—Milman.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

There are 104 college graduates in the present House of Representatives.

The average salary of all college professors in the United States is $1,530.

There are 276 schools in the United States in which short-hand writing is taught.

The oldest student at Berlin is 69 years of age, and the oldest at Notre Dame University is 55.

Prof. Alpheus Packard, of Bowdoin, died recently, after being connected with the institution as a teacher for the past sixty-five years.

The attendance at Ann Arbor last year was 1554; at Columbia, 1520; at Harvard, 1522; at Oberlin, 1474; at Yale, 1070; at the University of Pennsylvania, 1044.

"Who wrote the most—Dickens, Warren or Bulwer?" Warren wrote "Now and Then; Bulwer wrote "Night and Morning," and Dickens wrote "All the Year Round."—Ex.

Charles L. Colby has given a round $1,000,000 to establish a new university in Wisconsin. It was his father, Gardner Colby, who endowed Colby College, at Waterville, Maine.

Extensive preparations are making for a fine educational exhibit at the World's Exposition. The Commissioner of Education, John Eaton, is sparing no pains in trying to make the exhibit worthy of our school system.

The Railroad Gazette reports a total of 147 miles of new railroad constructed, making 1,859 miles reported to date for the current year. The total track reported laid to the corresponding date for five years past is as follows: 1883, 2,796 miles; 1882, 5,667 miles; 1881, 3,115 miles; 1880, 2,631 miles; 1879, 1,273 miles.

An American traveling in Australia thus describes the famous Wentworth Falls: At first the water leaps a distance of 700 feet, as though falling over the back to the seat of a great arm chair cut out of the face of the mountain by some giant of nature. Falling in spray, it gathers itself for another run and leap, the second time falling over 800 feet into the great gorge below. The fall is so far and the foliage so dense at the foot that the eye fails to see the second gathering place of the clouds of spray glittering in the sunlight 1,500 feet below. The valley below the falls spreads out into a great amphitheatre fifty miles across, and hemmed in on every side but one with the perpendicular walls of the mountain. No human foot has ever been known to tread this valley.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. Price, fifteen cents. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St, Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } Editors.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1884.

The Voice of Masonry, Oct. 1, says: "Evidence absolutely conclusive," proves "the origin of symbolic Masonry in a society of operating mechanics," p. 801.

Dr. Herrick Johnson, Presbyterian, votes for St. John. He says, "If, in getting a few saloons closed I must sanction the whole saloon business, by license high or low, then let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth before I speak the word."

The first last.—The Chicago Tribune swallowed the old Abolition organ, Western Citizen, and was the first political reform paper in Chicago. It is now the lowest and most depraved.

Elbrige Gerry of Massachusetts, dishonestly districted that State to favor his party. Hence originated the word "Gerrymander," in use ever since.

St. John at Lake Bluff, said: "Twenty-two years ago I was indicted in Pope county for feeding a negro." (Under the Logan Black Law.) "To-day I could not be indicted in Illinois for feeding a dog." "Mutanter tempores et nos mutamur cum illis."

Miss Florence Chidester writes, "The more positive the evidence that St John is not a Mason, the surer some are that it is false." Well,

"A man convinced against his will
Is of the same opinion still."

Prohibitionists who pretend that St. John is a Mason and so vote for Blaine are entirely insincere.

Pomeroy's Political Assassination.—We call the attention of the editor of the American (Prof. Bailey) to the general and special denial of the facts concerning Senator Pomeroy's betrayal by York in the Kansas Legislature, 1873, by John H. Brown, Grand Secretary of Kansas in the Voice of Masonry for Oct., p. 863, who gives the Cynosure credit for Prof. Bailey's facts, and pronounces them false. He shows, and gives the names of the persons, that the Masons were the firm friends of Pomeroy and that the Anti-masons or "Cynosurists," as he calls them, were traitors to Pomeroy and forsook him when the man York attacked him. This does not surprise us. Masons stimulate and get up mobs, and then surround the lecturer to protect him against their own mob! Five Mormon-Masons called Dr. Robinson to set a broken leg; shot him dead in the streets of Salt Lake, and the Deseret News next morning offered a reward "for the murderers of Dr. Robinson!" Will Prof. Bailey get the October Voice of Masonry, consult Senator Pomeroy, and prick this windy article by the Grand Secretary of Kansas.

OUR RELATION TO THE CATHOLICS.

This is very complicated and, to the last degree, important. The Cynosure is intensely Protestant. It protests against the doctrine of salvation by human ceremonies, wherever and by whomsoever taught. It abhors the complete subordination and subjugation of man to man, and regards war which absorbs the free agency of soldiers into officers as a "temporary repeal of all the virtues;" in short, a judgment of God, and so no justification for the same complete annihilation of manhood, by Jesuits, Masons, Mollie Maguires, Ku-Klux, Nihilists, etc., etc.

But over, above, and beyond all, the Cynosure regards all priests, since Christ, who "hath an unchanging priesthood," as mere errors, mistakes and counterfeits. Christ is the only High Priest we have, or need.

Now, on the contrary, while we loathe and detest all sham Protestantism, with its "step toward modified Universalism;" "restatement of Christ's words of future retribution, post-mortem probation," etc., we consider the whole secret lodge system a foul conspiracy against God, and goodness, the Bible, order, and morals. And this system of Masonry numbers in its dark lists thousands of members and ministers of Protestant churches. We look upon the whole Masonic horde, little and large, as one complicated, collective anti-Christ of the last days. Knight Templary, originally a Popish institution, now pervades Protestantism, and mocks Christ with its "cup of devils," drunk from human skulls, etc., harlot finery, and sword-worship. This is embarrassing enough.

Now the American party proposes to withdraw these lodge-charters, and prohibit their oaths by the votes of the American people; and the Cynosure believes it can, and will be done. God is everywhere "raising up a standard" against these dreary abodes of darkness and moral death.

Prof. Claudio Jannet of the Catholic University of Paris, sent us four French volumes against secret societies as the enemies of society. A bright monthly, entitled "Freemasonry Unmasked," is sent us also from Paris. And now we have the two letters below; one from a polished gentleman in Tours, South France, and the other from the Rev. Joseph P. Roles, a Catholic priest in Chicago. The letters explain themselves, and we will endeavor to recur to our relations with the Catholics next week.

This much is certain, the Romish church, all things considered, is the strongest human organization on earth; and it insists on Christ as King. It insists on marriage between one man and one woman. It gives us the Father and the Son; while the lodge denies us both; and every Catholic paper which appeals to the people against the lodge is on the right track, for appeals to the people are American.

But here are the letters. Read them:

[Translated by Prof. W. H. Fischer.]

Tours, France, Sept. 17th, 1884.

Rev. Doctor Blanchard, Wheaton College, Ill.

Rev. Sir:—We have learned that, seeing the dangers caused to Christian society by the immense Masonic Associations, you are at the head of a prosperous party which applies itself to weaken and diminish the destructive effects of Freemasonry, and to cauterize the wounds inflicted by this dangerous society, as well on the moral as on the material existence of Christian society.

Under the name of "Society of Historical Research" we have founded at Tours a nucleus of resistance and exposure which we hope to extend and increase towards the same object which you pursue. Also we would request your favor in corresponding with us, and giving us valuable information concerning the means most favorable to your benevolent endeavors, as well as concerning results already achieved.

Your elections of next November interest us very much; and we desire to follow them in order.

Accept, Rev. Sir, the expression of our respectful consideration. Yours for the truth, A. Schmid.

Here follows the courteous letter of a priest of thirty-one years standing, twenty-five of which he has passed in Chicago; a gentleman of much travel and intelligence:

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 4, 1884.

Rev. Dr. Blanchard,

Dear Sir—Recently in Tours, France, I made the acquaintance of Mons. A. Schmid, the editor of the Independent, a gentleman well versed in antiquarian researches, but now directing his attention chiefly to the influence that secret societies are exercising on order and morals.

He was very much interested in the work that you had performed in America, for his views in the main are yours, but in some details he had noted of your career, I think he was misinformed.

I. Could you give me, to be transmitted to him, any pamphlet or work of yours likely to put him right on all?

II. As he is the leader of an organized movement against secret societies would you like to be placed in correspondence with him? Yours respectfully, Jos. P. Roles.

THE COLLEGE LEPROSY: KNOX COLLEGE.

"Prof. Henry L. Boltwood, formerly of Princeton, now principal of Evanston High school, says in a respectful note that Dr. Bateman of Knox College never said anything to him on the subject of Masonry; but that Prof. Wm. M. Baker of Champaign did advise him to join the Masons, for "they are a power in Illinois." The Cynosure published the statement on the authority of an old and respected Congregational minister."

The above paragraph was inserted in the Cynosure, Oct. 2d, at the instance of Mr. Boltwood, during the absence of the senior editor. It requires a word of explanation.

The senior editor graduated the first thirteen classes from Knox College. There have been four presidents of that institution since he left. The first three successors, two Curtises and Dr. J. P. Gulliver, were neither of them Masons. Dr. Gulliver was openly opposed to college secret societies. Dr. Bateman, the present incumbent, was a Mason; had been "Grand Orator," etc., and when he came to the presidency he was gazetted as such by G. C. Lanphere in the leading Galesburg paper; and the lodge was congratulated on having Dr. Bateman at the head of the College.

As it is customary for Masons to mislead and conceal, anxiety was felt lest the cause of education in Illinois should suffer from Masonic defilement and corruption; especially as Dr. Bateman had been Superintendent of Public Instruction in Illinois. Mr. Boltwood was then in Princeton, Ill., where I called on him; stated to him my anxiety concerning Dr. Bateman's influence on our system of education, and asked him (Boltwood) whether he belonged to the Masons? He said, "No," that he had declined to join the lodge while in the army; and that since coming to Illinois Dr. Bateman had advised him to join the lodge as "no young man in Illinois could rise in the profession of a teacher without its aid." Soon after, I stated the above facts to Rev. Dr. Bascom, and he said, "Boltwood told me the same thing."

Now, after some ten or fifteen years Mr. Boltwood writes, and comes in person to the Cynosure office, and says it was not Dr. Bateman, but a young man, Baker, who was in Bateman's office, and not himself a Mason, who advised him to join the Masonic lodge. Of course, Mr. Boltwood's memory or my own is at fault.

My reasons for thinking that he (and not myself) is mistaken, are these: I am an Anti-mason and Mr. Boltwood is not. I was concerned and anxious about Dr. Bateman and knew nothing about any such person as Mr. Baker. It was Dr. Bateman and not Baker whom I mentioned to Boltwood. I attached great importance to the subject. My memory is therefore clear and distinct, and I am ready to support with my oath the facts as I have given them. This explanation is due to the readers of the Cynosure, especially in Knox and Warren counties.

But the question of a slip of memory is not the material point involved in this case, and does not explain Mr. Boltwood's anxiety to shield Dr. Bateman from the charge of advising him to join the lodge. The question in which the Christian public is concerned, is, whether Knox College, built and endowed by Anti-masons, is now a home and headquarters of secret societies.

The painful proofs that it is, are the following:

1. Dr. Bateman was, on his coming to Galesburg, gazetted by Masons as a member of their order. He stood then and stands now as a high Mason in the esteem of the public; and has given no public intimation, as Gov. St. John has, that he has left the lodge.

2. A Mr. Hurd, who is a member of the Presbyterian church where Dr. Bateman worships, said in Fairfield, Iowa, some two or three weeks since, that Dr. Bateman was known and esteemed by Galesburg Masons as a member of their order.

3. A merchant of high character in a neighboring town to Galesburg, was induced to join a secret society in Knox College, which he attended but one night. Ten years afterward, he had been yearly summoned to attend the annual meetings, and pay money to that secret fraternity.

4. At Monmouth College, where five secret oath-bound societies gave up their secrets and their books, it was stated by the students that members of Monmouth College were first initiated by three students from Knox College, against the laws of Monmouth College, and the tenets of the United Presbyterian church. Thus Knox College had become an illicit fountain of corruption to other institutions.

5. Among the secret societies which have troubled and defied the Monmouth College senate, were two chapters or clans of girls, pledged or sworn to concealment even from their own mothers!

Dr. Hitchcock's "Reminiscences of Amherst College" contains the letters of eight or nine heads of the principal colleges, condemning these secret orders in colleges as pests.

The object of this writing is to induce Dr. Bateman, who is highly esteemed as an educator and a man, to withdraw his influence from the abominations of the lodge, to restore the noble foundation of Knox College to the principles of its founders, and to save the coming millions of school children in Illinois from being led by Masonic teachers into those dens of secret false worship which bring the wrath and curse of God on nations. J. B.

—C. W. Long, Fennimore, Wis., has been told by an Odd-fellow that St. John holds a high position in that order. Gov. St. John was never in that order, veracious Odd-fellows to the contrary notwithstanding.

—Friends in New York State can secure the services of W. B. Stoddard, State agent, by writing to F. W. Capwell, Dale, Wyoming county, chairman of the State committee. Let there be a vigorous canvass for reform throughout the season.

—The Golden Cresset of Manhattan, Kansas, is a small religious monthly professing to speaking "fearlessly and freely," and it "fully pledged to always reveal and never conceal the truth."

—Rev. R. M. D. Feemster, brother of Paul S. Feemster, the Kansas State agent, is preaching for the Congregational church at Robert, Kansas. The church has lately adopted a testimony against secret societies as unchristian.

—The New York State Agent got this kind notice the other day from the Steuben Sentinel of Woodhull, N. Y.:

"An Anti-masonic fanatic drew quite a crowd to the town hall on Monday evening to hear him lecture."

Give us the crowd and the lodge may have all the epithets and vile names in the Billingsgate vocabulary.

—The Cynosure welcomed during last week as visitors, Elder J. L. Barlow of Lima, Ind.; Robert Shemeld of St. Paul, who with his wife is on his way to West Africa as a missionary, sent out by the Free Methodist brethren; and Jasper J. Tucker, a seceded Mason of Spring Arbor, Mich., whose experiences and method of dealing with Masons would make him an excellent colporteur agent. The Cynosure hopes he may be put into the field.

NATIONAL REFORM.

)ear Cynosure:—Bro. R. C. Wylie and I feel te good over the success of our Iowa and Illinois te conventions. Scarcely any of our speakers dis-ointed us, and we secured the assistance of some the ablest men in the different churches. The estions discussed were those bearing on the duty government to recognize God's law as its standard legislation.

Our movement attaches great importance to the nstitution of the United States, because it is the y document in which the whole nation can declare relation to God.

As Judge Strong, formerly of the Supreme Court the United States once said of the Constitution, ll laws, all customs, all forms of administration, shaped by it. Everything in any State, corpora-n or business that affects a citizen in the remotest rce, as to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happi-s, is tested by it, and stands and works only as it ees with it. Our statesmen and our whole people learning their Americanism, as to its letter and rit, from this great instrument."

We hold that our Constitution, in making no men-n of God or Christianity, ignores the prime factor our national prosperity and the principal object of vernment, which is the glory of God.

At Monmouth, President McMichael, the professors l pastors, did everything possible to open up the y for our convention. They also took an active t in the discussions. Drs. McMichael and McDill of the Scotch-Irish Presbyterian stock, of whom Blanchard says, they can make such fine distinc-ns on questions of civil government, that they can ow a broad-ax e ten rods, and hit a hair and split it. Dr. McMichael put the following syllogistic state-nt in the question box, as an expression of his ws on the subject: First, "Whereas, God and his are clearly within the pervieu of conscience and light of nature;" and second, "Whereas, the State n institution founded in nature, she is therefore nd to acknowledge God and his law in her Con-ution;" but third, "Whereas, Christ is a subject of e revelation, wholly indescribable by the light of ure, therefore, is a State bound to do that which y an institution founded in grace can do, namely, nowledge the Lord Jesus Christ in his Mediatorial ce." The Dr. emphatically denied that it should. admit with him that nations are founded in na-e, and that Christ is not revealed by nature. But hold that Christ reveals himself to nations in his rd, and therefore they are under the same obliga-n as the individual to own him. The Dr. might as l say that individuals while in a state of nature uld not confess Christ, because he is not revealed nature. We do not ask either the individual, or nation to confess Christ as King, until by the in-ence of Christ's Word and Spirit, they are changed m a state of nature to a state of grace. It is true t governments founded in nature are not obligated Christ as Mediator for their origin. But all such rernments are doomed to destruction, unless they ure a permanent foundation in grace by owning rist. We admit that governments founded in na-e have not the capacity or disposition to know or Christ's will; and for the same reason they cannot ow or do even the will of God. But what the Na-nal Reform Association aims to effect is, to influ-e the nation by the Word and Spirit of God to l and to do that which is requisite.

t is unjust, some say, to deprive an un-Christian nority of citizenship, by government making such onfession. Is it not more unjust to deprive Christ his rightful authority, and to deny the privilege citizenship to his loyal subjects?

n working up these conventions we have circulars nted with the call on one side and program on the er. These we send to ministers and newspapers oughout the State. Then on the Sabbath preced-the convention, Bro. Wylie and I preach in the ding churches, presenting the claims of the move-nt. We thus succeed in reaching the ear of the ss of the Christian people. We feel after each vention that we are getting down to more effective thods of agitation. Pres. C. A. Blanchard made closing speech at Monmouth, on "The Pre-emp-n Right of Christianity." It was a good address l will be published in the Christian Statesman.

A similar convention will be held at Hastings, Neb., . 20th and 21st, at which Pres. Ringold of Mc-rmick College, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Rev. E. B. ham and others will speak. M. A. Gault.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Fond du Lac, Wis., Oct. 18, 1884.

Accompanied by Dea. M. R. Britten of Vienna, I reached this city on the evening of the 15th, and found a cordial welcome at the home of Daniel Varney. The 16th we devoted to the examination of property in which the N. C. A. has an interest, and agreed that it was advisable to sell rather than hold for an advance. Having given the benefit of his experience and cool business judgment, Bro. Britten took the P. M. train for home, and I remained to push the plans upon which we had agreed. One house and lot has been disposed of and the others insured and put on the market. One house is at present without a tenant, but the prospect is for a renter soon.

Fond du Lac, like many other towns in the interior, has suffered from the depression of trade and removal of business to new openings, but its citizens are still hopeful of the future, and claim an improvement and increase of 2,000 in population in the last two years. Politics is of course the all-absorbing topic, and although saloons are plenty, I find some who are going to vote for St. John.

J. P. Stoddard.

THE CONNECTICUT CONVENTION.

The Connecticut Christian Association opposed to secret societies met Oct. 7th at 7 P. M. in Mission Hall, Willimantic, Connecticut. It was called to order by the president and after half an hour spent in devotional exercises, was addressed by H. H. Hinman on the relations of secret societies to Christianity.

On Wednesday, Oct. 8th, met at 9 A. M. After half an hour spent in prayer and remarks, the secretary reported proceedings of last meeting, which report was approved. The chairman then announced the names of committees on enrollment, on nominations, and on resolutions. The committee on nominations recommended the names of J. A. Conant, Willimantic, president; Jas. Reid, of Simsbury, vice-president; Geo. Smith, of Willimantic, secretary and a vice-president for each county, which report was adopted.

The committee on resolutions presented the following, which after due discussion was adopted without dissent:

Whereas, It is the indispensable duty of Christian citizens to labor for the promotion of pure Christianity and just civil government; and,

Whereas, Christianity and good government are both obstructed and imperiled by the prevalence of secret societies; and,

Whereas, The great evils of the liquor traffic are justly attracting a large share of public attention, therefore

Resolved, That we, members of the Connecticut Christian Association declare our conviction that the anti-secrecy and temperance reforms are kindred and inseparable, and that so long as the officers of the law and those engaged in the liquor traffic belong alike to a sworn and secret brotherhood it will be impossible to enact and enforce prohibition.

Resolved, In view of the fact that for more than half a century the internal and unchristian character of Freemasonry has been fully revealed and that this knowledge has been accessible to all, there is no excuse for ignorance on this subject and that we regard the failure of any religious teacher to bear testimony against this iniquity as indicating either criminal ignorance or positive disloyalty to Christ.

Resolved, That we heartily commend the Christian Cynosure of Chicago, and the American of Washington, D. C., and urge their enlarged circulation as indispensable to the success of our reform.

H. H. Hinman reported three weeks' work, in which he visited the counties of Windham, Hartford, Middlesex, New Haven and New London, also Rhode Island, and had spoken eleven times. The amount raised on the field was $65.45. The expenses of convention, including services of agent, $65.45, which report was approved.

Rev. A. M. Ahgren, of Hartford, addressed the convention and miscellaneous remarks were made by several gentlemen and a lady.

In the afternoon of the 8th the convention took a recess and the American party convention took its place, which voted to endorse the nomination of St. John and Daniel, and nominated a State ticket composed in part of the candidates of the Prohibition party, to be supported at the ensuing State election as the American candidates.

In the evening the Association again met and was addressed by H. H. Hinman on the relation of secret societies to civil government, after which it adjourned sine die.

GOOD WORK IN SOUTHERN IOWA.

Beaconsfield, Iowa, Oct. 12, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—I will endeavor to give you a few items that we trust will be of interest to the friends of the anti-secrecy cause.

Mr. M. N. Butler has been here. He has given eighteen lectures in this county (Ringgold, the one in which Elder Rathbun was mobbed) and six in this neighborhood.

He spoke on Grand Lodge Masonry, the religion, the government and the antiquity of Freemasonry, and other important phases of the subject.

Mr. Butler is a good speaker, and the fairness with which he handled his subject none could question. And although there was a man (?) in the west part of the county who was kind enough to inform him he had a wooden overcoat for him, he was not inclined to receive it. Here he was greeted with good audiences and order, none daring to molest or make us afraid.

Throughout the entire discussions great interest was manifested, some coming five or six miles; and friends were added both to himself and to the cause. Persons who before neither knew or cared, now are the avowed friends of the cause.

During his stay with us Mr. Butler distributed thousands of pages of literature, including the Cynosure, American, etc. Let this work go on, and "with a school-house on every hill-top and no saloon in the valley," we will by-and by be able to overcome all of the unfruitful works of darkness.

Having ended his short and pleasant visit Mr. Butler took his departure for other parts of the field, with the promise of his return in the near future. May his labor be crowned with success wherever he may go.

Yours for the war, Calvin Ogier.

TRUTH TRIUMPHANT IN SOUTHERN MISSOURI.

DADEVILLE ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION.

Mr. Editor:—I have been, during most of the time for the last sixteen years, a resident of Dade county, Mo. I found it, as is too much the case everywhere, completely under the control and influence of secret orders, and from a sense of duty commenced the circulation of literature antagonizing all such things. As a natural result I soon brought upon my devoted head the anathemas and opposition of all such combinations. Since my avocation was that of school teacher, in more than one instance have I been made to experience, to my hurt, the power of the lodge. However, I still endeavored, by God's grace, to pursue my even tenor in sowing the seed of anti-secrecy. Thus things went on for several years, my humble self being the target at which all these secret orders had to shoot. About three years since the work that I was so hopelessly engaged in, as my Masonic friends would frequently tell me, received quite an impetus by the labors of Bro. H. H. Cannady, who came to our neighborhood from Kansas.

Thus things went on until the 24th of June last, at which time, as is their custom, the Masons came out to exhibit their "Vanity of lies"; which they did so effectually as to disgust all sober-minded men and women who were to any extent acquainted with their real character. What few "Antis" were in the community now concluded the time had come, if ever, to show up the other side of the question. A few of us got together, looked the situation over, and resolved to make the effort. Accordingly, one party was authorized to procure speakers; a second, a place to speak from, or at. The labors of Wm. M. Love, of Osceola, Mo., and J. K. Glassford, of Carthage, Mo., were secured. The 1st of October was the time set to open out on the opposing forces. The second party had, however, a rather more difficult part to perform than the first. The place (M. E. church) most desirable for giving attack was surrounded by six pickets (trustees), who of course had to be captured. The man appointed for the work in the most frank, open, artless way possible, approached them: and to his infinite delight one after another of the number fell, until the entire number were captured; i. e., frankly and freely gave their consent that the house might be had for the purpose desired, after said purpose had been clearly and fully set forth; one of them signing the agreement while he held a number of our bills in his hand.

But lo! strange things will happen. It must not be forgotten that the occupant of the pulpit of said house, poor fellow! had been, some time during his life, killed and raised, alas! as was poor Hiram of old. He at once, upon realizing the situation, set to goading his trustees with his Masonic horns back to their proper positions; and, strange to say, he effected his purpose most effectually with three of them; while two of them agreed to go back, upon condition they could compromise the matter, one not going to his meeting at all. Our man now rallies

THE VALES.

The nestling vales lie sheltered from rough winds,
As little babes in tender keeping grow,
Some narrow gorge each flowery limit binds;
Thus we from childish eyes hide elder woe.
The vales are thick with corn, with plenty shine;
Thus should the children smile in sunny glee,
For One hath blessed them with a love divine,
The untried pilgrims of life's stormy sea.
Though rough winds cannot enter, gentle rain
Refreshes the green vale, till springs arise,
Their source the snow-clad hills; so age should gain,
By gentle teaching, childhood's eager eyes.
Rain fills the pools, the thirsty vale is blest;
Thus should the children thrive, by love caressed.

THE MOUNTAINS.

The lofty mountains with their snowy crests,
God's ensigns, praise their Lord throughout the land:
Their heights, which few can reach, in human breasts
Inspiring awe, yet quake beneath his hand.
Oft twixt their summits and the lower earth,
The wreathing cloud-mists roll, alone they dwell
As sight-dimmed age. Our cries of pain or mirth
Molest them not; thus age with deadening spell
Benumbs our ears, yet near each lonely peak
Sing mountain birds, sunbeams each summit crown.
From highest heaven thus God's saints may seek Refuge in thoughts divine, though long years drown
Earth's rounds; on mountain crest reposed the Ark,
Our home above shines clear, as earth grows dark.

JERUSALEM.

It is not strange that my first night on the Mount of Olives was sleepless, though the preceding night had been spent in the saddle, and the preceding day in fatiguing travel, yet the vision of Jerusalem, which I had that day seen for the first time, remained so vivid before my mind's eye, that it banished all thought of sleep and all sense of fatigue.

For hours I lay absorbed in the stirring memories of the distant past, which holy scenes had called up and invested with a charm of reality—Mount Zion, —Moriah crowned of yore with a halo of the Shekinah's glory,—Gethsemane, bedewed with the tears and stained by the bloody sweat of the Son of Man, —Olivet, where Jesus so often taught and prayed,—they were all there, each with its wonderous story written as if in letters of light. Longing for the morning, I once and again rose from my bed and threw open the lattice; the stars hung out like diamond lamps from the black vault of heaven, shining with a sparkling luster unknown in our hazy west and revealing in dim outline the walls and towers of the holy city sleeping peacefully away below.

I was specially favored during my first visit to Jerusalem. An old friend had rented a little tower high up on the western side of Olivet,—commanding a noble view of the holy city and surrounding country, from Bethlehem to Mizpeh. It was one of these square turrets which in recent, as in ancient times, proprietors sometimes built in their vineyards as residences for keepers and temporary store houses for fruit. (Isa. 5: 2.) Here I took up my quarters, and from the open window or the terraced roof at all hours, day and night, I gazed on the wondrous landscape.

During the soft ruddy morning twilight,—at the full blaze of noon-day,—in the dead stillness of the night, when the moon shed her silver rays on the white walls and roofs of the city, my eyes were upon it,—never wearying, never satisfied, but ever detecting some new beauty in tint or form, some fresh spot of sacred interest, or historic renown. While I live, I can never forget that view of Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives.

Morning dawned, and with my kind host, to whom every spot in and around Jerusalem was familiar, I ascended to the terraced roof. Behind Olivet, in the east, the sky was all aglow with red light, which shot slanting across the hill tops and projecting cliffs, and upon the walls and prominent buildings of the city, throwing them up in bold relief from the deeply shaded glens. No time could have been more opportune, no spot better fitted for seeing and studying the general topography of the holy city.

The whole site was before us, distinct and full, like a vast and beautiful embossed picture. At our feet along the base of Olivet, was the Kedron, a deep and narrow glen coming down from an undulating plateau on the right, and disappearing around the shoulder of the hill on the left; its banks terraced, and dotted here and there with little groves, and single olive trees. Directly opposite to us was Mount Moriah, its bare sides rising precipitously from the bottom of the Kedron to a height of some two hundred feet. On its summit is a rectangular platform, about thirty acres in extent, and taking up fully one half of the eastern side of the city. It is encompassed and supported by a massive wall, in some places nearly eighty feet high. This platform constitutes by far the most striking feature of the city. It is unique; its history too, is wonderful. It has been a holy place for more than thirty centuries. Its cyclopean walls were founded by Solomon. Upon it stood the temple, in whose shrine the glory of the Lord so often appeared, and in whose courts the Son of God so often taught,—and when I stood that morning on the brow of Olivet, and looked down upon the city crowning those battlemented heights, encircled by those deep and dark ravines, I involuntarily exclaimed, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, the city of the Great King." (Ps. 48 : 2.) And as I gazed the red rays of the setting sun shed a halo round the top of the castle of David; then they tipped with gold each tapering minaret, and gilded each dome of mosque and church; and at length bathed in one flood of ruddy light the terraced roofs of the city, and the grass and foliage, the cupolas, pavements, and colossal walls of the harem. No human being could be disappointed who first saw Jerusalem from Olivet.—Giant Cities of Bashan.

CHINA IN OCTOBER.

Our chapels in China are chiefly Chinese houses or shops, which are fitted up to accommodate a number of listeners who are eager to learn the way of life. Every one of these structures has its regular audience-room, sleeping apartments and kitchen, and these are always and everywhere united. The Chinese have a general plan upon which they build all their shops (stores). The length is usually twice or three times the width, so that it can be easily divided into chapel, bedroom and kitchen. This one into which we entered was about four times the width, and in addition to the three regular departments had also a place for drying clothes. It was in the afternoon as we entered this welcome retreat, and we were quite ready for our dinners which our Chinese friend quickly cooked for us; but as we sat down to our meals, not a knife, fork or spoon was to be seen, but a pair of fal-tsz (chop-sticks) lay beside our bowls of rice. We looked at them a little anxiously, fearing lest we should not be able to satisfy our hunger, unless we adopted the primitive method of the Hawaiians, to eat with our fingers. Carefully we took them up in our hands, still more carefully we placed them between the thumb and the forefinger of the right hand. Then we commenced to open and close them till we were able to pick up our rice and fish without losing them on our way to our mouths. It requires a pure Chinaman to eat rice as a Chinaman does, for he does not pick it up and gently put it in his mouth, but he crowds it in as fast as he can, making anything but a pleasant sound while he is doing it.

We are glad to rest here for a few hours and spend the night in this quaint but secure house, and though our bed consists of nothing more than a few hard boards covered with a mat, still we are very grateful that God has given us even this poor shelter. One needs to be hardened to this sort of life before he can appreciate it, and sleep as soundly as upon our own hair mattresses. The hours of the night wear slowly away, and it is past twelve ere slumber comes to our eyelids. The morning dawns and we hastily prepare ourselves for the day's journey. The chair-bearers are all away, and so we are compelled to make the journey on foot. Twelve miles is not a very long journey, still it seems to us quite an undertaking, for it is still in the warm season, and we are not altogether in the best time. But we set out to accomplish the task. Slowly we pass through waving fields of rice, along the banks of murmuring streams, resting now and then under the shadow of some tree. Our road is not a highway, but simply a path which leads us on our way. Now and then we meet fellow travelers, who are surprised to see two white men in their country. The women turn their heads to one side and allow us to pass without looking at us, though some of them do try to catch a glimpse of us when our eyes are turned away from them. Here it is our privilege to see what large crops of rice are produced by irrigation. There are no fences to obstruct our view, so that we can even note the small paths that separate the ricebeds of the different owners from each other. How small are some of them! No need of a reaper here, for it could scarcely turn around on some of these plots of ground owned by a single man. The grain, as it is growing, appears very much like our American oats, though the rice kernel is in the shape of the barley corn. As far as we can see, reaching even to the distant ranges of mountains, our eyes behold these fields of rice. It is a lovely scene, and gives us a different idea of China than we had before. Everything seems to be teeming with the verdure of our Californian spring, and yet here it is the middle of October. How homelike everything appears. There is nothing of the desert here; even the mountains have a gentle and soft appearance, and the number of villages surrounded with so many clusters of trees, remind us of the villages scattered along the Rhine. There seems to be no end to these hamlets, but on every side a short distance from each other they may be seen. Certainly this part of China has no solitary appearance, but it teems with verdure and human life.

A few new and interesting sights are seen as we wend our way along the narrow path, and one of these is a woman dressed in all the paraphernalia of Chinese ornaments. She is loaded with trinkets of all sorts from head to foot. Upon her head she wears a small head gear with little tiny bells, in her ears are the usual ear-rings, while around her neck hangs a large metal chain. In wonder and amazement we stop and look at this country queen. "What is she?" and "where is she going?" are questions which rise simultaneously to our lips, when we are told that she is going home to see her mother from whom she has been separated for some months on account of her recent marriage.

But we are nearing a market village where we have opened a chapel, and where for some months Mr. Jones has preached on market days, and conducted a regular evening Bible-class. We will pass over the numberless other incidents that occurred on the way, such as crossing ferries, village boys calling after us all manner of names, and only say that this little market town with its chapel of two rooms was a very welcome sight to two tired and foot-sore travelers, and although no palace awaited us, still I doubt whether anything could have caused us greater joy than this inviting but comparatively bare dwelling.—Missionary Letter in the Pacific.

Scandal, when it has truth in it, is like a grease-spot on new cloth; but when there is no truth in it, it is like a splash of mud, which will come off easily when dry.

The true motives of our actions, like the real pipes of an organ, are often concealed; while the gilded and hollow pretext is pompously placed in front of the show.

Bad books are worse than bad words. Like evil deeds, they mould the thought and will of future generations.

THE TABERNACLE. Read Exod. 40.

For we know, that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. 2 Cor. 5:1.

1. What was the tabernacle? Exod. 39: 32–43.
2. How long did the ark of the covenant remain in the tabernacle? 1 Kings 8: 2–11; Acts 7: 44–47.
3. Why are our earthly bodies compared to the tabernacle? Num. 1: 51; 2 Pet. 1: 13, 14.
4. What glorious temple is prepared for the believer when his earthly tabernacle is taken down? Phil. 3: 21.

MR. LINCOLN AND THE LITTLE BOY.

Ex-Gov. Rice tells this story of Lincoln: On an occasion (while he was in Congress) when he and Senator Wilson found it neeessary to visit the President on business, he says:

"We were obliged to wait some time in the ante-room before we could be received; and, when at length the door was opened to us, a small lad, perhaps ten or twelve years old, who had been waiting for admission several days without success, slipped in between us, and approached the President in advance.

"The latter gave the senator and myself a cordial but brief salutation, and turning immediately to the lad, said, 'And who is the little boy?'

"During their conference the senator and myself were apparently forgotten. The boy soon told his story, which was in substanee that he had come to Washington seeking employment as a page in the House of Representatives, and he wished the President to give him such an appointment. To this the President replied that such appointments were not at his disposal, and that application must be made to the doorkeeper of the house at the Capitol.

"'But, sir,' said the lad, still undaunted, 'I am a good boy, and have a letter from my mother, and one from the supervisor of my town, and one from my Sunday-school teacher. They all told me that I could earn enough in one session of Congress to keep my mother and the rest of us comfortable all the remainder of the year.'

"The President took the lad's papers, and ran his eyes over them with that penetrating and absorbent look so familiar to all who knew him, and then took a pen and wrote upon the back of one of them, 'If Capt. Goodnow can give a place to this good little boy, I shall be gratified,' and signed it, 'A. Lincoln.'

"The boy's face became radiant with hope, and he alked out of the room with a step as light as though all ne angels were whispering their congratulations.

"Only after the lad had gone did the President seem to ealize that a senator and another person had been for ome time waiting to see him.

"Think for a moment of the President of a great na-ion, and that nation engaged in one of the most terrible ars waged against men, himself worn down with anx-ety and labor, subjected to the alternations of success nd defeat, racked by complaints of the envious, the dis-oyal, and the unreasonable, pressed to the decision of rave questions of public policy, and encumbered by the umberless and nameless incidents of civil and martial esponsibility, yet able so far to forget them all as to ive himself up for the time being to the errand of a lit-e boy, who had braved an interview uninvited, and of hom he knew nothing, but that he had a story to tell of is mother, and of his ambition to serve her."

BE A GOOD READER.

There is one accomplishment in particular which I ould earnestly recommend to you: Cultivate assiduously ne ability to read well. I stop to particularize this, be-ause it is so very much neglected, and because it is so legant, charming and lady-like an accomplishment. Where one person is really interested in music, twenty re pleased by good reading. Where one person is cap-ble of becoming a good musician, twenty may become ood readers. Where there is one occasion for the exer-ise of musical talent, there are twenty for that of good eading. The culture of the voice necessary for reading ell, gives a delightful charm to the same voice in con-ersation. Good reading is the natural exponent and ehicle of all good things. It is the most effective of all ommentaries upon the works of genius. It seems to ring dead authors to life again, and makes us sit down miliarly with the great and good of all ages. Did you ver notice what life and power the Holy Scripture has hen well read? Have you ever heard of the wonderful ffects produced by Elizabeth Fry on the prisoners of ewgate by simply reading to them the parable of the rodigal Son? Princes and peers of the realm, it is said, ounted it a privilege to stand in the dismal corridors mong felons and murderers merely to share with them ne privilege of witnessing the marvellous pathos, which enius, taste and culture could infuse into that simple ory. What a fascination there is in really good read-ng! What a power it gives one! In the hospital in the hamber of the invalid, in the nursery, in the domestic, n the social circle, among chosen friends and compan-ons, how it enables you to minister to the amusement, ne comfort, the pleasure of dear ones, as no other art or ccomplishment can. No instrument of man's devising an reach the heart as does that most wonderful instru-ent, the human voice. It is God's special gift and en-owment to his chosen creatures. Fold it not away in a apkin. If you would double the value of all your ther acquisitions, if you would add immeasurably to our own enjoyment and to your power of promoting ne enjoyment of others, cultivate with incessant care is Divine gift. No music below the skies is equal to nat of pure silvery speech from the lips of a man or oman of high culture.—Prof. John. S. Hart.

A RIDDLE.

The following compound riddle was composed by the Bishop of Clifford:

1. I have a box.
2. This box has two lids.
3. It also has two caps.
4. It contains two musical instruments.
5. It has also in it two established measures.
6. It contains a great number of articles a carpenter ould not dispense with.
7. This box always has about it two good fish.
8. Also a great many of smaller size.
9. In it you will find lofty trees.
10. Also some gaudy flowers.
11. The fruit of an indigenous tree.
12. Two gentle little animals are found in it.
13. Also a number of smaller and less tame animals.
14. A fine stag is found within it.
15. A great many small whips without handles.
16. It boasts of two halls or places of worship.
17. Some weapons of warfare are always found in this ox.
18. And in it you can find a number of weather-cocks.
19. The steps of a hotel are also found in it.
20. The House of Commons resounds with two of my ssential articles when on the eve of a decision.
21. In the box you can find two scholars.
22. And then find ten Spanish grandees to wait upon hem.

All pronounce me a wonderful piece of mechanism, ut very few have remembered the strange things that nake up my whole.

ANSWER.

1. The box is the human body.
2. Eyelids.
3. Knee-caps.
4. Drums.
5. Feet.
6. Nails.
7. Soles.
8. Muscles.
9. Palms.
10. Tulips (two lips).
11. Apples (of the eyes).
12. Calves.
13. Hares.
14. Hart.
15. Lashes.
16. Temples.
17. Arms.
18. Vanes.
19. Insteps.
20. Ayes and noes.
21. Pupils.
22. Tendons.

An Ingenious Expedient.—The telegraph wires in London are not all above ground, as is the case here, but belong to the underground system. The main wires are laid through the big tunnels, in which are the gas and sewer pipes. These tunnels are big enough for a man to walk through easily. The branch pipes, containing the side wires, running off from the main line for several miles, are much smaller, of course; and the workman must be very careful not to lose the connections between the larger and smaller wires. Not long ago, however, some men who were repairing one of these lateral wires failed to attach to it a leading line by which the wire could be drawn back into its place. The blunder seemed to involve great loss, for it looked as though the whole side pipe would have to be dug up to replace the wire. In this dilemma, a remarkable step was taken. A rat was caught, and around him was tied one end of a very fine steel wire. He was placed in the pipe, but, after running a few yards, he stopped. Then came another curious step. A ferret was put in after the rat. As soon as the rat heard the ferret coming behind it, the fine wire began to play out. It was feared that the rat would show fight, but it did not; and the complete circuit was made by both rat and ferret. When the rat came out at the other end of the pipe it was caught, and by means of the fine wire the telegraph wire was drawn through. So the rat saved the telegraph company thousands of dollars.

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT LIQUOR DOES.

The Herald of the 23d inst. contained an article entitled, "What Prohibition Would Do," setting forth the material loss to the various trades and pursuits engaged in the liquor business if prohibition should be adopted and enforced. The conclusion is reached that the country would lose over $200,000,000 of property. The following, entitled "The Drink Bill," is a complete reply:

According to the statistics of the liquor men themselves there were consumed in the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, the enormous aggregate of 79,616,601 gallons of distilled liquors and 18,995,616 barrels of fermented liquors. Allowing that 5,000,000 gallons of the spirituous liquors were used for medical and mechanical purposes (there were but 4,269,978 gallons thus used the year before) and we have left 74,616,601 gallons of spirituous liquors used for drinking purposes, and, of course, the entire amount of fermented liquors. Reducing this to saloon-keepers' estimate, one-half a gill of distilled and one-third of a pint of fermented liquors per drink, and placing the cost to the drinker at 10 cents per glass for the former and 5 cents for the latter, and we have $478,546,246.40 spent for spirituous and $636,252,798.53 for malt liquors the last year, making a total of $1,114,799,044.93 as the nation's drink bill for a single year.

Only save by prohibition this vast sum spent for liquor, and fully as much more required to take care of the criminal and pauper, idiot and insane, whose condition may be traced directly or indirectly to alcohol, and the nation can well afford to pay the two hundred millions of dollars swept away by prohibition and have about twelve or fifteen hundred millions of dollars left. But the government is under no obligation to do anything of the kind. Suppose, under the stimulus of a high tariff, millions of capital go into large factories that prosper for years. Suppose, by the will of the majority, a new administration comes into power which adopts free trade. The effect is disastrous. These mills are idle, and the owners ruined. Whose fault is it? They took the chances of the will of the majority changing the administration. So did the liquor men when they invested their money in a business destructive of the welfare of society at large, and must take the consequences if the omnipotent people so decide by ballot. These liquor men have had notice—long and faithful warning—that the people will not always submit to the enormous waste and drain on their resources resulting from the traffic. The change must necessarily be more or less gradual, but is as sure to come as the seasons roll round.—Letter to Chicago Herald.

THE WAIL OF THE DISTILLER.

A gentleman who attended the recent meeting of the National Brewers' and Distillers' Association says that all hope of avoiding the payment of the excise duty by shipping the whisky abroad has been abandoned, as the Washington Government will not permit such exportation to be treated as bona fide. The attempt to evade the excise has cost the National Association an immense sum of money. Over $60,000 were spent in an effort to induce the Canadian Government to yield to the distillers' terms, but with very poor success. This gentleman states that while the Canadian Parliament was sitting last year agents were sent by the Distillers' Association to Ottawa to ask for permission to send whisky into Canada in bond for re-exportation. These agents secured the influence of a number of members of Parliament and others who professed to have influence with the administration. Counsel were retained to draw up memorials, etc., and others were engaged to do nothing. Stock was taken in a number of enterprises, including a large warehouse company, in which it was presumed the whisky would be stored. The influence of several newspapers supporting the Government was secured, but while the manager of one paper pretended to be doing his utmost to induce the Government to yield to the demands, his journal actually published an article endorsing the Government's refusal. On being remonstrated with by the agent of the distillers, the manager seemed greatly annoyed, and threatened to dismiss his editor. Then the association was requested to furnish funds to enable the Government party to carry some by-elections, but, says the distiller referred to, "After bleeding us in every possible way the Canadians did nothing for us. The Cabinet was divided on the question, and at last apologized for their refusal by pleading fear of the temperance sentiment." The payment of the large sums laid out in attempts to get whisky into Canada caused an animated discussion in the executive committee of the association, the Canadians being denounced as frauds and the agents of the association as silly dudes. The investments made by the association in newspapers and warehouses in Canada will, no doubt, be abandoned, as no return is ever expected from them.—Buffalo paper.

IT DON'T PAY.

It don't pay to hang one citizen because another citizen sells him liquor.

It don't pay to have one citizen in the county jail because another citizen sells him liquor.

It don't pay to have one citizen in the lunatic asylum because another citizen sold him liquor.

It don't pay to have fifty workmen ragged, to have one saloon-keeper dressed in broadcloth, and flush with money.

It don't pay to have ten smart, active, intelligent boys transformed into thieves to enable one man to lead an easy life by selling them liquor.

It don't pay to have fifty working men and their families live on bone soup and half rations, in order that one saloon-keeper may flourish on roast turkey and champagne.

It don't pay to have one thousand homes blasted, ruined, defiled and turned into a hell of discord and misery, in order that one wholesale liquor dealer may amass a large fortune.

It don't pay to give one man, for $15 a quarter, a license to sell liquor, and then spend $5,000 on a trial on another man for buying that liquor and committing murder under its influences.—Christian Secretary.

TEMPERATE TEACHERS.

In an excursion train to Madison, recently, there were three hundred and sixty-six persons, nearly every one teachers, of whom one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and fifty were men. Of these it was learned that but six used tobacco in any form. It seemed to me a remarkable though welcome fact, which should be known in these days of smoking and chewing. The use of tobacco has a very injurious effect with youth– physically in retarding growth, mentally in loss of memory, and morally it seems especially baneful, causing untruthfulness and kindred vices, taking away will-power. I hope stringent laws against its use by youth will soon be enacted here, as in Germany and France.—Nath'l N. Allen, in Journal of Education.

There are 11,000 saloons in Berlin. The Gazette of Cologne says that 10,000 persons die of delirium tremens every year in Germany.

A principal of one of the New York public schools, complains to a prohibition association that teachers dare not talk about temperance in school because the trustees are elected by the rum interest and are controlled by it.

The Chepeyan Indians would not touch intoxicating liquor; and at one time the Crows would not allow it to be brought into their territory. They call it "fool's-water." If they could have held out against civilization!

The ease with which temperance law may be enforced, when its enforcement is in the hands of earnest men, is shown by the fact that six young men of Prince Edward's Island have banished every saloon from one county of 40,000 inhabitants. In a town in this county not a single arrest for drunkenness has been made in six months, and the docket of the last circuit court did not contain a single criminal case.

The New York Assembly has passed the bill in the interest of temperance, authorizing a provision to be made by the proper local school authorities for instructing all pupils in all schools supported by public money or under State control in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system. No certificate shall be granted to any person to teach in the public schools of the State of New York after the first day of January, 1885, who has not passed a satisfactory examination in physiology, and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system.

The "fruit of the vine" in Palestine is not always the harmful drink which so often fills the sacramental cup of to day. The Rev. Chalil Jamal, a native missionary in Salt, a city supposed to be one of the three cities of refuge east of the Jordan, writes to an English missionary periodical that in that locality there are upwards of 2,500 vineyards, and yet intoxicating wine is not known to the natives. The grapes that are not consumed fresh are either made into raisins or pressed, and the juice made into dibs (a kind of honey) and milban (a kind of sweetmeat) which are stored up for winter use. They are used also to make the madcoca of raisins, which is composed of crushed and mashed raisins made into a good sized lump, which also is stored against the winter. Salt is famous for its grapes, which are very fine indeed, and their deliciousness and beauty are known only to those who have seen and tasted them.—Signal.

forth upon them again, and by the dint of putting the question fairly, squarely and honestly before them, in connection with incessant prayer (made by those without) that their hearts might be touched, was the key obtained. But not then until it had been packed off by a good sister to prevent it falling into our hands. Thank the Lord, truth eventually prevailed, and we got into the fort. The time, also, for the attack is at hand. We concluded we would try a charge from the battery of Love first. This we found so affected their ranks that dismay and demoralization were evidently manifested from every quarter. Hence we concluded we would give them Love by day and Love by night, and Love by night and Love by day, with just enough of Glass thrown in to make the charge perfectly clear and transparent. Thus the attack was kept up for three days and four nights, resulting, as it could not well otherwise, in the complete discomfiture and rout of the foe; as evidenced from the following facts, ascertained as soon as the din and smoke of the battle had sufficiently passed away to take in a view of the situation; viz.: two Masons, one of eighteen degrees and another of three degrees, were found slain upon the scene of carnage. Odd-fellows were consumed in like manner, while the numerous train of minor secret orders hurried to their hiding-places just as do the owl and bat at the approach of the rising sun.

This may appear like an overdrawn picture. Nay, verily, the facts in the case will fully substantiate every particular of the above. Southwest Missouri never saw the like. Effects outside the immediate scene were something like the following: On one occasion, while the battle was waxing hotter and hotter, a stalwart (physically) Mason, a professed Christian, too, exclaimed, "He," referring to Bro. Love, "might be mobbed"; and then, with opened knife in hand, further said, "I would as lief cut his throat with that as not"; exhibiting the knife. Another Mason (a non-professor), whose attention was called to what I have just related, responded by saying, "Well, if he is a good Mason he can do it." Upon being expostulated with, how he could do so, and he professing to be a Christian at the same time, he repeated, "If he is a GOOD Mason he can do so." "But mark," said he, "I don't say that is Christianity."

Another evidence of the great work. A worthy young man was given, a short time before the meeting, some Anti-masonic literature. He was so incensed thereat that before arriving home he threw it to the ground, and would not read it farther than to learn what it was. Through the earnest persuasion, however, of a highly esteemed friend, this same young man was induced to attend the last two evenings of our meeting; and such was the effect of truth upon his mind that within less than three days thereafter he is heard pleading with his brother (in the flesh) to quit the lodge. Thus it is I might go on and instance demonstration after demonstration of the mighty power and force of truth.

Since the character of my letter is "As news from a distant land," I humbly trust that it will be forthcoming in due season not only in the columns of the Cynosure, but also in the American Wesleyan, Telescope and American. This they will please accept as an invitation to copy. Bro. Love, I am told, is threatened with a suspension from some noted locust trees, that occupy our court-house yard, in case he should ever presume to address the citizens of Greenfield as he has those of Dadeville. Yours in reform, J. W. THOMPSON.

A WEEK'S EXPERIENCE IN NEW YORK.

DALE, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Taking the train at Dale Friday morning, Oct. 3, I soon reached Hornelsville, a city of some 10,000 inhabitants. I noticed that almost the entire street next to the depot had been given over to the demon of strong drink. Another train took me on to Rathboneville, where I was met by Bro. Philo Millard, and conveyed to Woodhull, seven miles distant. Arrangements had been made for me to speak in the Baptist churches of Woodhull and E. Troupsburgh, Monday and Tuesday evenings. Bro. Millard and myself went to Hedgesville, saw several friends and made arrangements for a meeting there on Wednesday evening.

After our return, just at dark, the Baptist minister called and said that some of the brethren thought on the whole it would not be wise to have a lecture in the church, as there were other places where meetings could be held. Bro. Millard assured him that the trustees had all given their consent. Rev. Mr. M. replied that in the Baptist church it was customary for the brethren to rule. We saw the situation at once—brother Masons in the church, of course. It was Saturday night. How should we arrange for a meeting on Monday evening? Finally, as the Reverend gentleman wanted to do all that he could to help us along he consented to see the trustee of the town hall, secure it if possible, and arrange notices.

On Monday Bro. M. went with me to the old cemetery, where among others we found a stone erected to the memory of his father who died in his 91st year. Some of the brethren, seeing that I wore a St. John and Daniel badge, were afraid that we might talk on that subject and remarked that such politics did not take well in that community. There had been a prohibition lecture a little before, and it created quite a disturbance.

Evening came, and at 7: 30 the hall was full and many were standing up. Good attention on the whole was given, and the usual Masonic arguments were given by the "boys" at the close.—"Ride him on a rail", "mob him", rapping on the fence, etc.

Tuesday we went to E. Troupsburgh, where in the evening we met a smaller but more intelligent audience in the Baptist church. Several expressed a desire to hear us again in the future. Sold some books and on the whole had a pleasant time.

Wednesday it rained; notwithstanding we went to the appointment at Hedgesville, but as the night was very dark and rainy the lecture was adjourned until Saturday evening.

Thursday we drove out to Borden, south-west of Woodhull, and secured the church for Friday evening.

Friday afternoon I started on foot for Borden, notifying everyone I saw of the meeting. As I came into the town the Republicans were having a pole-raising in honor of a Mr. Baker, who was on a stand begging them to send him to Congress. There were some one hundred or more men, women and children, either playing, racing horses, or listening to the sweet words that fell from the speaker's lips. At the close of his speech I asked if I could give a notice Consent being given, I announced a speech in the Presbyterian church that evening on prohibition.

At 7: 30 I was happily surprised to find the house well filled with some two or three hundred Democrats, Republicans, Greenbackers, etc., etc. The subject was new to me, but the Lord helped me wonderfully. I spoke for about two hours with very few interruptions. Occasionally a Republican or Democrat felt it his duty to speak for his cause. At the close we presented the Cynosure to them. A young man by the name of Rufus Brown, came forward, shook hands, said he was with me in my work, and at the same time he laid twenty-five cents on the table, saying, "I want that paper." Immediately his father, Joseph Brown, came to the front, took up the money and in a very harsh way informed his son that he would get plenty of papers for him to read. Another man said he belonged to the "United Order of Ancients", (or some such society) and wanted to know what I was going to do with them. I told him it was pretty hard to tell, but I was going home. "Well, won't you go home with me?" he said. On our way home I found that the man's name was Morgan, a wealthy farmer, an easy-going Christian, and an agreeable conversationalist. He had horses from Mr. Dunham's, Wayne, Ill., was very kind to me, showed me his farm, stock, etc., and was very fond of quoting how the thief on the cross was saved, and that other passage of Scripture: "Go thou and do likewise." He was a prohibitionist. Yes! But he did not want to let the naughty Democrats into power.

Saturday morning I made my way back to Woodhull, getting a few trial subscribers on the way. Passing Woodhull I stopped on the large bluff about two and one half miles above Hedgesville. The sun was just setting in the west. To the north some twelve miles a like bluff towered above its fellows. To the north-east we see the headwaters of Seneca Lake, bordered with all the beauties of nature. To the north-west, Jasper's church spires may be seen. Troupsburgh in Pennsylvania, occupies a south-west station. Looking south-east for twenty miles we see Tuscarora, S. Addison and Corning. To the south the Pennsylvania woods, with their various beautiful colored foliage stand out in bold relief. As we behold these beauties, who would not exclaim, how blind the infidel!

Meeting time comes. The house is filled, good attention given, and a good collection at the close.

Sabbath is a beautiful day. In the morning we go to hear Elder Gates, a young man of remarkable abilities, preach. In the afternoon at 2: 30 I addressed a good audience in the Methodist church, on the Religion of Masonry. Praise the Lord that he helped me to tell men the truth. On Monday evening I spoke again to a full house; subject, Masonic claims. As I left the town, Elder Gates said that I had made a great many friends for the cause in Hedgesville. More anon W. B. STODDARD.

THE CHURCHES.

—The United Presbyterian Congregation of Wooster, at a congregational meeting held lately, elected as their pastor, Rev. W. G. Moorehead, D. D., of the Third U. P. church of Xenia, and professor in the Theological Seminary there. Dr. Moorehead is one of the ablest men in the denomination, and the Wooster people hope that he will be induced to settle among them as a worthy successor of the lamented David L. Wallace.

—Mr. Moody preached to large meetings in Brooklyn on Sabbath, Oct. 12th, and concluded with a request for $20,000 to complete the fund necessary for the erection of a suitable Y. M. C. A. building in the third city of the United States.

—The pastors of the evangelical churches of Portland, Me., have unanimously voted to extend an invitation to Moody and Sankey to conduct a series of meetings there; also the pastors of Troy, N. Y., have invited Mr. Moody to labor for two weeks in that city.

—Ten thousand persons gathered in the Northampton (Mass.) camp-grounds on the 8th inst. to celebrate the centennial of the independence of American Methodism.

—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church for the Northwest assembled at Jacksonville, Ill., Oct. 8th, with 200 delegates present, the president, Mrs. Isaac Hitt, of Evanston, delivering the address.

—The Rev. George C. Needham, who will be remembered as an evangelist laboring in New York and Brooklyn in the days of Moody and Sankey's great campaign, and who was later the esteemed pastor of the Moody church in Chicago, has become pastor of the Delaware Avenue Baptist church, Wilmington, Delaware.

—The United Presbyterian Synod of Illinois met in Rock Prairie, Wis., on the evening of October 2d, with an attendance of about thirty. Dr. Meloy of Chicago, the retiring moderator, preached an eloquent sermon. Rev. T. G. Morrow of Paxton, Ill., was unanimously elected moderator.

—Rev. James Barnett, D. D., died in Emporia, Kansas, Oct. 2d. He has been a prominent figure in the United Presbyterian church for many years. He was appointed and ordained as a missionary to Palestine in July 1844. He labored as a missionary in Damascus, Syria, from 1856 to 1854, when he and Rev. Thomas McCague went to Egypt and founded the mission that has since been so prosperous there. In 1875 he returned from the foreign and has since been laboring in the home field.

—The Danish Lutherans of America, who have hitherto belonged to the Norwegian Danish Conference, have recently decided, at a meeting held in Omaha, Neb., to constitute a synodical body for themselves.

—We are glad to announce, says the Congregationalist, that the appeal of the American Missionary Association has been responded to so promptly and generously that the debt, which two months since threatened to reach $50,000, has been reduced to $13,785.86. This is a source of sincere gratification, and we venture to suggest to the many friends of this society that at the coming annual meeting at Salem, or before, this comparatively small remainder be wiped out. The next year's work should not be hindered by a single dollar of indebtedness. The total receipts the last year have been $287,594. The donations were $223,034, against $186,200 the previous year; but the legacies fell off from $126,366 for 1883, to $64,559 for 1884. It is a matter for congratulation that the gifts from the living have made such a decided gain.

—The growth of the Scandinavian Lutheran church in the great Northwest is simply marvellous. In 1850, in that territory, there were no more than ten Scandinavian pastors—namely, two Swedes and eight Norwegians. Now, only one generation later, we find there no less than 570 Scandinavian pastors, over 1,600 congregations, with a communicant membership of about 170,000. And when we remember that nearly all these people were immigrants, poor in this world's goods, and that but very little assistance, financially or otherwise, was received from mission societies or other sources, this growth is all the more astonishing. In educational work and the publication of periodicals the Scandinavians are fully awake to the demands of the hour; the institutions at Rock Island, Ill., and elsewhere, are enjoying a prosperous career, and their press is doing good work.

—A correspondent writes to the New York Observer that "the little church of Centre, N. C., is deeply stirred. Three weeks ago last Sunday, the minister preached on the revival at Antioch, and the exhortation which Barnabas gave the young converts to 'cleave to the Lord;' and the work has been going on ever since. The church is crowded almost every night, and the interest is so deep that the meetings are often continued till after midnight."

—In the open air services and other special efforts in England, many leading ecclesiastics are taking an active part. One of our contributors, some months ago, gave an account of an address in a mission hall, by the Bishop of Carlisle. One of the English papers speaks of a recent open-air service on Douglas Head, Isle of Man, at which the bishop of the diocese delivered an address. Some six thousand persons were present.

—The organ of the McAll Mission in Marseilles says that the members of the mission in that city were at their posts during the height of the cholera, and that none of the meetings have been given up. The plague is now abating, and it is satisfactory to hear that the devotion of the Sisters of Charity, of whom we have heard so much in the newspapers, has not been singular. No panic seized any of the Protestant missionaries, who continued to do their duty, probably all the more earnestly that eternity seemed so near.

Illustrated Historical WONDER-BOOK.

A SURPRISE even for the old steadfast friends of THE LITERARY REVOLUTION, and a delightful "chunk" of literary "dynamite" to fright the foes of choice books for the millions. WHAT IS IT? It is a beautifully ILLUSTRATED and RICHLY BOUND imperial octavo volume of 1,080 pages, containing, UNABRIDGED, the following CELEBRATED WORKS:

GREEN'S Larger HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE.
HARPER & BRO'S cheapest edition of this work is $10.00.

CARLYLE'S HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION.
HARPER'S cheapest edition of this is $2.50.

CREASY'S Fifteen DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD.
HARPER'S cheapest edition of Creasy costs $1.00.

SCHILLER'S HISTORY of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR.
HARPER'S cheapest edition costs $1.00.

All of the above in one volume complete, for $2.50; by mail, 50 cents extra.

This volume is called a "WONDER-BOOK" in no trifling sense—the quality of the literature is far from being light or trifling—instead, it is of the very BEST historical literature of the world, and as being "the cheapest well-made volume of history ever published," it excites the "wonder" and admiration of the people who see it.

VOX POPULI.---PRESS OPINIONS.

"Your 'Historical Wonder-Book' IS a wonder—a wonder how an imperial octavo volume of over 1,000 pages, with many illustrations, clear type, fine paper, handsomely bound, containing four standard historical works of great value, can be sold for $2.50."—BENSON J. LOSSING, LL.D., the celebrated historian.

"It is indeed a wonder to everyone who sees it, how this great book could be offered for $2.50."—Golden Rule, Boston. Mass.

"Each of these works is too well known to require description. Either of them is cheap at $2.50. The print, the engravings, the paper, and the index are excellent."—Globe, Boston, Mass.

"Mr. Alden is doing a wonderful work in putting valuable literature in the hands of the people at low prices."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va.

"This is indeed a wonder-book, in the amount and valuable quality of its contents. The wonder is how such a book, which is a library in itself, can be sold at such a price."—Methodist Recorder, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"It is a perfect magazine of the richest standard literature. It is one of the triumphs of Mr. Alden's 'Literary Revolution.'"—Journal, Indianapolis, Ind.

"A package of historical works of higher value than these could hardly be gotten together. Every one of them will remain a standard for generations to come."—Interior, Chicago, Ill.

"It is the most beautiful and meritorious book for the price which I ever saw."—Jos. C. Shattuck, Supt. Public Instruction, Denver, Colo.

"It is no wonder that the publisher calls it a 'Wonder-Book.' The scenes and incidents described in these pages are more wonderful than anything in the Arabian Nights or the Fairy Tales of Andersen or Grimm."—National Baptist, Philadelphia, Pa.

"It is truly a marvel of skill and a triumph of modern mechanical art that such a noble volume can be furnished at so small a cost. Whether we admire its large proportions, beautiful binding, fair page, excellent paper, numerous and striking illustrations, numbering nearly 100—all are first-class."—Christian Cynosure, Chicago, Ill.

"A wonder-book in more senses than one. The idea of putting a work like this at only $2.50 per copy, seems preposterous; and yet there is wisdom in it, for everybody will want it, and it will thus be the means of advertising and introducing the numerous other valuable books which the publisher is putting forward."—Christian at Work, New York City.

A GREAT OFFER. 25 CENTS for this slip. Cut out and return this slip with your remittance, for the above book, within ten days from your receipt of this paper, and you will be allowed for it 25 cents toward the advertised price—this to quickly and widely introduce the work. AGENTS WANTED. Terms to good Agents which will be thought almost fabulous. The key to the apparent mystery of the low price lies in the fact that this work is but one of a vast quantity described in the 100-page LITERARY REVOLUTION catalogue, which will be sent free, on application to

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

LUCILE VERNON.

cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

FARM NOTES.

HINTS TO FARMERS.

A cow that produces only half a pound of butter per day will cost as much for its keeping as one that produces two pounds. This indifference in a herd of fifteen or twenty cows is sufficiently large to make all the difference to a farmer's family between poverty and wealth.—Rural Canadian.

An experienced sheep-raiser says that a good way to control a flock of sheep is to take a ewe lamb to the house and make a pet of it. Use nothing but kindness, and give it a name, teaching it to come at the call. When the lamb is grown, place it in the flock and you will need only to call that one sheep, when all the others will follow. As sheep follow their leader, the training of one is the training of all, and it is a saving of time and labor to do so.

The Pennsylvania dairies of the best class often use red earthenware pots, glazed inside, about eight inches deep and ten inches in diameter on the top, for setting the milk in cool running water. This plan is also common in the best dairies in Normandy, France, which are noted for fine butter. The milk is never heated excepting when very thick or "clouted" cream is desired for special purposes. It is wholly unnecessary in ordinary dairying.—Country Gentleman.

To remove lice from hen houses, and also from the fowls, the following method is recommended as one of the best that has been tried: Take flowers of sulphur five pounds, liquid carbolic acid one dram. Rub the acid in the sulphur thoroughly with a small paddle, and apply through the pluff and feathers of the hen with the hand, and it will not only prove an effectual application, but also a safe one, as it will not interfere with the hatching of eggs or endanger the life of the chicks.

MISTAKES IN FEEDING MILCH COWS.

Professor Arnold says that cows fed upon ensilage do not do as well as when fed on clover, wheat bran, oil cake, etc. Both in milk production and fat production we must get rid of the too prevalent idea that there is but one object to accomplish—the production of the most of either, as the case may be, wholly regardless of everything else. The health and vigor of our cows is the first thing to be sought. In a sense everything else is secondary. More properly speaking, that is the basis of successful milk production. We may force our cows to give a great deal more milk for the time being by feeding a one-sided food, perhaps; but it cannot last, and we may lose both milk and cow. Heavy milkers are peculiarly liable, too, to some of the most fatal diseases to which cows are liable. Mercedes, the champion butter cow of the world, died recently from milk fever, just the disease that such cows are particularly susceptible to. And if we increase this natural susceptibility by starving one part of the system we place our cow right in the very jaws of death and hold her there.

A milch cow should have an active circulation. There cannot too much blood pass through the udder. This cannot be secured unless the system is vigorous. It cannot be secured without exercise. A few days ago we saw it stated by a gentleman at a dairymen's convention that a cow did not need exercise; that all she had to do was to keep still, eat and give milk. We can hardly conceive how anybody with common experience could make such a mistake. Health is utterly out of the question without some exercise. It is not uncommon to find the lack of exercise to be the cause of disease among cattle. This is especially true of bulls, which do not, as a rule, have exercise enough. Whenever an animal is deprived of exercise we may look out for trouble sooner or later. Professor Arnold in a recent speech said with reference to the circulation that the best authorities agreed that the fat was immediately carried to the blood vessels and assumed the shape of cells, and from these again passed into the milk ducts and mammary glands, the latter being composed of an immense number of cavities or cells. These are surrounded by blood vessels, from which the proteine of the milk exudes and is absorbed into the interior of the cells through small tubes. These were the fat globules found in cream. These cells were analogous to rennet cells. We were, however, left in the dark with regard to the development; but the globules in the blood was the only rational theory, as the decomposition took place in the udder and where the separation was made.—Western Rural.

"SCRIP and STAFF."
BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an intsrval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.
A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world
Thurlow Weed's Great Letter
On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.
SEE WHY.
It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

IN THE COILS;
—OR—
The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)
"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)
"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)
"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.
"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.
"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)
"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret SOCIETIES. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative 20 cents each; per dozen $2 00

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each, per dozen, $1 25.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—Complete returns show the total vote last Tuesday, in Ohio, to have been 780,373, of which Prohibitionists and Greenbackers combined cast 12,447. The Prohibitionist vote increased 1,146 over last year, while the Greenback increase was but 762. The Republican majority over the Democratic ticket was 11,431 for Secretary of State to 17,000 for Congressmen, of whom 10 are Republicans and 11 Democrats. The Prohibition vote was about 6,000.

—Policeman Gorman died at Cincinnati Saturday from the effects of wounds received election day. His sister fell ill on hearing that her brother had been shot, became unconscious when she heard of his death, and expired in a few hours.

COUNTRY.

—The note extending an invitation to the United States to be represented at the Berlin conference to discuss matters in regard to the Congo country will be presented to President Arthur in a few days.

—President Riddle, Cashier Reiber, and T. J. Watson, an oil broker, were indicted Monday at Pittsburgh for conspiracy in wrecking the Penn Bank, and the two former were also indicted for embezzling $1,200,000. In the case of the New Brunswick (N. J.) National Bank, the United States Grand Jury made a presentment, averring that more than the surplus of the concern had been swallowed up before the end of June by the cashier's frauds and possible countenance of the President, both of whom it will be remembered committed suicide.

—James Collinan, charged with the murder of Herbert George Nichols, was found guilty in this city, and his punishment fixed at five years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. General disgust was manifested at the lightness of the sentence, and the jury severely reflected upon.

—While a Republican procession was being formed at LaCrosse, Wis., Thursday evening, F. A. Burton, President of the Blaine and Logan club, was shot dead by a rough. The criminal was at once arrested and hurried to the jail, where hundreds of men shortly afterwards gathered, determined upon lynching. After battering down the doors the culprit was brought out and strung to a tree, but the rope broke. Another was at once procured, and the lynching was completed.

—The town of Bannersville, Ga., was entirely destroyed by fire Friday, the loss being estimated at $400,000. Details are limited, as the telegraph offices are in ruins.

—The engine, baggage-car and first coach of a train on the Cincinnati and Eastern Narrow-gauge Railroad, plunged through a bridge near Batavia, Ohio, Friday evening, two persons being killed, and a number injured, a few of them fatally.

—Since July 9 a drought has prevailed in lower East Tennessee, North Georgia, and North Alabama, and all farming interests are seriously imperilled, and unless there is rain soon the result will be disastrous. Grazing lands are burned and creeks are dry. The Tennessee River at this point is within three inches of the lowest point known.

—Snow fell in New Hampshire Thursday morning to a depth of three or four inches.

—At Harrisburg, Pa., Thursday, Miss Lizzie Wallace stepped from the cars in front of a moving train. Harry Foster, a check clerk, rushed to the rescue, but both were cut in pieces.

—A double tenement house at Racine, Wis., was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning, caused by the explosion of a lamp, two men being fatally burned.

—Near Monongahela City, Pa., Tuesday morning, a steer wrecked a coke train, one man being killed, another fatally scalded, and a third seriously injured. The locomotive and twelve cars were demolished.

—Willie Webster, a 15-year-old bootblack, confessed at St. Louis Saturday that he was one of the six boys who caused the great lumber-yard fire at Cleveland on Sept. 6.

—A train struck a wagon containing three persons Wednesday morning at Elkton, Ind., all being instantly killed and the horses and wagon destroyed.

—Unknown persons wrecked a train at Kinderhook, Mass., Friday night, by wedging a number of rails and sleepers on the track, the locomotive, express, baggage and smoking car being demolished. One man was scalded to death, a second fatally hurt, and two others painfully wounded.

Cook E. A. Wabash Ave. Jan. 85

—Two months ago, in Franklin county, Georgia, Leila Burgess and her father were preparing for church; but the girl taking a long time to arrange her hair irritated the old man, who attempted to chastise her, when she took up an ax and split his skull. Friday she was sentenced to the penitentiary for life.

FOREIGN.

—The railway laborers and whisky sellers hold sway in Michipicoton, a Canadian town on Lake Superior, and are driving out the respectable population. They have broken the jail and let the prisoners escape, and have killed two constables. An armed force is being organized at Sault Ste. Marie to overawe the rioters.

—The steamer Oceanic arrived Oct. 13 from Japan and China, bringing intelligence of a terrible typhoon which visited Yokohama and Tokio on the 15th ult. In the latter city 3,000 houses were wholly or partially destroyed and twenty people killed. The loss of life at sea was appalling, and no estimate could be made of the number. The typhoon was followed by another of great force on the 17th, but of brief duration.

—The Guion line steamer Nevada arrived off Queenstown Oct. 17, having been on fire two days. The passengers were in a state of semi-panic from the time the flames first appeared. One lady died from the shock. It is supposed the fire was caused by spontaneous combustion.

—A correspondent of the London Times telegraphs that the news of the defeat of Admiral Lespes and the French fleet at Tam-sui is confirmed. The Chinese, by hiding in brushwood, suffered some six hundred of the French fleet to land and come within easy range of their guns before they appeared. The Chinese General, Tso, then led the attack upon the rear of the French and the troops became panic-stricken. The Chinese killed seventy men and captured one gun. The Chinese loss was 200 killed and wounded. The fighting lasted five hours, at the end of which time the French retired to their ships.

—Osman Narreddin reports from Khartoum. He was present at Khartoum during the whole seige, and saw Gordon capture a quantity of guns and rifles from the rebels. He says the road from Khartoum to Sennaar is free of rebels. Kashmil Pasha has undertaken to occupy Berber with the force which Gordon was getting in readiness at the time when Narreddin left. The Mahdi came to Shatt, only six days' journey from Khartoum, but on hearing of the insurrection at Geb-el-Deir, was forced to turn back. Before starting he summoned the tribesmen and villagers to accompany him, but very few obeyed. They, rather, remained loyal to the khedive.

—France and Germany will propose at the Congo conference of the powers in Berlin that the Danubian system be applied on the Congo. Baron de Courcel, the French Ambassador at Berlin, in a letter dated Sept. 29, to Prince Bismarck, says France is anxious to settle, in a good, mutual understanding, her relations with Germany as a neighbor in Africa, and she favors freedom of commerce on the Congo.

—The West African Conference will discuss the matter of free commerce on the Congo River, and will revise the stipulations of the treaty of Vienna in regard to the free navigation of International streams. It will also define the formalities necessary to legalize future commercial operations in West Africa. The National Zeitung says, Emperor William has sent an autograph letter to the king of Portugal notifying him of the intentions of Russia, Germany and Austria on the Congo question.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

For Alcoholism.

Dr. C. S. ELLIS, Wabash, Ind., says: I prescribed it for a man who had used intoxicants to excess for fifteen years, but during the last two years has entirely abstained. He thinks the Acid Phosphate is of much benefit to him."

Write what papers or magazines you wish to take in connection with the Cynosure.

TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The Christian Cynosure will be sent to any address eight weeks on receipt of twenty-five cents.

Much of the progress made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neighborhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

CHRISTIAN NATION.

A Journal of Enlightened Statesmanship, Sound Public Morals, Choice Literature, and General Information.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY IN

New York City.

It aims to promote every Christian Reform Measure on the following

PLATFORM:

God, who is the source of all authority, has appointed our Lord Jesus Christ the Ruler of Nations. The Bible, God's revealed Will, contains law for Nations, and is the Standard by which all Moral Issues in Political Life are to be decided. National acknowledgement of this authority, and obedience to the law, constitute a truly Christian Nation.

EXTRACTS FROM PRIVATE LETTERS.

"I congratulate you most heartily upon the success which has thus far attended your enterprise. It already holds its place among our best religious journals, and has put itself abreast of the advanced movements in journalism."

"I like it well. It is growing better every week, and has the true radical ring."

"I like this issue of paper very much, and think it is growing better and better."

"I am more than satisfied with the paper."

"Allow me to congratulate you on the make-up of your paper; the matter is very good, and, in fact, the whole is far beyond what I expected. It is par excellence."

"I received the sample copies of the Christian Nation, and I am well pleased. You can enter my name as a regular subscriber."

"The paper should be in every house in the land."

"I received a sample copy of your paper from a friend, and finding it to be entirely satisfactory in every respect, I wish to place my name on your list of subscribers."

"It is bright, warm, cheerful, and I have publicly commended the enterprise as one sincere in spirit seeking to occupy vacant room, devised by a successful man, a safe and profitable investment for all interested in reforms."

The report of the Parliamentary Commission upon intoxicating liquors quotes the story that the Duke of Wellington, on being asked by Lord Wharncleff, "Is drunkenness in your opinion the great parent of crime in the British army?" replied, "Invariably." The report of Commander Schley of his relief expedition in search of the Greely party says the whole expedition worked smoothly, the crews did well and there were no punishments on board until the return from the north to the borders of civilization, and then the only cases were those produced by rum. When prohibition shall have become a successful national issue the navy of the United States will be put under a different regimen respecting intoxicants; and the army, too. Liquor is now freely sold in the vicinity of our frontier posts and the most disgraceful drunkenness is the frequent result among the soldiers.

An international convention of considerable importance, though attracting little public notice, has been sitting in Washington since October 1st. Its object is the settlement of the question of the prime meridian, and providing for a uniformity in the reckoning of longitude. The meridian of Greenwich, near London, has long been the standard for four-fifths of the geographers and navigators of the world, but ancient geographers drew the first meridian through the island of Ferro, one of the Canary group, and this is still followed. The French use the meridian of Paris, the Spaniards that of Madrid, while in the United States the meridian of Washington is used with that of Greenwich. Twenty-four governments sent forty agents to Washington to discuss the adoption of a standard meridian. All Europe and America were represented with the Sandwich Islands and Japan. The French made the principal objection to the adoption of the Greenwich meridian as seeming to accept an English standard, but were finally overruled, and that was last Wednesday adopted as the initial meridian, longitude to be counted in both directions for 180 degrees. It is estimated that a change would have caused an expense to navigators of some ten million dollars.

The last annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Detroit, resolved: "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best endorsement of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes." The Cynosure showed at the time how far superior to any other national declaration was the American platform as an endorsement of prohibition principles. If our hands were weak our hearts were strong for the protection of the home also. The Union Signal, and the president of the National W. C. T. U. thought the Prohibition party more nearly allied to their work, while a considerable minority, led by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster of Iowa, gave their voice for the Republican party. The national meeting at St. Louis last week quickly settled the controversy by re-electing Frances E. Willard by a nearly unanimous vote and the adoption of the following resolution by a vote of 182 to 72: "That we heartily endorse the course of the national committee in keeping faith with the obligations made at Detroit to support with women's influence whatever political party would incorporate the principle of home protection from saloon destruction. We are not in any way a political organization, but workers for the upbuilding of every grace that will make the people happier and foster public sentiment for total abstinence and total prohibition."

The New York Herald says that Indiana has one illiterate voter in every thirteen; Massachusetts one in every sixteen. The Northern States range from one in ten in California to one in thirty-one. In the Southern States, the illiterate voters in South Carolina are more than one-half; in Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Georgia, one in two; while Missouri with one in nine presents the best record. The result of such a vast proportion of ignorance among voters cannot be hidden to any observing and thoughtful person. We must permeate and dissolve this mass or see it produce such diseases in our national life as to bring destruction. Four years ago it was urged that this must be the next great work of the Republican party. Later, Mr. Logan wanted to turn upon it the streams of revenue pouring from the distilleries. Mr. Blair's bill has already passed the Senate providing for government appropriation to the different States. But the shortest, cheapest, best way is to close the saloon and the lodge; stop the one from wrecking the home-life and ruining the brain of the nation, and the other from despoiling religion of its holy light. The millions wasted by these two institutions would employ a private instructor for every ignorant voter. There is great national economy in the platform of the American party.

Our government spent some $750,000 for the rescue of the Greely exploring party, supposing it was in duty bound to save the lives of men engaged in its service. But the more the public learns of that misconceived and fatal expedition the more distrustful has it become of the whole affair. It was boasted as a grand result of the expedition that it carried the American flag a few roods nearer the pole than any other. But it comes out that it was not the American flag after all, but Albert Pike's. Greely carried with him a Masonic flag (what kind of a pirate standard that is let Congress inquire). This flag, with its square and compass instead of the loved stars and stripes, was the one taken by the detachment which reached the nearest point to the pole; and Greely is proposing to put it in the archives of his lodge. Next time our government sends out an Arctic expedition—which may it never do—let us know under whose colors it sails.

One of the greatest speeches ever delivered in the Canadian Parliament was that by Hon. Edward Blake last March, upon the bill for the incorporation of the Orange lodge. It was widely published in the Dominion press, and drew profound attention, not only because of its opposition to the incorporation, but to secret societies in general. After such a bold proclamation of views unusual among public men, we have expected that the lodge would in some way reply, as it did to Senator Pomeroy after his Chicago speech in 1869. It came the other day in the following editorial notice of the "great Canadian orator" in a Canadian paper: "The Hon. Edward Blake, leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the Canadian House of Commons, is a man of superior literary ability and refinement of taste; his style of oratory is finished and pleasing, and his rhetoric choice and elegant. Among the cultured classes Mr. Blake is regarded as an idealistic politician; but up to the present time he has failed to touch one responsive chord in the breasts of the great mass of Canadian electors." The insinuation of unpopularity is the usual lodge method of destroying a public man.

The young Republicans of Chicago numbering a thousand have formed a club, and were the other night properly instructed in the "password of the organization," which, says the Inter Ocean is known to the members as the "Ohio yell." Their password is:

Blaine, Blaine, Blaine of Maine.
Blaine, Blaine, Blaine of Maine.
Blaine, Blaine, Blaine of Maine.
Sho-o-o-o,
Boo-o-o-o-m,
Hurrah.

If any one of these thousand intelligent young men, who have some pride about their clothes, their business, and their social relations can inform us what there is manly, or respectable, or rational, or American about such hoodlumism as this we shall be happy to print it.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

In W. F. Tait's communication in the issue of 9th inst., a reiteration of former statements is made. In such an article, the second of its kind from the same pen, some corroborating proof would have been in order. However positive the assertions, if unsupported by proof, they carry no conviction to thinking minds. In the absence of proof, however, it is natural to substitute reiteration.

The writer of the article and myself take exactly opposite views of the Temple of Honor. We cannot both be right. He claims temperance and not salvation is the end of the order. I claim salvation and not temperance is its end. He claims further that "it bears the same relation to the temperance work that the church of Christ bears to the salvation of men's souls," by which I understand that to make men temperate, and not to place them in heaven is the ultimate object of the order, as my opponent views it.

I am disposed, for the present, to favor his conceit and to suppose that the Temple of Honor fulfills that end more or less satisfactorily to itself, and thus rears up "a monument of its work of which it is justly proud." The imaginary picture is that of a monument composed of blocks of work from different States. I wish by and by to direct attention to the Rhode Island block, but first I wish to tell how the Temple of Honor makes a man temperate. If we study the method, we can intelligently read the result as recorded on the R. I. block.

First, like some doctors, it takes a fee in advance of from three to five dollars from the poor drunkard in whom it inspires the hope of relief; then it requires an assent to its creed; then blindfolding him, it initiates him into the order, imposing upon him an oath or promise of secrecy. When he becomes a fully-fledged Templar, he finds most of the time is spent in mouthing over the same words again and again, week after week, and if he visits another temple, it is the same thing, the same words. Strange and bewitching at first, the novelty soon wears off, the interest is lost, his place is vacant in the hall, then he is soon charged with, and tried for, violation of pledge, and perhaps restored, only to fall again and again until he is finally expelled, and his name, along with many others, graces the black book.

I am aware that here and there one of strong will is able to resist every temptation and stand an upright pillar in the temple, but it is a question if he would not have stood just as surely without the machinery of the Temple of Honor. Of the five hard drinkers taken into my own temple only one was retained, who also joined the church; so it is fairly a question whether the temple or the church held him. Many devices are resorted to to boost up a fagging interest in the order, but it is my conviction that with all its props, the order seldom retains a reformed man, so-called, more than a few years at most.

With this little insight into the modus operandi we are prepared to examine the R. I. block, so, if you please, we will move a little closer to it. Before I uncover it, I wish to say that the task I have to perform is to me a very unpleasant one, viz., to speak of the failings of others, for I am not unmindful of my my own deficiencies; but the interests of truth sometimes demand it, and for this cause only I present to view

THE RHODE ISLAND BLOCK.

2. N. B.—C. Fell, and afterwards kept the worst place in the city, and died of delirium tremens.
3. J. T. B.—D. G. W. T. of R. I. Died a confirmed sot
4. —B.—G. T.; W. C. T. Drinks lager beer every day.
5. D. P.—G. T.; W. C. T. After his installation was found so drunk before midnight that he did not know the way home. Common drunkard to-day.
6. — H.—G. T; W. C. T. Confirmed drunkard.
7. — W.—C.; G. T. Public lecturer and at one time editor and publisher of a temperance paper in the State—now a common drunkard.
8. — B.—C. Common drunkard.
9. F. A.—C. Public lecturer. Furnished liquors for his table, drank himself and boasted that he gave drink to his child.
10. D. C.—C. Died of delirium tremens.
11. N. O.—C. Extremely dissipated.
12. J. F. D. Public lecturer; very gifted. Sent to the State farm as a common drunkard. Until too reduced, a proprietor of a drinking and gambling saloon and brothel.

If the Temple of Honor is proud of that block I am sorry for it. Sit down with me, reader, on the grass before the monument and read that block over carefully. The first initials are of the names, those following to the right, are of titles, as:

S. C., should read member of Supreme Council of U. S.

C., should read, member of Council (local.)

G. T., should read, member of Grand Temple (State.)

D. G. W. T., should read, Deputy Grand Worthy Templar (of Grand Temple.)

W. C. T., should read, Worthy Chief Templar (of a local Temple.)

All the names inscribed thereon were at one time shining temple lights in the one city of Providence. The order took their money to make them temperate, but in every case before us it utterly failed to do so. If this work is the end of the order, what a sad failure! And nothing is said here of the hundreds in the lower grades who fell; nothing of the shrinkage of one temple from eight hundred members to one hundred and fifty in two years!

If, as my opponent says, the Temple of Honor is inferior to the church of Christ; if, as the R. I. block shows us, it is inferior to the Washingtonian Home; if, standing at least third rate, it fails to accomplish its end, where is the necessity for its existence? What gap in the temperance work does it fill? These questions my opponent may essay to answer, I cannot.

Sitting here and looking over the old familiar names, my mind is carried back to the time when I believed, as my opponent does now, that in working for the Temple of Honor, I was working for temperance, and nothing else. Sometime I may meet you again in this same place, and then I will tell you all about it. I will not detain you longer now.

I purpose at another time to show that temperance is not the end but the beginning of the Temple of Honor, that its end is salvation, that it does not bear the same relation to temperance that the church of Christ bears to the saving of men's souls, and I shall back up all these statements by incontestible proof from unquestioned sources.

Providence, Oct. 11, 1884.

Is it not a fact that when professors join those societies, they get above their Master? He wants our time, talent, and money in the church. Shame on the professor who takes the Lord's money and pays his annual dues, with which to make a sacrifice to idols.

Dear reader, if you are a Mason, you can't be married to Christ. You cannot serve two masters. If you marry another, you commit adultery, and how will you escape the damnation of hell? Some say that the opposition to secret societies is of human origin. Remember that the church is a spiritual body, and that Christ has said, The gates of hell shall not prevail against her. Those secret conclaves are carnal, and God has officials in his church whose duty it is to see that it is kept pure and that carnal things be rejected. We have a right to reject such members, because they belong to a carnal institution. To admit them would be to throw the church into the jaws of death, and the gates of hell would prevail against her. If a man strive to be a Christian, let him strive lawfully.—Gospel Banner.

THE EVE OF ELECTION.

From gold to gray our mild sweet day
Of Indian Summer fades too soon;
But tenderly above the sea
Hangs, white and calm, the hunter's moon.

In its pale fire, the village spire
Shows like the zodiac's spectral lance;
The painted walls whereon it falls
Transfigured stand in marble trance!

O'er fallen leaves the west-wind grieves,
Yet comes a seed-time round again;
And morn shall see the State sown free
With baleful tares or healthful grain.

Along the street the shadows meet
Of Destiny, whose hands conceal
The moulds of fate that shape the State,
And make or mar the common weal.

Around I see the powers that be;
I stand by Empire's primal springs;
And princes meet in every street,
And hear the tread of uncrowned kings!

Hark! through the crowd the laugh runs loud,
Beneath the sad, rebuking moon.
God save the land a careless hand
May shake or swerve ere morrow's noon!

No jest is this; one cast amiss
May blast the hope of Freedom's year.
Oh, take me where are hearts of prayer,
And foreheads bowed in reverent fear!

Not lightly fall beyond recall
The written scrolls a breath can float;
The crowning fact the kingliest act
Of Freedom is the freeman's vote!

For pearls that gem a diadem
The diver in the deep sea dives;
The legal right we boast to-night
Is ours through costlier sacrifice;

The blood of Vane his prison pain
Who traced the path the Pilgrim trod,
And hers whose faith drew strength from death,
And prayed her Russell up to God!

Our hearts grow cold, we lightly hold
A right which brave men died to gain;
The stake, the cord, the ax, the sword,
Grim nurses at its birth of pain.

The shadows rend, and o'er us bend,
Oh, martyrs, with your crowns and palms,
Breathe through these throngs your battle-song,
Your scaffold prayers, and dungeon psalms!

Look from the sky, like God's great eye,
Thou solemn moon, with searching beam;
Till in the sight of thy pure light
Our mean self-seekings meaner seem.

Shame from our hearts unworthy arts,
The fraud designed, the purpose dark;
And smite away the hands we lay
Profanely on the sacred ark

To party claims and private aims,
Reveal that august face of Truth,
Whereto are given the age of heaven,
The beauty of immortal youth.

So shall our voice of sovereign choice
Swell the deep bass of duty done,
And strike the key of time to be,
When God and man shall speak as one!

THOUGHTS AFTER VACATION.

BY REV. J. F. AVERY, EDITOR OF BUDS AND BLOSSOMS.

The summer months are not generally the time when we can best discern spiritual progress and increase. In city life it is a time of going to and fro, and who can tell the amount of good done, if when the traveling valise is packed some good seed is placed therein to be dropped by the way. The writer believes once a Christian, always, and everywhere a Christian. We can bathe our weary feet in the rippling brooklet that winds its way by the old farm house, carrying in its course some of the mountains' freshness and coolness. Or if nature and circumstances favor, we can allow the cool and invigorating splash and dash of the briny ocean to play upon us, and from the brightness and freshness of the one, and the fulness and beauty of the other find inspiration for a psalm of praise and thanksgiving unto the Lord God, who is the maker and creator of all things. Vacation time to the Christian, whilst a time for unbending and relaxation should never be a time of laxness in spiritual duties. We are known by our fruits; men take knowledge of us; the thought that the eyes of the Lord are in every place, should inspire us at all times, with a filial inspiration to do good unto all, and in everything to give thanks, that others seeing our good works, may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus and learned of him.

Friend, what seed did you sow during your vacation trip? where did you go? what did you do for Jesus?

Now the past is past, and beyond recall. If we are wise let us plan to redeem the time, for the days are not less evil than the times of the past, we need to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. An idle do-nothing Christian is a libel on the name of the Christ, who went about doing good. The King's business is urgent, souls are perishing for lack of knowledge. Knowledge which comes not simply from the word preached, but from religion practised and demonstrated by men and women, who show that they care for souls, by looking unto Jesus, and crying unto others as they run the race of life and for life. "Come thou with us and we will do thee good, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel." To-day, not only thinking men, but the unthinking crowd, demand some new thing in religion to feed and please the fancy. Nevertheless, the old fashioned theology well practiced, saint and sinner, old and new fashioned have to confess, practically as far as it concerns holy living and active service in the cause of Christ, is a good thing, and does not appear as effete as some modern idea men proclaim, men who find it worth their while to stay in sheep's clothing among the sheep, because the good shepherd leads even his rebellious flock in pastures green. Wresting the Scriptures is not a new trade. It started before apostolic time. Satan tried it both with and in the days of Adam the first and second. Satan by his own lying interpretation sought to use Scripture to his own end and purpose. Let us pray, "from all error and false doctrine good Lord deliver us."

Justification by faith is a truth and doctrine older than Luther. The precious blood which cleanseth from all sin, was typified long before the Lamb of God was offered on Calvary. He, whose great heart swelled with forgiving love until it burst, and who in death's agonies, crushed with a burden heavier far than the cross, cried, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," taught if men, like the sinners at Jerusalem, despise the gathering purpose of him who would gather, as a hen gathereth her brood under her wing, then the accumulating of evil within and without, shall like a flood sweep men away. Now the door of mercy stands open. Then the righteous, made so by the cleansing, atoning blood of Jesus Christ, shall be safe and the door shall be shut. The awful, hopeless condemnation of the ungodly stands out clear and distinct in the written unalterable words: "He that is unjust let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; Rev. 22: 11. Poor hope of final and future salvation for sinners who reject salvation now; FOR NOW IS THE DAY OF SALVATION.

LODGE THEOLOGY.

Though not a member of the lodge, observing readers of Prof. Swing's sermons in this city have often marked their attempts to destroy all evidence of any distinction in religion made by the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, and level down all belief to the loose heathenism of Freemasonry. The London Saturday Review attributes Mr. Swing's peculiarities to the demands of his hearers; are they not rather the natural result of the teaching of Masonry in its ten thousand night schools of pagan philosophy? Says the Review:

"To read a few of Mr. David Swing's Sermons is to get an alarming idea of the strain put upon a popular preacher by a fashionable audience in America. (We partly guess these conditions of their delivery from internal evidence.) As we found fault just now with essays for being sermons in disguise, we have in this instance to complain of sermons being little more than essays. In those we have read we have found very little of the essence of a sermon which may be expressed as an attempt to convince a congregation 'of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment,' but interesting discourses, for the most part, about the sins of other people, loaded with references to science, literature, and politics, and bristling with great names. Here is a list of names occurring in one sermon:—Plato, Antony, Cleopatra, Alexander, Cæsar, Whittier, Cowper, Heber, Confucius, Louis XIV., Henry VIII., Calvin, Luther, Edwards, Wesley, Wellington, Antonius, Pius, Hamlet, Gray, Thomas a Kempis, Bunyan, Fenelon, Mme. Guyon, George Fox. The sermon is on spiritual-mindedness, but the writer seems nowhere in spiritual touch with his hearers. This sort of thing is, no doubt, very interesting to people who go to church because it is the fashion; but in England, at all events, there is a robuster appetite among churchgoers; and when men, good or bad, do go to church, they like stronger meat."

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER II.

IN WHICH THE READER IS SHOWN A RELIGION THAT IS BETTER THAN CHRISTIANITY.

Stephen Howland was waiting for clients with what patience he could muster one raw, cloudy, chilly day, when he heard the welcome sound of feet pausing at his door, and a stranger entered who wanted a deed drawn up.

Even so trifling a job as the drawing up of a legal paper the young attorney did not consider despicable at the present low ebb in his affairs and spirits. So he proceeded at once to write the required instrument, duly sprinkled with that peculiarly bad English in which the legal mind so unaccountably delights. The stranger, whose name was put therein as Felix Basset, had apparently reached five and forty, was good-looking, well dressed, and agreeable; a man evidently on the best possible terms with himself, as could be seen by the air of self-possession with which he took a seat and let his eye roam over the rather meagre appointments of the little office, hardly larger than a monk's cell and nearly as bare of luxuries, in a way that seemed to render superfluous any answer to his careless inquiry, "How goes business with you, Mr. Howland?"

"I haven't been troubled with any rush of clients as yet," returned Stephen, rather dryly.

"Well, I suppose not. A lawyer's practice is like Rome. It can't be built up in a day. But some men nake a life-job of success, and never get fairly on to heir feet. I don't believe in that, because I think there s no need of it. We are fast learning the truth that nankind are brothers, and as a consequence there are organizations in every city and town founded on this idea, and anybody that wants to get on in the world should oin one of these. Now I started in life with scarcely a lollar in my pocket, and I shall always say that I owe nore of my success in business to having joined the Odd 'ellows than to all other causes combined."

Stephen only said, "Indeed!" but Mr. Felix Basset was oo full of his subject to need any other encouragement o go on.

"Yes; I consider Odd-fellowship incomparably the best order that a young man can enter. It is a system of the nost rigid morality as well as the most perfect benevoence. It is even better in some respects than the church tself."

Stephen had grown up with that idea of the Christian church which still prevails in some unsophisticated souls, as the pure and spotless Bride, clothed with the sun and crowned with stars; persecuted, yet full of divine vitality hat could triumph over all the fury of her dragon foe; before whose mighty tread every idol should fall, every superstition crumble, every wrong flee away, and the renovated, purified earth become once more a fit dwelling-place for Eternal Love. It was no wonder then that he gave a little start, and fixed his eyes inquiringly on Mr. Basset. Both movements were observed by that gentleman, who made haste accordingly to define his opinions with more strictness.

"I see you are surprised to hear me say so, but it is the ruth, and the truth ought to be spoken even when it cuts he wrong way. The Odd-fellows take care of their sick nd poor. What does the church do for her's? Why, in ine cases out of ten she just lets them alone to suffer nd die, or be thrown on public charity. It is a fact that have heard more than one minister say, both of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, precisely what I am saying now, hat they accomplish more good than the churches do."

"I suppose these two orders bear considerable resemblance to each other," observed Stephen, both for the purpose of saying something, and because he really had vague, indefinite idea that such was the case.

"Oh, no; they are independent organizations, entirely eparate in everything. A man can join both if he hooses, and so get a double benefit. Now a member of he lodge where I belong is not only an Odd-fellow, but a Mason, a Knight of Pythias, a Good Templar, and I now not what besides. But I don't believe in joining o many orders. Odd-fellowship contains enough to satsfy me, and it ought to any reasonable man."

Now it must be confessed that Stephen Howland had vague suspicion of anything Masonic. He remembered when a boy, eating his luncheon with his father one hot lay under the shade of the big oak in the south pasture, nd inquiring between the savory bites of doughnuts and heese, "Father, what is Freemasonry?"

"It is a bad thing, Stephen, bad clear through. I hope ou'll never have anything to do with it."

"But what makes it bad, father?" persisted the boy, whose young curiosity was fully aroused.

"Why, the terrible oaths they have to take, for one hing. There used to be a little book with a blue cover p in the attic, when I was a boy, that had them all writen out, and the signs, and grips, and everything."

"Do you know where that book is now?" asked tephen, eagerly.

"Hain't a notion. I suppose it got scattered along vith the other things when we broke up after father ied."

"But why do they have to take such oaths?" inquired tephen, going on with his catechising.

"That's a question, now," said the elder Howland, uminatively. "Folks ain't generally to all that pains to over up good deeds, and this is one great reason why I ave always stood to it that Masonry must be bad They say that if a man takes these oaths and then lets out the secrets he is liable to lose his life, and if that is so it is an institution only fit for thieves and murderers. I don't suppose there's a doubt but what they murdered William Morgan out in Western New York for writing that little book I told you of. They took him out in a boat at night and drowned him in the river. This was something that happened before my day, but father used to tell about it. It's queer now that there ain't anything about it in the school histories. There ought to be, for it made an awful excitement all over the country, so that the lodge went down everywhere and men were ashamed or afraid to own they ever had been Masons. Somehow the thing had a big tap root, and it beats all how it has started up again. But I tell you, Stephen, don't you ever join the Masons. It is no place for an honest man."

So believed this worthy New Englander, the Puritan of many generations, and so according to his best knowledge and belief did he teach his twelve-year-old son, whose mind, accustomed to consider the taking of human life as the most dreadful crime in the catalogue, was filled with horror at these revelations. So far and no farther could Josiah Howland throw his red light of warning. It is true that on general principles he was opposed to the lesser secret orders, but in his eyes Masonry was the Moses' rod that swallowed up all the others, leaving him with a merely negative opinion about them as of something foolish, but not so absolutely bad and mischievous as to need any special combating. Thus it was that Stephen, as soon as Mr. Basset assured him that Odd-fellowship had no connection with Masonry, felt a sudden revulsion of his previous prejudices, and was perfectly willing to hear more about it.

"I am glad to know I was mistaken in supposing them to be alike," he said, after a moment's pause. "The fact is—I may as well say it—I have heard some things about Masonry not at all to my taste."

"O, you will find that Odd-fellowship has nothing in it to trouble the tenderest conscience," returned Mr. Basset, with easy cheerfulness. It requires no oath of its members, only a simple obligation. "Between ourselves," he continued with an air of mingled confidence and candor, "There are objectionable features about Masonry. I don't mind saying so, and this is why I recommend Odd-fellowship so highly. It has all the advantages of Masonry and none of its drawbacks. Here you are a stranger in a strange place. You need friends who will stand by you if you are sick or in trouble, and be interested in your obtaining a practice. Now this is just where Odd-fellowship fulfills the divine law better than the churches do:—'I was a stranger and ye took me in, naked and ye clothed me, sick and in prison and ye visited me!' That is the kind of religion that men understand."

Now in Mr. Felix Basset's coat pocket reposed at that very moment a small volume brim full of instructive facts for all good Odd-fellows, one of the aforesaid facts being stated as follows:—"Chinese, Polyncsians, Indians, half-breeds or mixed bloods are not eligible to membership! And if any earnest seeker after the truth as it is in Odd-fellowship had looked still deeper into its pages they might have learned that not only were the above-named class excluded, but all men of African descent, all women,—none, in short, being admitted but the free, white males; while even of this favored class the deaf, dumb, and blind, the aged and poor, the halt and lame, might as well, for all their hopes of ever sharing in the exhaustless stream of Odd-fellow beneficence, have been Chinese coolies, or negroes whose shoulders still bore the marks of the overseer's whip.

But it is the tendency of human nature to like the sound of certain words. Men have thrown up their caps and shouted themselves hoarse at the name of Liberty, while her most devoted sons were gasping in dungeons or expiring on the scaffold. And Charity, with many people, is almost as potent a watchword. They swear by her name and sound trumpets in her honor at the very moment that she wanders outcast, frightened away by the noise and blare. Stephen Howland believed in mutual helpfulness. He had a generous nature and was besides in that situation which is best calculated to nurture any proud independence of one's fellow beings. He considered Mr. Basset very kind and friendly, and felt grateful accordingly; and though he could not yet see that it was both his duty and privilege to become an Odd-fellow with all convenient speed, he was willing enough to think about it.

"Now there are some people," resumed Mr. Basset, "whose idea of Odd-fellowship is just a mutual benefit society and nothing else. But that is a very wrong impression. The material good it does is the least part of it. The fact is it is a great moral and religious teacher, and above all it is a temperance order. Now that is a subject in which everybody ought to feel interested. The crime and misery caused by the rum traffic is frightful to contemplate—perfectly terrible."

"It is indeed," answered Stephen, feelingly, for he had been educated in the strictest doctrines of temperance. He believed that the legalized sale of intoxicating liquors was the curse and shame of our Christian civilization; that it was the solemn and bounden duty of every man, woman and child to organize and fight to the death the monster Alcohol; that it was the old medieval battle between St. George and the dragon acted over again in the living issues of to day; and he had even dreamed of grand and heroic deeds that his own right hand might some day perform in the aforesaid warfare. Mr. Felix Basset could hardly have touched a more responsive chord.

"I am a very strong temperance man myself," continued that gentleman, "and though I think the Good Templars and other similar orders are very useful, I really believe there is no better organization to promote the cause than Odd-fellowship rightly understood. You see it is just this way"—and here Mr. Basset lowered his voice with the air of one about to impart information on a deep and profound subject—"everybody don't understand, not even the majority of the members themselves, that as its teachings are based on the broad foundation of universal truth, and the greater always includes the less, it follows that they must in the nature of things cover all truth that humanity needs to know. Considered in that light it is, as I said, a temperance order—nothing less, and every one who enters it stands committed to prohibition principles. But to come back to the subject we started on;—I believe in the church. I have been a member fifteen years, and I assert that no single church has a sphere wide enough to do all the charitable and benevolent work that the world needs done. An Odd-fellow who lives up to the requirements of the order can't help being a good Christian, though as a matter of actual practice it is with Odd fellowship just as it is in the church—inconsistency even among the best."

Mr. Basset sighed, though whether for the inconsistencies of church members or lodge members, or both, was not quite apparent; and, after a moment's silence, he paid the young attorney's modest fee, and left him to his own reflections, which amounted substantially to this:—that an institution which could thus combine a man's interest for both worlds must be a good thing, and if clients did not come in any faster, he, Stephen Howland, would be standing very much in his own light not to heed the advice so freely and disinterestedly given.

CHAPTER III.

WITHIN THE CIRCLE.

A strange scene now rises before us, and though the reader, at first sight, may be disposed to shrink back, we bid him follow, in all good courage; for this is no assembly of Southern Ku-Klux, meditating a descent on some defenseless negro cabin, but a company of peaceful citizens, who will lay aside their masks and disguises when the business which calls them together is over, and separate without the deliberate planning of a single deed of darkness.

But our business just now is in an ante-room, where two men stand fronting each other, the older of the two with a blank book before him, in which he is writing down to the following questions the answers given him by the younger, who proves to be no other than our friend, Stephen Howland:

"What is your name?"

"Where do you live?"

"What is your occupation?"

"How old are you?"

"Do you hold membership in, or are you suspended or expelled from any lodge of this order?"

"Are you, so far as you know, in sound health?"

Stephen Howland had a good deal of what we may call "the pride of life." He had never wronged his pure and temperate ancestry by a single youthful excess, and his happy New England heritage of mingled plenty and toil had developed in him a vigor and hardihood which never knew a day's sickness. So he may be pardoned for answering in the affirmative, with a pleasant consciousness, meanwhile, that his well-knit, manly figure and fine proportions made him goodly to look at, both in the eyes of men and women.

"Do you believe in the existence of a Supreme, Intelligent Being, the Creator and preserver of the Universe?"

And again Stephen answered in the affirmative, forgetting that he called himself a Christian, and was now giving his assent to a creed that left out the most essential part of his faith; and which, thus emasculated, neither Jew, Mohammedan or deist could possibly quarrel with.

The recording angel of the lodge, who, by the way, bore the uncelestial title of Past Grand, here put down his pen and shut his book; but he had one more inquiry to make of the young neophyte:

"Are you willing to enter into an obligation to keep secret all that may transpire during your initiation?"

Stephen Howland felt, for an instant, a trifle uncomfortable; but had he not been assured, time and again, of the highly moral and religious nature of the institution with which he was now connecting himself? So he swallowed his scruples in their first beginning, gave once more the expected affirmative, and repeated, in a clear, firm voice, after his examiner, "I hereby pledge my sacred honor that I will keep secret whatever may transpire during my initiation."

His catechizer then blindfolded his eyes—which gave Stephen another uncomfortable feeling, for he was naturally one of the wide-awake kind, who like to know what is going on about them—and, leading him to the door of the hall, gave three resounding raps. "Who comes there?" was responded from inside. "The Outside Conductor, with a stranger who desires to be initiated into the Independent Order of the Odd-fellows," answered his guide. And thus introduced, Stephen was led into the hall to where stood three figures, the one on the right and left being clad in long white robes, like grave shrouds, and each holding an unlighted torch. The middle figure was similarly attired,—only in a black robe instead of a white one. The rest of the company wore semi masks, the upper part reaching to about the middle of the forehead, and the lower part covering the mouth; the funereal aspect of the whole scene being much enhanced by an open coffin, containing a very death-like representation of a skeleton, which was placed in the center of the room.

"You are now within a lodge of Odd-fellows," spoke the black-robed figure, in a kind of recitative singsong, "here the world is shut out; you are separated from its cares and distinctions, its dissensions and its vices. Here Friendship and Love assert their mild dominion, while Faith and Charity combine to bless the mind with peace and soften the heart with sympathy. Those who surround you have all assumed the obligations and endeavor to cherish the sentiments peculiar to Odd-fellowship; but before you can unite with them you must pass through an initiatory ceremony, which will ultimately lead you to primary truth."

THE SERMON.

THE CHRISTIANIZED VOTE.

From Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Oct. 14, 1883.

O'Connell and Grote and Cobden and Macaulay and Gladstone fought great battles in the introduction of the ballot-boxes in England, and to-day it is one of the fastnesses of that nation. It is one of the corner-stones of our government. It is older than the Constitution. In it is our national safety. Tell me what will be the fate of the American ballot-box, the ark of the American covenant, and I will tell you what will be the fate of this nation. Give the people once a year, or once in four years, an opportunity to express their political sentiments, and you practically avoid insurrection and revolution.

Either give them the ballot or they will take the sword. Without the ballot-box there can be no free republican institutions. Milton visiting in Italy noticed that on the sides of Vesuvius gardeners and farmers were at work while the volcano was in eruption, and he asked them if they were safe. "Yes," said the farmers and the gardeners, "it is safe; all the danger is before the eruption; then come earthquake and terror, but just as soon as the volcano begins to pour forth lava we all feel at rest." It is the suppression of political sentiment, the suppression of public opinion that makes moral earthquake. Let public opinion pour forth, and that gives satisfaction, and that gives peace, and that gives permanency to good government. And yet, though the ballot-box is the sacred chest and the ark of the American covenant, you know as well as I know it has its sworn antagonists, and I propose this morning in God's name and as a Christian patriot to set before you the names of some of the sworn enemies of this sacred chest, the ark of the American covenant, the ballot-box.

THE FOES OF THE BALLOT-BOX.

First, I remark, ignorance is a mighty foe. Other things being equal, the more intelligence a man has the better he is qualified to exercise the right of suffrage. You have been ten, fifteen, twenty, thirty years studying American institutions; you have canvassed all the great questions about tariff and home rule, and all the educational questions, and everything in American politics you are well aquainted with. You consider yourself competent to cast a vote in November, and you are competent. You will take your position in the line of electors, you will wait for your turn to come, the judge of election will announce your name, you will cast your vote and pass out. Well done.

But right behind you there will come a man who cannot spell the name of controller, or attorney, or mayor. He cannot write, or if he can write he uses a small "i" for the personal pronoun. He could not tell on which side of the Alleghany Mountains Ohio is. Educated canary birds, educated horses know more than he. He will cast his vote, and it will balance your vote. His ignorance is as mighty as your intelligence. That is not right. All men of fair mind will acknowledge that that is not right. Until a man can read the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, and calculate the interest on the American debt, and know the difference between a republican form of government and a monarchy or despotism, he is unfit to exercise the right of suffrage at any ballot-box between Key West and Alaska.

In 1872, in England, there were 2,600,000 children who ought to have been in school. There were only 1,333,000, in other words about fifty per cent., and of the fifty per cent. not more than five per cent. got anything worthy the name of education. Now, take that foreign ignorance and add it to our American ignorance, and there will be in November thousands and thousands of people who are no more qualified to exercise the right of suffrage than to lecture on astronomy. How are these things to be corrected? By laws of compulsory education well executed. I go in for a law which, after giving fair warning for a few years, shall make ignorance a crime.

Another powerful foe of that sacred chest, the ark of the American covenant, the ballot-box, is BRIBERY.

You know something of the hundreds of thousands of dollars that were expended to carry Indiana in 1880. You know something of the vast sums of money expended in Brooklyn and New York in other years to carry elections. Bribery is one of the disgraces of this country. It is often the case that a man is nominated for office with reference to his capacity to provide money for the elections, or with reference to his capacity to command money from others. You know the names of men who have at different times gone into the Gubernatorial chair or Congressional office buying their way all through. I tell you no news. Your patriotic heart has been pained again and again with it.

Very often it is not money that bribes, but it is office. "You make me President and I'll make you Secretary of State, or Attorney-General, or something else; you make me Governor and I'll make you Surveyor-General; you make me Mayor and I'll put you on the Water Board; you give me position and I'll give you position." That is the form of the bribe often and often in these great cities. I do not say it is in our city, but you know again and again throughout the land these have been the forms of bribe offered. So it is often the case that by the time a man comes to an office to which he has been elected, he is from the crown of head to the sole of foot mortgaged with pledges, and the man who goes to Albany or to Washington to get an office is applying for some position which was given away three months before the election. Two long lines of worm fence, one worm fence reaching to Albany and the other to Washington, and there are a great many citizens astride the fence, and they are equally poised, and they are waiting to see on which side there is most emolument, and on this side they get down. But bribery kicks both ways. It kicks the man that offers it and it kicks the man that takes it. Bribery to-day you will admit to be one of the mightiest foes of the Amerian ballot-box.

Another great enemy of that sacred chest is

DEFAMATION OF CHARACTER.

Can you find out from the newspapers when two men are in office which is the best? How often in the autumnal elections the good man is denounced and the bad man applauded, so that you can come sometimes to no just opinion as to who is the best man; and there are hundreds and thousands of electors who go up to vote so utterly befogged they know not what they do. Is not that a fearful influence to be brought upon the ballot box of this country? It has been so ever since the foundation of this government. Defamation of character.

Thomas Paine writes Washington a letter, and publishes it, saying: "Treacherous in all private friendship and a hypocrite in public morals, the world will be puzzled to know whether we had better call you an apostate or an imposter, and whether you abandoned good morals or never had any." That is Thomas Paine's opinion of George Washington.

John Quincy Adams declared that he was solaced in regard to the scandals and anathemas inflicted upon him by the fact that his father, John Adams, had to go through the same process; and John Quincy Adams declared he really thought in that present election there were men who gave their entire time to manufacturing falsehood in regard to him. Martin Van Buren was always pictorialized as a rat. Thomas H. Benton and Amos Kendall were always pictorialized as robbers, with battering-rams, breaking in the door of the United States bank.

On the day on which Thomas Jefferson was inaugurated President of the United States, March 4th, 1801, the following appeared in the Sentinel of Boston: "Monumental inscription. Yesterday expired, deeply regretted by millions of grateful Americans, and by all good men, the Federal Administration of the Government of the United States, animated by Washington, Adams, Hamilton, Knox, Pickering, McHenry, Marshall, and Stoddard; aged twelve years. Its death was occasioned by the secret arts and open violence of foreign and domestic demagogues. As one tribute of gratitude in these times this monument to the talents and services of the deceased is raised by the Sentinel." Under such defamation as that Thomas Jefferson went into office.

My father told me that when Andrew Jackson was running for President of the United States the whole land was flooded with coffin handbills—pictures of six dead men, in allusion to six deserters whom Andrew Jackson had had shot; and all the pictorials of those times represented Jackson as taking his office from the hand of the devil.

I saw, a few summers ago, in Put-in-Bay, Ohio, in a museum, a prominent paper of 1844, which spoke of Henry Clay as a gambler, a libertine, and a murderer; and the manner in which he was defamed, and the outrages which were heaped upon him may well be guessed from Mr. Clay's eulogy of his native State, Kentucky. He said: "When I seemed to be assailed by all the rest of the world, she interposed her broad and impenetrable shield, repelled the poisoned shafts that were aimed for my destruction, and vindicated my good name from every malignant and unfounded aspersion."

Defamation of character is one of the curses of the American ballot-box to-day. In your Presidential elections who can tell, from what he reads, who is the man he ought to vote for? Bad men sometimes are applauded, good men denounced.

Another powerful foe of the sacred chest, the ark of the American covenant, the ballot-box, is the

ROWDY AND DRUNKEN CAUCUS.

The ballot-box does not give any choice to a man when the nominations are made in the back part of a groggery.

In some of the States politics has got so low that the nominees no more need good morals than they do a bath-tub. Snatch the ballot-box from such men. Where is the David who will go forth and bring the ark of the covenant back from Kirjath-jearim? Do you not think politics have got to a pretty low ebb in our day, when a Tweed could be sent to the Legislature of New York, and a John Morrissey, the prince of gamblers, could be sent to the American Congress?

HOW ARE THESE THINGS TO BE REMEDIED?

Some say by a proper qualification. They say that after a man gets a certain amount of property—a certain amount of real estate—he is financially interested in good government, and becomes cautious and conservative. I reply, a property qualification would shut off from the ballot-box a great many of the best men in this land. Literary men are almost always poor.

Property qualification will not do. The only way these evils will be eradicated will be by more thorough legal defense of the ballot-box, and a more thorough moralization and Christianization of the people. That ark of the covenant was carried into captivity to Kirjath-jearim; but one day the people hooked oxen to a cart, and they put this ark on the cart, and the cart was taken to Jerusalem—the ark of the covenant coming with the shouting and thanksgiving of the people. And through the American ballot-box, the ark of the American covenant, our sacred chest, has been carried again and again into captivity, by fraud and iniquity and spurious voting, I believe it will be brought back yet, by prayer and by Christian consecration, and will be set down in the midst of the temple of Christian patriotism. "Whose responsibility?" Yours and mine.

I charge you, then, as American citizens, remember your responsibility on the first Tuesday of Novembe. It will begin early.

THE SNOW-STORM OF SUFFRAGES.

It will snow all day—snow on until noon, snow on until night. The flakes will fall in every town and village and neighborhood; the white flakes—a snow-storm of suffrages—when these white flakes will be gathered together and compacted into an avalanche that will slide down in expression of the will of the people. Stand out of the way of it! In the awful sweep of this white avalanche let political fraud go down a thousand feet under.

You have not only a vote, you have a prayer. The prayer may be mightier than the vote. Oh, as citizens of this beautiful city, and of this State, and of this nation, let us do our whole duty. We cannot live under any other form of government than that which God has given us in this country. The stars on our flag are not the stars of a thickening night, but the stars sprinkled amid the bars of morning cloud.

Exclude God from politics and you might as well exclude him from the world.—A. J. Chittenden.

—A St. John and Daniel American Club was formed at Waupun, Wis., a few days ago.

—We cannot well grant the request of Bro. Avery, and print the Prohibition platform again, for want of room.

—E. E. Browne, of Martin, Wis., asks: 1. Would you advise the anti-secretists of Wisconsin to vote the Prohibition State ticket? 2. Have the Americans of Wisconsin nominated a State ticket? 3. What members of the Prohibition ticket are members of secret societies? 4. Have the Americans an electoral ticket?

Answer.—1. Yes, substituting names of unforesworn men in place of the lodgites. 2. No. 3. We do not know, except Samuel D. Hastings, who is a secretist. 4. No. It is just as well to vote for the Prohibition electors.

—The American State ticket in Iowa is unchanged:
For Secretary of State, William Pitt Norris.
Attorney General, William Bell.
Judge of Supreme Court, Jacob Rogers.
Auditor, Asa C. Staples,
Treasurer, Joseph A. Laird.
For Representative 1st District, John Palmer.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JOHN P. ST. JOHN,
OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,
WILLIAM DANIEL,
OF MARYLAND.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Ve, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the follow-
, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of government, by which we intend to be governed in ing our votes. We hold:
. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author civil government.
. That the Bible should be associated with books of nce and literature in all our educational institutions.
. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
. We demand the prohibition of the importation, man-ture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted our Federal and State Legislatures should be withwn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreci-
l contract labor from foreign countries in competition n free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or culators.
. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of laws concerning patents and inventions; for the pre-tion and punishment of frauds either upon inventors he general public.
We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
That the civil equality secured to all American citis by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National stitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same ality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
0. That international differences should be settled by tration.
1. That land and other monopolies should be dis-raged.
2. That the general government should furnish the ple with an ample and sound currency.
3. That it should be the settled policy of the govern-t to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessi-of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
4. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed law, and that the Republican party is censurable for long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
5. And, finally, we demand for the American people abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for sident and Vice President of the United States.

CONNECTICUT CONVENTION.

The Convention of the American party for Connecticut was held at Mission Hall, Willimantic, Wednesday, Oct. 8th, at eleven o'clock, A. M. John A. Conant, of Willimantic, was elected as chairman, and Charles T. Collins, of Windsor, secretary.

After prayer, remarks were made by J. A. Conant and Rev. H. H. Hinman indorsing the nomination of St. John and Daniel for President and Vice President of the United States. Resolutions were passed re-affirming the principles embodied in the American platform adopted at Chicago, Ill., June 20, 21, 1884, and pledging our support to the nominees of the National Prohibiton party, St. John and Daniel.

A ticket for State officers was adopted; namely:
For Governor, Elisha H. Palmer.
Lieutenant Governor, H. L. Johnson.
Secretary of State, Edwin M. Curtis.
Treasurer, Edmund Tuttle.
Comptroller, Charles T. Collins.

John A. Conant of Willimantic, Philip Bacon of Weatogue, and Charles T. Collins of Windsor, were appointed a State Central Committee.

Convention adjourned by singing the doxology, and benediction by Rev. A. M. Ahgren.

Charles T. Collins, Sec'y.

ST. JOHN AT SILVER LAKE, N. Y.

Dale, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—My heart is full of love to God for the glorious way he is leading. When it was first announced that our respected nominees had resigned in favor of St. John and Daniel, I had some misgivings as to the results. But I was thoroughly convinced after hearing the Governor yesterday that it was the wisest thing that could have been done. The hand of the Lord is in it. Notwithstanding the excellent opportunity for farmers to secure crops, and the false notice circulated by some who claim to be temperance men (and vote with the old parties), that they had received a dispatch stating that the Governor was not coming, some three thousand assembled at Silver Lake. The day was cloudless, all nature seemed in harmony with the spirit of the meeting. After the arrival of trains, the Bradford club (in uniform), numbering 175, with banner flying and martial music led the procession. The meeting was conducted very similar to the one reported by Bro. C. W. Hiatt at Oberlin.

At 2 o'clock, after a short and witty address by Prof. A. A. Hopkins, Gov. St. John stepped to the front amid loud cheers. He spoke in clear, distinct tones. One thought I must mention: the Republican speakers are yet proclaiming that there is a solid South and a solid North; that the North being in a majority Republican, holds in check the South; and thus, breaking open the old sore, hope to perpetuate themselves in office. Had they spent half the money that they have spent in Ohio and other Northern States to perpetuate this hatred, in educating the Southern brethren, the breach would have been healed long ago. Instead, they have left the emancipated race largely to their former holders. The Governor went on to show that if the North and South would unite on some great question, as the prohibition, they could be brought together as in no other way.

Mr. J. B. Finch followed with a very able address. At the close, all who were going to vote for St. John were called on to rise; nearly all the voters sprang to their feet, at the same time giving three cheers for St. John and Daniel. Parties at Arcade have been claiming to have met St. John in fraternal relations in the lodge recently. Our president, F. W. Capwell, accompanied by witnesses, had an interview with him yesterday. The Governor re-affirmed his former statements: that he had not been in a lodge for 17 years, held a demit, and that he favored open work only. There is another rumor afloat here. Somebody had a friend, who had another friend, who was friendly to somebody else that had a friend who saw Governor St. John go into a store and buy three cigars for twenty-five cents and go out behind a shed and smoke them! We hope that other friend will profit by his example and not smoke in public.

When the meeting had been dismissed with the doxology and benediction, a Mr. L., who had kept up a vigorous clapping during the meeting, came forward, half drunk as he was, to greet his old friend Mr. Finch. It seems that Mr. L. had been a reformed drunkard; was well known by Mr. Finch; had been very active in organizing Sons of Temperance lodges; but as he relied only on human aid had again fallen. He told me he should vote the Democratic ticket. Like many other men he had been converted to the evils of intemperance, but not to the God who alone can save the drunkard. May God open the eyes of Mr. Finch and like men, to the folly of trying to accomplish by a man-invented institution what he alone can affect. W. B. Stoddard.

HOW SHALL WE DO?

Thompson, Pa.

Dear Cynosure:—Allow me the space to speak to some of our excellent brethren, with whom I am in sympathy as to their views of the political situation.

Dear brethren of the more radical type, permit me to submit to your consideration some of my own trials and reflections. Since the action of the committee of the American party, accepting the resignation of Pomeroy and Conant as the nominees of said party, we have no candidates in the field running for President. Now we are called to act in a dilemma, and are at liberty to act with the very best light we can get. We are for reforms, all we can effect. We cannot embrace, in our voting, the anti-lodge reform, unless the platform and the candidates we support embrace it. Ex.-Gov. St. John is not a pronounced anti-lodge man, and his environments forbid him to be such. If he has stepped onto "every plank of the American platform," he has stepped on so lightly, and so cautiously that those of the more radical make-up cannot feel his tread. We must not be deluded into the hope that he will support our anti-lodge reform, if he is too cautious to commit himself to it now. He knows it would be suicidal for him to step boldly onto the American platform. I do not expect him to do so.

Now what is best for radical, outspoken anti-lodge men, in this case? This is the question of the hour. We cannot nominate anew, and it would not be wise to attempt this measure now. Is not the best alternative to support such reforms as are embraced in the prohibition platform in this campaign? Prohibition is a momentous issue. The American party is every inch prohibitionist, in theory and practice—more so, in our humble opinion, than the party known as the Prohibition party. Shall it be said by our sworn enemies that we had a chance to vote prohibition and refused to do it? Tens of thousands, led by the "secret empire," will fail to comprehend our position, and will use such refusal to our disadvantage in subsequent campaigns. Can we afford this? We can vote sincerely, and with a will, the temperance ticket, though tens of thousands of lodge-men vote the same ticket through sinister motives.

Truth can afford the grandest magnanimity, while lodge-shrivcled souls, pinched up by a thousand profane oaths, cannot endure one ray of light without hissing down its medium. The mills of God grind slow and exceeding small. Prohibition is in the hopper and we may help grind it out, though it should prove to be only chop to feed some lodge cattle. The anti-lodge reform is moving on grandly, Four years of vigorous work will so educate this people, on the lodge issue, as to create a grand tidal wave, that will swallow up every lodge toad that hops, from the mere bioplast to the Ku-Klux-Klan of the West and Nihilists of the East.

With St. John's avowal of anti-lodge proclivities, and Daniel's clean-cut record from all lodges, we can better afford to support them than can the lodge-men—if we can believe them true to their words. I am inclined to trust and try them.

Since writing the foregoing pages I have read, in Cynosure, our editor's "Reply to Several Letters," with satisfaction and benefit. We should not use epithets on the guilty, far less on the innocent, and least of all on one like our editor, who has for fifty years stood like a Daniel, and bearded the lions in their dens, through the slavery conflict into the whisky and the lodge struggle, and I believe has never shown the "white feather" on any one of the battle fields. To him, under God, we owe a debt of gratitude which we will not be able to pay. He inaugurated the new conflict with the Secret Empire, with the boldness and the self-denial of a Luther, and turned the lodge inside out; and secretism is already withering under the focal rays of the light invited and set in motion by his self-denying agency. Many noble men have come into line of battle, and are doing valiant work for God and truth. We must not "fall out by the way." Few, if any, will believe our venerable brother capable of duplicity.

If any should regard these words extravagant laudation, I beg leave to say that I regard them only as an expression of righteous appreciation, due to a character as transparent and as useful as any in the last half-century. This is my deliberate opinion, and if I am in error you can ascribe it to my weakness.

Nathan Callender.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PITH AND POINT.

WHY NOT UNITE ON PAPERS AS WELL AS ON PRESIDENTS?

To all true reformers:—To save the nation, the church and the family, we must be unselfish in all our movements. If we can unite on St. John as our President, can we not agree as to what papers we should sustain in our reform work? The work before us is truly great. It will not do to be separated one far from the other. Yours for God's order in all reform work.—R. Smith, Maryville, Mo.

TRACTS IN THE SOUTH.

Thank you for the tracts. I am expected to keep the lecturers in tracts, and my supply suitable for them is getting low. They say the people are very eager for them. I saw some time since something about tracts for children. I think perhaps they would just suit many of the colored people. I wish there were more pictorial tracts, they attract so much attention. I heard one man to whom I had given the tract for boys, saying: "This man is gettin' religion. He's down on his knees a prayin'." We are crowded with business and cares, but as we feel that we can, we are talking and praying and distributing tracts, not doubting that the Lord will say to the mountains of lodgery and intemperance, "Be thou removed." M. Tapley.

HE KNEW ABOUT MORGAN.

While visiting a relative a short time ago, the obligation taken in the Masonic oath was brought strongly to my mind, "always conceal and never reveal" no matter how true. I asked Mr. M. at his table, "Did you ever see the Morgan monument at Batavia, N. Y.?" He chuckled with a little laugh, and said, "There is no such monument." I simply replied, "I have heard there was." He said Morgan went off to Canada. He further said he had been a Mason thirty years, and his father before him. The lady, his wife, looked across the table at me, and I saw how she understood it. She afterward said to me, "My Uncle John would have talked on Masonry all day with my husband. My family helped to make Joseph Ritner Governor of Pennsylvania."—A. C. Wiggins, Footville, Wis.

THE BEST OF ALL.

I have been a subscriber for several years, and the weekly visits of the Cynosure, among all the papers that I take, are the most appreciated. I like the paper very much; long may it wave to battle in the front rank for God and humanity until the principles for which it is contending shall triumph and we shall find ourselves free from the curse of false worships and the drink demon, with a full recognition of the God of the Christian Scriptures in our State and Federal Constitutions.—Wm. R. Vance, Fairfield, Mo.

MASONIC CHARTERS.

Will you kindly give us, through your paper, if to your knowledge any State has granted charters to "Masonry?" I say, no! The law-makers and pseudo law-administrators wink at it and let it rule, I admit; but my Masonic friend says the law charters the "Grand Lodge," and it forms or charters subordinate lodges.

Did Morgan's wife marry a Mason (adhering)? I have read, and my impression is, no! but I cannot turn to it in my documents, and my said Masonic friend says yes, and asks, If she believed that the Masons murdered Morgan would she marry another of that clan? I hope to bring my man to bay, and have him renounce the accursed thing.—J. C. Young.

The State legislatures do not charter Masonry in the direct way of giving lodges a legal right to go through their infamous stripping and swearing of men, but they charter Grand Lodges to sell charters, dispensations, etc., to their subordinate lodges, to do the business. The Rhode Island legislature once ordered the withdrawing of Masonic charters. Congress has virtually chartered secret orders in the District of Columbia, and our State legislatures are all the while chartering some side issue of lodges, as insurance societies, building associations, which are good for little but to bolster up the orders. There is a body of Knight Templars in Chicago which has got out a charter as a military company.

Mrs. Morgan married a man who afterward joined the Mormons. We do not know why the Masons claim him, except that they know the Mormons were Masons, having got the stuff in Morgan's book.

BABEL AND MASONRY.

Both are marked by the fact that each seeks its way to heaven by its own wisdom. Each allows every man to speak, and act, and worship as he pleases, provided he helps to build it up. He may speak any other language, he may teach any faith in any prophet, priest or king who has ever been or ever may be spoken of among men. That which made Babel an impossibility in obtaining its professed object, viz.: the reaching to heaven, does the same for Masonry. There is utter confusion of tongues. Its builders may claim divine honors for Confucius, or for Christ, or for Mohammed, or believe in the book of Mormon, or in the Bible, or in the Shastas, or in the endless variety of theological teachings from paganism to Christianity, but if each and all of the builders unite to build up Masonry, as once Babel was attempted, as the way to heaven, then all is well in lodge morals.—T. H.

CHARITABLE ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

While attending court as a juror at one time, there came in a man with his boy, and a poor, ragged-looking lad he was. His father wanted the judge to sign a petition for him to be sent to the reform school. This father was well-dressed and had on an Odd-fellow pin. I thought, O, blessed charity; an institution claiming to care so bountifully for the widows and orphans, instead of doing one tithe of what they claim, are sending them off to poor houses and reform schools. Still claim your rights, my Odd-fellow brethren, but do not let the brethren keep on their pin when in court on such occasions.—T. K. Bufkin.

A VALUED COMMENDATION.

I have read and circulated our excellent Cynosure for upwards of ten years, and although I read many good papers, there is no other that takes the place and fills up the wants, not only of myself, but of the people, as does our national reform paper, giving saint and sinner their portion in due season. It grows better and better towards the mark of its high calling, viz., the subjugation and uprooting of the evils in church and state, especially the lodge, that pestilence that walketh in darkness, the secret empire of death. Thank God, who has sent forth a host to battle for the right, who are not afraid to die; men of ability, talent, and courage to meet the foe in his stronghold.—F. Leyde.

LITERATURE.

Great Thoughts from Greek Authors. By Craufurd Tait Ramage, LL. D. pp. 455. Price 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

It is one of the greatest delights of literature that we are by it made quiet companions of the great minds of all ages: and as the stereoscope gives us vivid glimpses of a thousand interesting places we can never hope to see, so in books we hold communion with minds of the past, the grandeur and originality of whose character will forever be impressed upon mankind. Such are the first thoughts on opening this tasteful little volume of extracts from sixty or more Greek writers. Beginning with Æschines, the orator, the generous rival and opponent of the great Demosthenes, down through Aratus, the poet from whom Paul quoted on Mars Hill, and scores of familiar or of almost unknown names, the list closes with Xenophon, the school-boys' favorite, in whose pages he finds an introduction to the choicest of human writings. This is a book which should be popular with students, and more so with those who have never studied Greek, for in brief compass and cheap form they have much that others have gained with long study and much care.

Edward Everett Hale, in the November number of the North American Review, makes a plea for "Half-Time in Schools," which every parent and every school board ought to consider seriously. His argument is based upon the assumption that our educational methods have been growing in system and severity, if not in perfection, for many years; and that the demands upon the pupil have constantly increased, until the necessities for grading have become imperative, and the peculiarities of the individual are almost entirely ignored. He makes a strong argument against the whole system, a protest against the grading and cramming that take so much of the vitality out of the education we are giving to the rising generation. "Woman as a Political Factor," by Judge Robert C. Pitman of Massachusetts opens the number, and takes substantially the ground advocated in the Cynosure in favor of the ballot for women. Judge Pitman does not think the decision of the question of the destruction of the home by woman's enfranchisement is involved in the right of suffrage. Prof. E. V. Gilliam, evidently a Southern writer, takes a dark view of "The African Problem." The facts that he gives as to the increase of the negroes in the United States, their peculiar situation and disposition, and the problem they will force upon us in the near future, call for consideration. We can commend "Progress in Naval Armament," by Hobart Pasha, who thinks the United States Government has been wise in not constructing a costly navy. Other articles are: "Friendship in Ancient Poetry," by Principal J. C. Shairp; "Herbert Spencer's Latest Critic," by Prof. E. L. Youmans; "Over-Illustration," by Charles T. Congdon; and "Restriction of the Suffrage," by William L. Scruggs.

The Faith Missionary, by Dea. O. M. Brown of Oberlin, O., appears in its last number for the year, and will interest every Christian who is engaged in fulfilling the last command of Jesus. The Faith missions in India and Bulgaria are especially reported.

Purdy's Fruit Recorder, Palmyra, N. Y., is a seasonable number, full of good things for the gardener, and the careful housewife who is arranging for the beautifying of her rooms will also find much to profit and instruct.

—It is stated that Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, has given another $10,000 toward African missions. His last gift is to the English Baptist Society, which had advanced from Stanley Pool to the Equator on the Congo, and proposes to establish stations on the chief southern tributaries. The first station above Stanley Pool will be Lukolela, which is 300 miles from the Pool. The society makes an earnest appeal for young men to go out as missionaries.

—This year the Zulus have for the first time had the whole Bible in their own language, and it has been exceedingly interesting to see the joy with which the native Christians received it. The year has been marked by a great temperance movement among the colonists, and also the native Christians. It has been preceded and followed by especial religious interest, and by a marked development of Christian character.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VI.—Nov. 9, 1884.—The Wisdom of Solomon. 1 Kings 10: 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, a greater than Solomon is here.—Matt. 12: 42.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Largeness of heart a characteristic of true wisdom. Vs. 1–5. We are told (chap. 4: 29) that God gave to Solomon not only wisdom and understanding, but largeness of heart. He did not keep his wisdom to himself either as a means of aggrandizement or as a mere selfish gratification, but seems to have acted on the sentiment of Garfield's favorite hymn:—

"Keep back no word of knowledge
That human hearts should know."

To his generous giving out of the treasures of wisdom with which God had endowed him (chap. 4: 34) we owe this most graceful episode in Bible history—the visit of the queen of Sheba. Largeness of heart, a universal benevolence including all mankind, is an unfailing characteristic of the wisdom which cometh from above. We see it in its highest manifestation in the Christian church. The wisdom which cometh from below is just as invariably narrow and clannish, seeking to benefit only itself, or at most a single race or class; and here again we find this opposite trait most clearly manifested in the great enemy and rival of the church—the secret lodge—which, pretending to impart knowledge of the highest importance, both for this life and the next, makes the candidate swear to hide it in his own breast from his neighbor, his brother, or even his wife. The fact that "he told her all her questions; there was not anything hid from the king which he told her not," is enough in itself to give the lie to the impudent lodge fable that Solomon was a Mason. There is no such "largeness of heart" in Masonry. No woman, white or colored, rich or poor, queen or slave, can be a recipient of the least of its mysteries. But here we notice another resemblance of Solomon to the great archetypal Wisdom as manifested in Jesus Christ. Women followed him, listened to his teachings, sat at his feet. The heavenly wisdom welcomes woman as the lower wisdom excludes her.

2. Christ the great Teacher. Vs. 6–10; Golden Text. Solomon was a sage, a poet, and a natural historian; yet the queen of Sheba seems to have been attracted chiefly by "his fame concerning the name of the Lord." Though probably herself a stranger to the true God, yet "she came from the uttermost parts of the earth" to learn about him. How many of us are filled with such a burning desire after God! Yet One greater than Solomon has appeared to tell us, not from inspiration, but from personal knowledge as a son, far more of his character and attributes than Solomon knew. This gentile queen in her parting speech recognizes two great principles: first, that wise rulers make a happy and prosperous people; and secondly, that a just and free government, like every other good thing, comes from God. In her gifts of gold and spices and precious stones, we see Solomon as a type of the Messiah, receiving the homage of heathen lands. "To him shall be given of the gold of Sheba." The rarest and most precious things shall be laid on his altar, not as a tax or as tribute, but as freewill offerings from hearts filled with praise and love.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What was Christ's command to his disciples? Matt. 10: 8, l. c. How freely did he give? Matt. 6: 31–34. What woman sat at his feet and heard his word? Luke 10: 39. What is woman's place in the Christian church? Gal. 3: 28; Acts 21: 9; Rom. 16: 1, 2. In the Masonic lodge?

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

"When the queen of Sheba" (Siren or an oath). Sheba or Sabæa was a wealthy region in Southern Arabia (Yemen), on the Red Sea. It was reckoned to be the richest, most highly favored and glorious land in the ancient world, and therefore was given the unique name of "The Happy."—Bahr. Her fame spread with and through that of Solomon, who was the beau ideal of a king throughout the East, for even the Koran mentions her visit to Solomon, and there are many legends about it among the Arabians and Abyssinians.—Bahr. Her visit has been rendered doubly memorable by the allusion made to it by Christ (Matt. 12: 42; Luke 11: 31).—Peloubet.

"She came to prove (to test) him with hard questions." Either with the riddles and enigmas so common in the East, or, more probably, in addition to these, the great religious and moral questions which will keep asking themselves in the heart of every thinking person. How many there are that are unanswerable except to Jesus Christ! This kind of question is implied (1) in the fact that she came because of his fame concerning the name of the Lord (ver. 1); and (2) in the fact that she communed with him of all that was in her heart (ver. 2).—Peloubet.

"And very much gold." According to ver. 10, a hundred and twenty talents. As a talent of gold is worth $26,280, her present of gold would amount to over three million dollars. Gold is not now found in Arabia, nor are there any traces of gold mines; but Strabo and Diodorus both state that it was found there, and, according to the latter, in nuggets of considerable size. (Dict. Bib. i. p. 767.) It is quite possible, however, that much of the "gold of Arabia" came to its emporiums from other lands. This particular present was doubtless brought by the queen because she had heard of the extensive use made of it by Solomon, and of the enormous quantities he required. "Strabo relates that the Sabæans were enormously wealthy, and used gold and silver in a most lavish manner in their furniture, their utensils, and even on the walls, doors, and roofs of their houses."—Rawlinson.

"Blessed be the Lord thy God." We cannot conclude from these words that the queen had formally confessed the one God of Israel. What she saw and heard excited her wonder to such a degree that it seemed to her directly imparted by the God Solomon adored, and for whom she became filled with reverence.—Lange. But it is quite possible, as Jewish writers say, that this queen was converted through Solomon's influence to the worship of the true God. But there is no record of her making any gift or offering in the Temple. —J., F. and Brown.

"Solomon gave.....whatsoever she asked." She was not the loser either by her long journey or her costly presents. Solomon's generosity must exceed hers. So he gave her "all her desire," "whatsoever she asked," "according to the hand of the king" (so the Heb.). We see here a picture of the recompenses of our God. "According to His riches in glory" (Phil. 4: 19). "Exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think" (Eph. 3: 20). His gifts, too, are "according to the hand of a king," and what a king! He cannot remain in any man's debt. "A cup of cold water only" he will abundantly recompense.—Hammond.

Great as Solomon was, Christ is far greater. (1) In glory, riches, fame. (2) In wisdom, which is divine, not human; spiritual as well as worldly; he renews the heart, not merely guides the conduct. (3) In generosity. (4) In power.

The queen of Sheba went to Solomon (1) in order to hear his wisdom. (2) She finds more than she expected. (3) She worships and praises God. (4) She returns in peace with rich gifts. So, in much higher degree, our going to Christ.

Solomon receiving the queen of Sheba a type of Christ. (1) He did not reject her. (2) He solved her questions, as Christ will solve all the mysteries and life questions we bring to him. (3) He showed her his glory. (4) He accepted her gifts though he was far richer than she. So Christ accepts our poor gifts, which are a token of our love and regard. (5) He gave her far greater gifts in return. So Christ loads us with benefits. Pardon, peace, strength, joy, etc.—of greater worth than gold or precious stones.

OBITUARY.

Another veteran soldier of the cross has laid his armor down.

Died at his residence at West Branch, Cedar county, Iowa, on the 28th of 7th month last, Elisha Stratton, in the seventieth year of his age.

The deceased was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, where he lived until his removal to Iowa in 1851, being among the earliest settlers of this part of the county. It was here, amid the rigors of a pioneer life, that the writer first knew him; and knew him to be a friend and a helper to the sick and the afflicted. He was naturally possessed of a quiet and amiable spirit, yet few have borne a more uncompromising testimony against all popular evils of the age. Slavery, war, intemperance and oath-bound secret orders he long regarded as among the greatest hindrances to Christian civilization. He was very fond of reading, and when feebleness and dimness of vision made it difficult, his Testament and the Christian Cynosure were among the last to be given up. He was a birthright member of the religious society of Friends, in which faith he lived and died. His widow, with whom he lived forty-five years under the marriage covenant, survives him.

A. C. Staples.

—Chief Justice English, of the Arkansas Supreme Court, died lately. For twelve years he had been Masonic Grand Master of the State. Such an incongruous combination of offices must have produced a hidden history which would be valuable as a warning to honest men.

The Boston Globe says: "Recently at Birmingham, Eng., a terrible sudden death occurred at a spiritualistic seance. It was a Sunday night, and a seance was being held in the Athenæum Assembly Rooms, quite a number being present. In the course of service, a medium, Mr. Benjamin Hawkes, a toy dealer, of New street, addressed the audience. He averred that at one seance he and Peter the apostle had clasped hands, and that he felt the firm clasp of Peter's hand in his own. From this manifestation he went on to argue that it was quite possible to understand how Thomas, the apostle, thrust his hand into the side of the personification of the Divine Lord. The instant these words were uttered, the speaker fell back on a chair behind him —dead. The meeting broke up amid the wildest excitement. At the inquest held subsequently the medical evidence was that death resulted from syncopal asphyxia. A verdict was rendered: He died by the visitation of God.

Hutchins, the strangler who was hanged in San Francisco last Friday, said Ingersoll's teachings was one of the influences that brought him to the gallows.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially by his wife. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. Price, fifteen cents. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Flizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St, Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } Editors.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1884.

Miss Flagg's introductory chapter to her story is simply charming. Mrs. Stowe wrote well before she produced Uncle Tom's Cabin. Miss Flagg's genius resembles Mrs. Stowe's, while her religious principles are better, far better.

Before another week the election, which has wavered like a balance, will be decided. The votes east for St. John will effect the country far more than either of the other parties; and the mixing of the American votes with the Prohibitionists is filling the Masons with dread and distrust of that party, and so purifying it. Let the last nerve be strained and fervent prayer be offered for Nov. 4th, and the voting that day.

Every act of Christ's hands was as if God had done it, and every time he opened his lips it was Eternity speaking; and he said the power of devils in and over men could only be dislodged by "prayer and FASTING." The reluctance of modern Christians to fast is sad proof that religion degenerates. There are two sorts of spirits, bad and good; and we wrestle against the first sort, and they are mighty. Assailing the lodge worship we assail them; and unless we fast, we are sure of defeat. Multitudes eat more on fast days than on others. They fear to hurt their health, while enthusiasts of science undertake to fast forty days, and claim that they do it. Read again the letter on fasting and prayer in last Cynosure.

THEORETICAL THEOLOGY.

We clip the following from the Interior, and second its severest condemnation of it:

"President Northrup, of Yale, gave the Congregational Club of St. Paul an account of the revolution which has quietly been accomplished in the Congregational churches of the East. He said:

It is a fact that the church has made a step toward a modified universalism. The revolution is not the effect of preaching, nor the work of any sect or school; hut of a silent change in the thoughts and methods of modern life.

Second, the sense of sin—the intense conviction of sin that prevailed in preaching and religious experience and literature—has almost entirely gone.

Third, a very diminished importance now attaches to creeds. Whether this has made Christianity more or less aggressive and effective remains to he seen."

The Cynosure confesses ignorance as to who "President Northrup of Yale" is. We have not heard of President Porter's death or removal. And a later Interior tells us that he disavows the doctrines imputed to him. But some such things have been said somewhere and by somebody, and we are thankful for the Interior's ability, clearness, and fidelity in meeting, exposing, and condemning departures from the simple Word of God, under pretence of improving human theories in theology. Andover professors, where we studied theology from the Bible, now speak of the necessity of "restating" eschatology, and "the future retribution of men." To us this seems to mean, restating and improving the doctrine of Christ, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal:" and one of these professors, and his outside supporters, more than hint the possibility of a post-mortem probation and conversion after death. Of course, when this is believed, prayer for the dead will be in order. Such talk is simply "vain babbling," in the Scripture meaning of the word.

The craftiness of Satan is fearful. In 1831–2 the slave-question opened on the churches, and the greatest power to suppress slavery and save the country from blood, was in the piety, learning, and sound doctrine of the Presbyterian church. Just then a deluge of theological discussion about abstruse points, split the General Assembly in 1837–8; the serpent of slavery lay sheltered under theological discussion, till it hung crape on every other door in the United States; and even the death of their first-born did not cure the Egyptian discussion, till in 1870–1 the split fragments united without recanting a word.

God is now putting the secret lodge system, with its denial of Christ. its dynamite, its blasphemy, its horrible subjugation of man to man, its blasphemy and mock salvation by ceremonies, on the anvil of discussion; and behold! we are threatened with another deluge of theological discussion to give church-leaders an excellent appearance of doing something while their young men by thousands and their money by millions are gliding ignorantly into the lodge.

Governor Yates on one occasion during the dark days of the war telegraphed to President Lincoln a brand new plan of his own for saving the country. Lincoln's telegram in reply was, "Wait, Dick, and see the salvation of the Lord!"

ALBERT PIKE VS. THE POPE.

A criticism and condemnation of the Pope's Encyclical has been written by the ex-confederate general Albert Pike. It runs through fifteen large double-column pages in the October number of the Voice of Masonry, and is an able and learned article. We can only compare and contrast the two.

The Pope teaches the fall of man, thus: "The human race, after its most miserable defection, through the wiles of the devil, from its Creator God, divided into two factions, the kingdom of God on earth and the kingdom of Satan."

General Pike's creed is stated thus: "By the ancient ritual and fundamental law of Masonry, no atheist can be made a Mason, any more than a woman ean, and no person can be initiated without kneeling for the benefit of lodge prayer, and professing that he puts his trust in God." Voice, p. 853. On page 849, Gen. Pike says: "It is the crowning glory of Freemasonry that it receives the Christian of every sect, the Moslem, and the Parsee, and unites them in the holy bonds of brotherhood." The god of the Parsee is fire.

Thus this false teacher completely annihilates and brushes aside the Bible revelation of God, and then presents himself as the champion of Protestantism against the Pope, and the defender of the "human race" against the Encyclical Letter!

But this head of Freemasons is not only the champion defender of the churches which Masonry disintegrates; but, with a cool effrontery which no harlot ever excelled, this man, who brought some fifty Indians to Washington, swore them to obedience in Federal Lodge, No 1, and by their aid raised two Indian regiments to scalp our wounded at the battle of Pea Ridge,—this man condemns the Pope for endangering "the principles dear to the people of the United States on which their system of government is builded!" That government which this false pretender and traitor sought to overthrow by the tomahawks of Indians, made more savage by Masonic cut-throat-oaths; and, in the words of Alex. H. Stephens, vice-president of the Confederacy, establish an empire with human slavery for its corner-stone! Surely, if the American people, above all, if the American churches, can endure such an imposture and sustain such wickedness, we have reason to expect another such scourge of God "as that brought by slavery.

WHAT KILLED SLAVERY?

In the Congregational Club, Dr. Hatfield, Methodist, scouted the idea advanced by Robert West, editor of the Advance, that the breaking of the Abolitionists from the Whig party, as the Prohibitionists now leave the Republican, for the sake of principle, formed the Republican party, and under God, destroyed slavery. Let us see.

The Democrats boldly championed slavery, and the Whigs nominated slave-holders as Tyler, Taylor, etc. Birney, mobbed out of his native South, started his paper in Cincinnati and abvocated abolition. He removed to New York, as Secretary of the American Anti-slavery Society, leaving his paper, the Philanthropest to Dr. Bailey, who took it to Washington and published it as the National Era, with three-inch planks in his office windows to guard his type-setters from pistol-balls.

Myron Holley, Gerrit Smith, Leavitt and the Tappans nominated Birney for the Presidency in 1840, and he received 7,000 votes. In 1844 he received 67,000 votes. In 1848 Lovejoy, Chase, the Tappans, etc., the same party east and west, cast above 200,000 votes for slavery-restriction, which was the equivalent of abolition; so regarded by slave-holders, and non-slave-holders, as restricting horses within county lines, forbidding their sale out of the county, would kill horse property in that county. There was a small dissent under Gerrit Smith. In 1852 we gave a strong vote for John P. Hale; in 1856, gave Fremont more votes than Buchanan received; and, in 1860, elected Lincoln by the same party, under the same leaders, viz., Chase, Lovejoy, Giddings, Wade, and others. The National Era, Emancipator, Western Citizen,—all our Abolition organs, and all our leaders in the West, with Sumner, Gillette, Palfrey, Pomeroy, and the rest in the East, manned, guided, and, with their converts, made up the party right through from Birney in 1840 to Lincoln in 1860. That the party was the same throughout, every national reader of the papers of that day knows, as the fact that "Black Republicans" and Black Abolitionists meant the same party, proves. Our first accessions were from the "barn-burners" (Democrats) from New York, Senator Morris (Democrat) from Ohio with Abolition Whigs on the Western Reserve under Wade and Giddings. Even the Garrison clique, though non-voters, hailed our triumphs as theirs when achieved. The party organs, party doctrines were the same throughout, only changed by increase, from Lovejoy and Birney to Lincoln. Lincoln's famous saying, "If slavery ain't wrong, then nothing's wrong," is simple abolitionism; and though he changed the word to "abolishment" and shrunk, at times, from its application to the South in its wrath, through most of the South, he and Thad. Stevens were supposed to be negroes. We saw and conversed last year with intelligent educated men in the South, who, till told the contrary, supposed Stevens was a mulatto, and "Black Abolitionist" was the name the Republicans went by from the Senate to the bar-room, and proves the moral and actual identity of the Republican with the Free Soil and Liberty parties. To deny that identity discredits a man's candor or intelligence. A party or a river is the same after as before it has received accessions. And if we had not voted on principle, in small but increasing minorities, there would have been no Republican party and slavery would not have fallen. We are sorry to see men like Dr. Hatfield, good men, and candid, in other things, carried by partyism away from reason and historic truth. Mr. West was right.

—An error at the bottom of the 3d page seems to cut off our story before the time.

—Pres. J. Blanchard spoke at Pullman and LaGrange, suburbs of this city, last week. Secretary Stoddard preached on the Sabbath at LaSalle, Ill.

—We are happy to publish, as a good example to others, that the College Springs, Iowa, Congregational church, Rev. Henry Avery, sends $12, and the College church and Sabbath school at Wheaton about the same amount, which has been forwarded by the N. C. A. treasurer to Rev. John G. Fee, at Berea, Ky.

—A number of letters on the political issues received too late for our present number, the last before election, will be used if possible hereafter. For our contributors' sake we should be glad of a supplement.

—Rhode Island friends will note the request of Bro. A. M. Paull, on another page. His excellent, courteous and convincing reply to the assertions of Dr. Tait, the temberance lodge champion, will be continued in another number. We are happy also to say that he promises a little on the anti-secret work in Rhode Island. Through his efforts a Prohibition meeting was held at his Riverside home, last week, which will have its effect next Tuesday.

—Thos. W. Organ is denounced by the New York Witness for a fraudulent circular sent out to temperance voters, Father Lyman writes, urging that American voters be warned not to respond to his circular.

—The Weekly Review, Birmingham, Alabama, prints the American platform, after the names of St. John and Daniel and the State electors.

—During the past week it has heen interesting to note the able contributions to the Wesleyan, on prohibition in in politics. The Advance New York letter says the Congregational ministers of that city will give St. John a strong vote. The Midland, of St. Louis, the Standard, of this city, the Baptist Weekly, of New York, all speak for prohibition; while among prominent clergymen the past few days has given to the world such St. John voters as these: Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota; Joseph Cook, Washington Gladden, of Columbus, O.; Dr. Scudder, of of the Plymouth church, Chicago; Phillips Brooks, of Boston; Drs. Talmage, Justin D. Fulton, Jesse B. Thomas and Chas. F. Deems, of New York and Brooklyn.

There is no such thing as a party, properly understood, without a principle. When it ceases to advocate some principle, it becomes a faction, and factions are essentially selfish. A faction viewed in this light is simply a party gone to seed—a party afflicted with dry rot. To factions no honest man owes loyalty. Let every man save his vote by casting it "where alone broad principles, deep convictions and earnest advocacy are found"—that is with the Prohibition party.—Wisconsin Prohibitionist.

The Brooklyn Daily Times, one of the leading Republican party papers of the country, referring to the Prohibitionists, says:

"They know that the Republican party is not and cannot be made a Prohibition party. The Republican party cannot and will not accept their platform."

Very well, then, please stop denouncing Prohibitionists because they do not vote your ticket. Cease asking Prohibitionists to vote with the Republican party when you say distinctly you will not do anything for them. Now that Prohibitionists know exactly what you will do, as well as what you will not do, they will know exactly how to vote without your advice.—Nat. Temp. Advocate.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Dear Cynosure:—The noteworthy events in this city during the past week are the address of the Hon. Wm. Daniel before the Prohibition Club of this District in Masonic Temple on the 17th. The club has been growing, and its regular meetings on each Monday evening are full of interest. We had hoped to have gotten St. John, but found in Mr. Daniel an able representative of the cause. The meeting, which was not large, was made up of earnest people and the address was able and timely. It was followed by able remarks by Dr. Munson of this city, Rev. Dr. Harris of New York, and Prof. E. D. Bailey. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel left the same night for Alabama, where he has engagements for some time to come.

On Sabbath afternoon Mrs. Pearson, vice-president of the British W. C. T. U. gave a most interesting address in the Congregational church, nor should I forget that another distinguished Briton, Dr. Newman Hall, gave two most able and excellent sermons in the Congregational and New York Avenue Presbyterian churches.

But in Job's time, when the sons of God came together Satan came also —and it has been so ever since. This is Masonic week. The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons are holding their biennial convention at their new temple on Third street, N. W. There is said to be a large attendance from numerous States, and the delegates are taking in the sights of the city. The "allocution" was pronounced on the 20th by Gen. Albert Pike, Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander. On the 22d they dedicate their new temple, and on the evening of the 24th the Mithra Lodge of Perfection is to celebrate a Lodge of Sorrow in the First Congregational church!

Nor are these the only Masons that are attracting public attention. The Provincial Grand Lodge of the Royal Order of Scotland (distinct from the Scottish Rite) have been in session and initiated many into their mysteries. On the 21st they held a grand entertainment at the Riggs House, at which the same distinguished Pike presided. It is said that ladies were present, which was an innovation on established usage.

Of the character of Gen. Pike; his inciting by means of Masonry the peaceable Creek Indians to savage warfare against the nation; that he led them in that war; and that they have had twenty years war amongst themselves as the result, are facts well known to your readers; but no one can estimate the wrong done to the Indians and to the cause of Christian civilization.

The officers of the Congregational church are doubtless aware of these facts, and that Gen. Pike and other prominent leaders are as noted for their infidelity as for their Masonry; and nothing is more patent in our national history than that every revival of Masonry has been attended with a decline in religion and morals. They ought to know, too, that besides building up a privileged class to prey on society at large, Masonry constitutes a heathen religion, and is in every sense destructive to Christianity. They have been very jealous of the sacredness of their house. They refused it for Mr. Daniel to speak in, and have, I believe, granted it to no outsiders, except this and one other secret society. They evidently pay their respects to the Masons on the same principle that heathen offer sacrifices to devils. They fear to offend them.

But, seriously, when a Christian church comes under such influences it is quite appropriate that there should be a convocation of sorrow, so only, they sorrowed for sin. Oh that some one would "Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly, and let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar. Let them say, Spare thy people, oh Lord, and give not thy heritage to reproach; why should the heathen rule over them?"

The Mormon question continues to be perplexing. It will become more and more so. It is the rod held over a guilty nation until we renounce our other forms of national wickedness. The recent trial for polygamy before the U. S. District Court for Utah, discloses two facts: 1, that no records are kept of Mormon marriages; and 2, that Mormons regard their oaths of secrecy as justifying sworn falsehood in the civil courts. In this respect they are not peculiar. Freemasons everywhere speak of their obligation of secrecy as more sacred than any other oath could impose. In the Pennsylvania legislature and elsewhere they refused to give testimony that implied a violation of Masonic obligation. So generally have the people been educated in the false notion that these extra-judicial oaths of secrecy are inviolable, that they are ready to excuse even Mormons in positive perjury.

There are two things essential to success of any law against polygamy; first, that all marriages be made a matter of public record; and second, that all institutions be open to governmental inspection. But this would be a fatal blow to the whole lodge system. It is not strange that our Masonic legislators hesitate to strike it.

CONNECTICUT STATE CONVENTION.

The Connecticut Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, met Oct. 7th at seven P. M., in Mission Hall, Willimantic, Conn. It was called to order by the President, and after half an hour spent in devotional exercises, was addressed by Rev. H. H. Hinman of Washington, D. C., on the relation of secret societies to Christianity.

On Wednesday, Oct. 8th, met at nine A. M., and after half an hour spent in prayer and remarks, the secretary's report was approved. The chair then announced the names of committees on enrollment, on nominations, and on resolutions. The committee on nominations recommended the names of John A. Conant, Willimantic, for president; James Reid of Simsbury, vice-president; George Smith of Willimantic, secretary; Charles T. Collins of Windsor, treasurer; and a vice-president for each county; which report was adopted. The committee on resolutions reported a set of resolutions which were adopted. [These were printed last week.] The president and secretary were instructed to correspond with the officers of the Massachusetts Association and the friends of reform in Rhode Island in reference to the organization of a Southern New England Association, embracing the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, and the appointment of an agent and lecturer for the same.

Rev. H. H. Hinman reported three weeks' work, in which he visited the counties of Windham, Hartford, Middler, New Haven and New London, also Rhode Island, and had spoken eleven times. The report was approved.

At the afternoon session addresses were made by Rev. A. M. Abgren of Hartford, Rev. H. H. Hinman of Washington, Edwin M. Curtis of Bristol, Charles T. Collins of Windsor, Mrs. Windmiller of Willimantic, and Philip Bacon of Weatogue.

A vote of thanks was passed to Ezra A. Cook of Chicago for his donation of books to the convention; also a vote of thanks to the friends in Willimantic for their generous entertainments. At the evening session Rev. H. H. Hinman delivered an address on the relation of secret societies to civil government, after which the convention adjourned.

THE ATTACK UPON STARRY.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED AT THE KANSAS STATE CONVENTION.

At the annual meeting of the Christian Association of Kansas opposed to secret societies held in the Senate chamber at Topeka, Sept. 26th, 1883, Rev. Jos. Collins, D. D., of Emporia, presiding, Rev. Paul S. Feemster was unanimously elected agent for said Association to prosecute its work by such means as would promote the objects of the society.

Mr. Feemster opened correspondence with officers in several ecclesiastical bodies, and subsequently received official indorsement and assurance of co-operation from conferences, presbyteries, etc., at their stated sessions. Pastors of Free Methodist, Wesleyan, Associate Presbyterian, Reformed Presbyterian, United Presbyterian and other churches invited Mr. Feemster to address their people, and churches took collections in aid of the work. His expositions of the secret system were acceptable and his deportment as a minister and Christian gentleman above reproach.

There were some who desired to witness degree work in open lodge, and at the request of such brethren the assistance of Samuel E. Starry was obtained for one month. Pursuant to arrangements Bro. Starry began his work in the Congregationalist church at Pearlette, where Mr. Feemster and family worship. From this point they went to Garfield, Sterling, Kingman City, reaching Dunlap, Morris Co., on the 19th of September. They were cordially received by Christian friends, at whose solicitation they came to work the first and third degrees of Freemasonry.

Up to this time nothing had occurred seriously interfering with their plans, or curtailing the freedom of speech which every citizen of Kansas is supposed to enjoy, since the expulsion of Quantrell and his followers from the State.

Giving little attention to rumors and threats afloat, friends proceeded with preparations for the contemplated services. There is in Dunlap a school for the freedmen under the general care of Associate Presbyterians, but including in its board of directors Rev. Richard Cordley, D. D., of Lawrence; Hon. A. B. Jetmore of Topeka; Rev. H. L. Browlee of Newton, and nine other distinguished clergy and citizens of Kansas, with a roll of 175 pupils in attendance the past year. On the ground floor of the building owned and occupied by this freedmen's school is a chapel, which was obtained for the purpose of giving illustrated lectures on Freemasonry. Notice was given and at 7: 30 o'clock P. M. a fair-sized audience, composed of teachers, pupils, and men, women and children from the town gathered, little thinking that their peaceful assembly was so soon to be broken up by a boisterous and lawless crowd.

Mr. Starry, assisted by Rev. P. S. Feemster and others, proceeded to give the programme announced for the evening. That men of the "baser sort" were there very soon became apparent from the tumult and threats in the rear of the hall and outside the building. Finding remonstrance vain and the services seriously interrupted, Mr. Starry asked if there was an officer of the peace present. On being informed that there was he requested him to assist in keeping order, to which request his Honor (?) the justice replied, "I am not running this institution." Encouraged by evident cowardice, if not the active co-operation of an officer of the law, the crowd grew more turbulent, mingling eggs with threats, yells and curses, until the scene became too exciting for his Honor (!) and so he withdrew, leaving Mr. Starry and his associates along with the women and children to protect themselves as best they could. Fortunately, all escaped without serious injury, though some were in a "sorry plight" from the effects of "Masonic charity."

The riot of the night preceding was the all absorbing topic in Dunlap Sept. 20th. As usual in such cases there were "diversities of tongues," but the rioters conceded that the expose was correct, and that for that reason it was an unlawful proceeding, and declared that the third degree should not be given. The principal of the public school in Dunlap, and school examiner in Morris county, was very active and assumed to control the movement when he proposed a compromise by allowing the discussion to go on undisturbed provided degree work was omitted. Friends were unwilling to make this concession but respectfully insisted on their right peacefully to assemble and conduct the exercises of their meeting as they saw proper. They were not as yet convinced that free speech was not a right to be enjoyed in Dunlap without peril to the property and persons of its Christian citizens.

As threats were made it was deemed prudent to take all reasonable precaution and avoid giving the slightest provocation to harsh or violent proceedings. The rostrum was protected by nailing a heavy blackboard over a window from which it could be reached with missiles thrown from outside, and the services of a constable or some officer who had authority to keep the peace was sought, but no such person could be found.

At the hour appointed, Bro. Starry began work on the third degree of Masonry. The hall was well filled and a large crowd had gathered outside. Desperate men who had nursed their anger through the day were there under cover of night to incite those who were less malignant to deeds of violence and fire the motley crowd with the spirit of a reckless mob. Reports from firearms mingled in wild confusion with "border ruffian" yells infuriated the frenzied rabble until brutal passions overleaped every barrier of law or humanity. Dashing a stone of many pounds weight through the window and clearing the way of obstructions, these defenders of "Ancient and Honorable Freemasonry," exemplified their "brotherly love" by pouring a volley of eggs and stones in upon the stage where the work was quietly proceeding, and upon a promiscuous audience, whose cries of terror added to the roar and rage of the mob, can better be imagined than described.

The candidate was just emerging from the preparation room, "duly and truly prepared," when a jagged stone, weighing ten ounces, struck Mr. Starry on the left cheek, just below his eye, with such force that he would have fallen to the floor had not friends sprang forward to protect and assist him. Doubtless thinking their purpose accomplished in adding another victim of Masonic vengeance to the list of brutal murders, the mob retired, and Bro. Starry was removed, without interruption, to a room above the hall, and medical aid immediately summoned. Dr. Showers examined and dressed the wound, remarking that had the stone struck half an inch further back, instantaneous death would have resulted.

When, after the lapse of several hours, Bro. Starry returned to consciousness, he was greatly surprised to find himself in bed surrounded by friends, and inquired what it all meant. So great was the force of the blow that he became instantly oblivious of all that subsequently transpired in the hall.

Although the mob had dispersed, there were occasional reports from pistols and other "signs and tokens" which caused apprehensions of another attack, should it come abroad that their intended victim was only stunned, not dead. What had transpired already made the law-abiding citizens of Dunlap suspicious of that school of "curious arts" which had graduated men from the "secret chambers of its imagery" fitted to do the work of assassins. Perhaps, too, memories of the raiding and sacking of Lawrence by Quantrell and his riders may have suggested what bad men are capable of doing, in defense of a bad cause, and that it is not safe to confide in the generosity or humanity of those who "hate the light," even though they are neighbors, or members of the same church. At any rate guards were set, and suspicious points carefully watched, so as to intercept any attempts of further violence. And it is quite possible that these precautionary measures were wise, for just about the day's dawn there appeared at the foot of the stairs a rough and mysterious person, who wished to know how Mr. Starry was, and said, "I wish to see him." When asked what he wanted his reply was, "I have heard that Starry is a great man, and I want to see him." The

THE HOME.

I GO TO LIFE.

I go to life, not death;
From darkness to life's native sky;
I go from sickness and from pain
To health and immortality.
Let my farewell, then, be tearless
Since I bid farewell to tears;
Write this day of my departure
Festive in your coming years.

For toil there comes the crowned rest;
Instead of burdens, eagle's wings;
And I, even I, this life-long thirst
Shall quench at everlasting springs.
Let our farewell, then, be tearless,
Since I bid farewell to tears;
Write this day of my departure
Festive in your coming years

God lives! Who says that I must die!
I cannot while Jehovah liveth.
Christ lives! I cannot die, but live;
His life to me He ever giveth.
Let our farewell, then, be tearless,
Since I bid farewell to tears;
Write this day of my departure
Festive in your coming years.

RECREATION.

We talk about recreation. Prayer is the Christian's recreation. It recreates him by bringing the Divine life within him. And the only way for us to get rested when we are tired is to go to God. It is the plainest and simplest thing possible that we are to do when we are weary. We are to take a day's vacation, and retire with the Lord. I will not glory, save in mine infirmities, but I can say, truly, that the happiest days I have ever known have been those of such retirement—going apart with only three present: God and the Bible, and myself. These seasons of waiting on God are not so common as they have been in other days. And that is the reason Christians are so jaded and dull. Honest old Scotch saint was she who said that her idea of heaven was that it would be a place where she could sit all day long in a clean white apron and sing psalms. Don't you see how the idea came to her? She knew what good times she had with the Lord were when her kitchen work was done for the day, and she had put on her clean attire and sat down with her Bible; and what better could heaven be than just an extension of all this? O, we do not have good times enough with our heavenly Father; we don't stay with him, and get refreshed and re-invigorated by him, and that is the reason we are so dull and weary. "They that wait upon the Lord"—that means, you see, to tarry with him. Not a few moments snatched in the morning and a hurried and fragmentary greeting, as two friends salute each other when they are hurrying to business—but a real all-day's or all-week's visit with the Lord; that is resting. And I do not believe a man ever tried this who was not strong and tireless, and well-equipped for service. Luther used often to spend three hours a day with God. And that is where he got strength to wield such sledge-hammer blows against bigotry and superstition. John Welch, son-in-law of Knox, often prayed seven hours a day; and if anybody had worked miracles in modern days, you will find them in the mighty deeds of preaching and soul-saving which he wrought. And this is the promise, that "they that wait upon the Lord, shall mount up on wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." Strange is it that they begin with flying and end with walking.—Rev. A. J. Gordon.

PREPARED VESSELS.

"Prepared unto every good work." What is this preparation? In other words, if the vessel is set apart and purified, is it not prepared? Truly, it is ready for use, but not as yet prepared for service.

When visiting the pottery, I observed the various processes through which the vessel passed till completed. Having made a purchase, the vessel was ready for usefulness in the home, but must needs be prepared for its special work through being filled. While empty, though cleansed, it could not serve its purpose nor fulfill its mission. And hereby the lesson was enforced upon me, that we fail in recognizing the Sovereign Potter's design when we desire only an abiding emptiness. It is of paramount importance that self should be thrust out, and kept out, but the filling up with divine material is an absolute essential.

"None of self, but all of Thee."

A filled vessel, then, is a vessel "prepared for every good work." Nor is consecration a fact in personal experience until the emptying of every defiling element becomes ensured by the filling up out of the fullness that is in Christ. This essential feature of consecration was typified by the priest's presentation of sacrifice, and incense, which filled his hands. When Moses was ordained of God to consecrate the priesthood, one part of that act was in filling their hands, as symbolic of the powers and ministry of the office with which they were invested. (Exod. 28: 41; 19: 9, margin.)

So, then, the consecration of the priests was the action of another upon them; as also their priestly act upon others, as, for instance, upon the cleansed leper was for their consecration. And we must insist on this, that while the believer is said to consecrate himself by a hearty submission to Christ, yet, truly, consecration is the action of the Great High Priest upon him in separating, cleansing and filling that believing soul with the Spirit of purity and of truth. Nor is this consecration an undefined and ecstatic emotion, called by some "full salvation," an expression un-Scriptural in that application of it. Full salvation will not be an accomplished result until the coming of the Lord, when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and the corruptible body sleeping in death be crowned with incorruptible life. Not until we are like the Son of God, when glorified together with him, shall we have attained unto complete salvation, to be revealed in the hour of his second advent. Blessed be God, we have the earnest of that salvation now, in his life communicated to us, and by the Spirit dwelling in us. (John 5: 24; 1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.)

In Rom. 15: 13, Paul prayed thus for the saints: "Now may the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost." The Holy Spirit makes the hope real to the instructed heart, and its anticipations fill us with joy and peace in believing. Joy and peace—the peace that floweth as a river, the result of quietness and assurance; and joy, like the bubbling brook fed by unseen sources, welling up within, giving strength for labor, and gladness in service. The fullness of joy and peace is our birthright privilege. "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God. . . . . And not only so, but we also joy in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." These are, however, but results in themselves which flow from an acquaintance with the truth of the Gospel and faith in the Son of God.—Geo. C. Needham.

WHAT THE BIBLE IS FOR.

A thoroughly sensible answer was that given recently by Rev. M. C. Stebbins, when examined for the pastorate of the Congregational church at Cornwall. President Hamlin asked him if we have the right to fix the Bible over to suit ourselves. Mr. Stebbins replied: "I am accustomed to look upon the Bible as intended to fix us over." The incident was encountered in the Congregationalist last Sabbath afternoon, and in the evening an article was found in the Advance asserting, with reason and truth, that the internal evidence of the Bible is unanswerable, and closing with these words: "The prevailing argument in defense of the Gospel will always be its adaptation to the needs of man. So the fitness of Christ's words to the soul which seeks for God is the sufficient and the highest possible evidence of their divineness." Not long after, the last number of Jerry McAuley's Paper was taken up, and there were recorded, not one or two, but columns of testimonies from once vicious men and women to the power of the Gospel to make men new creatures in Christ. One had been a believer ten years, another five, another four, and though each had passed through severe struggles, strong temptations and sore trials, he or she had been kept by the power of God through faith, unto salvation.

The world is becoming more and more practical every day, and becoming so through the spirit of the Bible, which more and more enters into the intellectual and moral life of the world. "By their fruits ye shall know them," the immortal word of him who spake as never man spake, is becoming more and more the rule of judgment the world over. Speculations that make no one better give no consolation in trouble, no strength under trial, no hope for the future, will prove to be only a temporary amusement. Men will soon return to the true light and life of the world.

Some one weary with doubts, perplexed by conjectures, by the oppositions of science, troubled by theological novelties, may read these lines. He or she may have found no support, no life, no purifying power, no comfort in the partial or total unbelief which has been listened to and entertained. We entreat that soul to read the Gospel, to accept the Gospel, to look to Jesus, to cry to him, to cast itself upon him. He can and will do all that is needful for every one who trusts in him. He can and does save to the uttermost all who come unto God by him. Give up, friend, every attempt to fix the Bible to suit yourself, and submit yourself to it to be fixed by it for this life and the life to come.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE JAPANESE CONVERT'S STORY.

One of the converts of a recent revival in Japan relates his experience as follows: "For thirty years I have been seeking rest for my soul. I sought it first in Buddhism, then in Shintoism, but found it not. In my happiest moments I felt that there was still a lack. I could not tell what it was, but I knew I needed something I did not have, and did not know where or how to get it to make me happy. I heard of Christianity, and determined to come to Nagasaki (he lived a hundred miles distant) to see if I could learn how to obtain it. I came into this church and heard the Christians tell what joy and peace they felt in their souls, and I said, 'That is just what I want.' I determined to pray to the Christian's God. He heard my prayer, and has given me what my soul has so long been crying for—peace, joy. During any one hour since I believed, I have had more joy than in all the years I was a Buddhist. The Christian religion is the true religion."—Selected.

The grandest motive power for the death of sin, is the death of Christ; and nothing makes us so eager to die unto sin, as Christ's death for sin. Off goes the filthy raiment at the sight of the glorious, spotless righteousness, which is freely presented to every needy sinner in Christ Jesus.

It is pleasant to feel impelled to continue one's work by a growing conviction of its importance and value; more happy still to be constrained to go on by dear love of the service itself; but best of all to be so blessedly certain of the Lord's will and help in the matter that one dare not give up!—Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon.

INCENSE. Read Exod. 30.

Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice. Psa. 141: 2.

What was incense? Exod. 30: 34–38.

What did the offering up of sweet incense signify? Mal. 1: 11; Rev. 5: 8; 8: 3, 4.

Why was incense offered up every morning and evening? Psa. 5: 3; 55: 17; Luke 1: 9, 10.

Why must it be offered upon the altar? John 16: 23; Eph. 2: 18.

What did the sweet fragrance of the incense represent? Acts 10: 4; Dan. 10: 12.

UNNECESSARY WORDS.

The habit of using more words than are necessary in the expression of thought is almost universal. Sometimes it takes the form of employing unmeaning exclamations; sometimes that of putting into a sentence words or phrases which do not add to its force or make it clearer; sometimes that of constructing long phrases when short ones would be better. As an example of the first, let any one make a record of the number of times he will hear sentences begun with a "Well!" or an "Oh!" or a "Say!" or some other idle word, during the next hour after reading this article.

To say "Well, I don't think so," means exactly the same as "I don't think so." "Say, will you come with me?" The person addressed will be likely to "say," whether he is commanded to do so or not.

Perhaps there are no more common faults of speech than the unnecessary use of the word "got," and of the phrases "you know," and "says he," or "said I." A story is told of a Frenchman who had been talking with a lady much given to the use of "says he," and its sister phrases. "Do you understand me?" she asked.

"Oui, oui," he replied; "but vat ees dat sezai, sezee? Ees it vat you call to swear?"

The same Frenchman, or another, became much irritated with a gentleman's "you knows," and at last interrupted him.

"Pardon, monsieur, but you say to me, 'You know, you know,' but I do not know. If, zen, I do not know, why say you to me, 'You know'?"

How many of us say "I have got it," when we mean "I have it?" The inveterate use of "got" is illustrated by the manner in which a man once aroused his wife in the morning: "Get up, Jane! Breakfast has got to be got, and you have got to get up and get it."

Bad habits of speech are much easier to acquire than to abandon. One hears "well," "got," and "says he," from a hundred mouths, and unconsciously drops into the habit of using them. As proof of this we suggest that families make an agreement to keep a record for one day, or for one week, of the number of times each member uses either one or all of the needless words we have mentioned. We venture the prediction that if the account be faithfully kept, few of our readers will have an average of less than ten black marks a day, however hard they may try to avoid welling and you knowing.—Youth's Companion.

HOW PRESIDENTS ARE ELECTED.

In this year of the presidential election it may be well to describe the process by which the people of this country make choice of their chief magistrate. As is well known, although party conventions designate the candidates, the people do not vote for them directly.

Each State is entitled to a number of "Electors" equal to that of its Senators and Representatives in Congress. These Electors are chosen by the people upon a general ticket in each State, so that all the Electors from one State will be Republicans, and all those from another State Democrats. The choice of Electors is made in every State on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, this year the 4th of the month.

The Electors then meet on the first Wednesday of December, this year the 3d, and vote for a President and Vice-President. Their votes are transmitted to Washington, where they are counted in the presence of both houses of Congress. If no person has a majority of all the votes for President, the election devolves upon the House of Representatives.

In that case each State has one vote, and a majority of all the States voting is required to effect a choice. The vote of a State is given as a majority of the Representatives of that State direct. If the delegation is equally divided, the vote is cast blank. Thomas Jefferson, at his first election, and John Quincy Adams, were elected by the House of Representatives.

As there is now only a very small chance that the Electors to be chosen in November will fail to make a choice, it is not necessary to go further into that alternative method of election. But it may be interesting to give some facts about early elections, when the system of choosing Electors was different from what it is now.

The Constitution says that the Electors shall be appointed by each State, "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." The first election was ordered, by the Congress of the Confederation, in a resolution adopted on the 13th of September, 1788, to take place on the first Wednesday of January, 1789. There were then no railroads or steamboats, and there was barely time in the three and a half months intervening for the Legislatures to be assembled.

It would have been wholly impossible for the Legislatures to have passed laws giving the people the right to choose Electors, and to make the needed preparations for the election, before the time appointed for it to take place.

Accordingly all the Electors, without exception, who voted for Washington in 1789, were appointed by State Legislatures.

The system of popular elections made slow progress. A few States adopted it early, but the most of them continued to make the choice through the medium of their Legislatures. As late as 1820 nearly one-half of the States clung to that system. The voters of New York did not choose Electors directly until 1824.

But even those States which allowed the people a vote for the Electors, had not a uniform system. In 1820 Maryland and one or two other States chose electors by single districts. Maryland had nine districts for the choice of Congressmen and eleven districts for Electors: Each voter gave a ballot for one Elector only.

At the same time Massachusetts, with some other States, also chose Electors by districts, but these districts were the same as those for the choice of Representatives; so that each voter cast a ballot for one district Elector and for two "at large." In still other States the choice of all the Electors was by general ticket.

The tendency has been pretty steadily to uniformity; but in some cases acts have been passed which would now be regarded as atrociously unfair. In the early part of the century the New Jersey Legislature passed a law permitting the people to choose Electors. Just before a certain election was to be held, the Legislature, which was controlled by one party, foreseeing that under the new system the opposite party would be successful, repealed the law only a few days before the election was to take place, and chose the Electors itself.

At the election of 1860 all the States except South Carolina chose Electors by popular vote. After the war the Florida Legislature chose Electors for a time. In 1876 the Legislature of Colorado chose the first Electors for that new State. At present every State has the system of a popular vote and general ticket. But the Legislature of any State may adopt a different system at any time at its pleasure.—Youth's Companion.

RED CLOUD TO THE SIOUX SCHOLARS.

Red Cloud, the well-known Sioux chief, lately visited the government school for Indians at Carlisle, Pa., and addressed the scholars in his own language. A prize of $3 was offered for the best translation of this speech. We give a portion of the successful report, made by Luther Standing-Bear:

"You seem like my grandchildren; and now I went pass through the shops and saw what you can be done. I saw the shoemaker, harnessmaker, tailor, carpenter, tinner, blacksmith, and they all doing well. Here you see I wear a boots which is you make it. I was surprise that the blacksmith doing very good. Also the girls can washing clothes and sewing. Also I went pass through the school-rooms and I saw some of you can write very fast, and read, and I was glad. Now, this is the thing what we send you here for, to learn white men's way. There is two roads, one is good and one is what we call a devil road. Another thing is you know, if who do nothing, just put his hand on his back and lie down, so any dime not come to in his pocket itself, so you must do something with your hands. Now you must not homesick any, but you must try to be good and happier."—St. Nicholas.

TEMPERANCE.

"SHE DIED FOR ME!"

"She loved him!"

So said one neighbor to another, as they stood by the bed on which they had laid all that was mortal of Rebecca Marvin. It was the old story. She had married Joel Marvin five years before, and for a time all went well. But Joel loved a social glass; at first for company's sake, to be sure, but at last for the liquor's sake. And what infernal helpers are those saloon companions! With moral sense so deadened that they no longer feel pity, they drag a man, with blear eyed persistency, down the road to ruin, and think themselves the gainers if they make five cents out of the wreck. They are worse than brutes, for even brutes have pity on one another. But God knows what to do with such men. Their place is prepared. And when, at the final judgment, they are consigned to eternal fellowship with the demons whose work they did at the saloon door, all the saved universe shall cry, "Amen; it is just!"

The first time Joel staid out late at night was when two cousins came to see him. Why they were not smitten with the leprosy, or palsied in their tracks, before they came, we do not know; God knows. They proposed to go out and get a glass apiece; in memory of old times, they said, but really as a foretaste of everlasting woe; and they staid out until after midnight. Joel was ashamed of himself, but what good did that do? He did not say no, the next time he was asked. It would have been wrong to have knocked his tempter down, but not as wrong as it was to go with him. And so he slipped along until he had a drunkard's throat, that itched for liquor.

At last matters got so bad that Rebecca's father took her away, but she was not at rest.

"He'll be worse if I'm not there, father," she said, "for he has no one else to live for."

"Then let him die!" retorted her father.

"He's my husband," was all she could reply, as tears welled up in her eyes. "If only there were no saloons!" she continued, after a little. How many helpless women and children have wished the same? And some of them are God's own. And yet those saloons are authorized to run by the votes of Christian men. Christian men! Who shall dare to take counsel of that God who is the Avenger, and then assure any such man that it is good for him that he has been born? See that fearful PROMISE OF THE MILLSTONE in Matt. 18: 6.

The end of it was that Joel made a solemn agreemeet to reform, and Rebecca returned with him. But it did not last. He often "reformed," indeed, but some cursed acquaintance would waylay him, and then he was sure to come around to the saloon again. Perhaps the saloon-keeper was an honest, God-fearman, who would not sell liquor to a customer who was being ruined by it! Did you ever see such a saloon-keeper? Joel Marvin never did. Health, wealth, home, character, even love of life and hope of heaven, went remorselessly into the dramseller's till. All chance of livelihood seemed gone; work, credit, everything. All gone but Rebecca. She went last—to her father's again.

But Joel repented, with every appearance of sincerity. He quit drinking, and found work, and from love to him, and new hope in him, Rebecca again returned. Did he do better? Yes, for a time, until the saloon-keeper had a wedding anniversary party, and there was free beer. Then Joel fell. Slowly Rebecca wasted away. She worked hard; she fared hard. Joel never abused her, but with trouble and toil she was wearing out. They sometimes talked it over.

"I am not worthy of you," Joel would say.

"Only for the drink," Rebecca would reply. "O Joel, do quit it, and I will stay with you still." And he would promise again. For a time he would keep it, and would even fight hard against the unnatural craving of a burned stomach, but at last he would be over tempted, and fall to drinking. And then, as if for very shame, he would seem to go lower than before. It was this cruel living in hope and then pining in hopeless sorrow that did more than cold or hunger to sap Rebecca's life.

One day a neighbor came in, and Rebecca was dead. She had sat on the bed, as if exhausted, and never moved again. Joel, at this time, had regular work and was trying to reform, and was so much in earnest that he used to come home by a circuitous way to avoid the familiar dramshops. Shops that his neighbors had put there to tempt him, that through his blood money their taxes might be lessened. And God remembers it. Pitiful sight! when a human fly is caught in the web of a human spider; a web spun in a corner set apart by sympathizing citizens for that purpose, on condition that they share in the proceeds.

When Joel, on returning in the evening, found Rebecca was dead, he seemed struck dumb, and moved about as one dazed.

"You've killed her," said a woman, one of the neighbors.

"You drunken sot!" exclaimed the father, "she died for you, and your miserable life is not worth the dust she trod on!"

But the reproaches of the neighbors, and the scorn of the father, fell apparently unheeded. He shed no tear, and spoke no word, except when spoken to, but would sit motionless for hours, as if absent fromhimself. At the funeral he followed on foot, and when all had gone he returned and spent the night at the grave. The next day he resumed his work again, but at night he returned to his vigil, at the grave, as if watching by the bedside of his wife. So he continued for several days and nights, becoming so gaunt and wretched as to excite pity even in those who despised him. One morning the sexton found him by the grave, dead; and at the head of the fresh mound was an oak board, on which was carved Rebecca's name and age, and underneath, in rude letters, this inscription:

"SHE DIED FOR ME.
J. M."

But that did not save him.—Rev. E. W. Hicks.

THE PORTLAND VASE.

This is a celebrated work of art in the British Museum, where it is preserved with extreme care. It is not large, being only about ten inches high, but it is considered the most precious thing of the kind ever fashioned by man. Before its value was understood, the Duchess of Portland gave a thousand guineas for it, but ten times that sum would not buy it now. It is one of those urns which the ancient Etruscans, the people who inhabited Italy before the Romans came there, used to make in order to hold the ashes of their dead. From one of these old cemeteries it came into the hands of Alexander Severus, emperor of Rome, who used it for the ashes of one of his family. Sealed up in a magnificent sarcophagus, it reposed in the Monte del Grano, near Rome, from the third to sixteenth century, when it was brought to light fresh as when first made between two and three thousand years ago. The material of the vase is a sort of dark blue glass, over which has been laid a coating of transparent white enamel, which has been cut away like a cameo, leaving an exquisite representation of the marriage of Peleus and Thetis.

In the year 1845, a drunken man happening to be in the Museum, seized a rock specimen near by, and aiming at the Portland Vase shivered it into a thousand fragments. Some of our older readers may remember the cry of execration which arose from the lovers of art all over the civilized world at the news. What could be done? They hustled the drunkard off to prison, and then with reverential care they gathered up all the splinters and cemented them together in the old shape, doing what they could to conceal the fractures.

We were thinking over the circumstance the other day, when it occurred to us: "Why, that was a representative act. What that drunkard did forty years ago, in the British Museum, is being done all around us continually. Strange to say, the Portland Vase was shaped very much like a heart. Ah! take a human heart, inside filled with the ashes of departed joys, and outside a network of cameos cut in deep by sorrowful experience, what more exquisitely tender? what less fit for rough handling? We have seen a drunken boy reel into the presence of his widowed mother. That look of agony!—it meant that a stone had crushed into a heart worth ten thousand Portland vases! Perhaps the most sensitive and charming thing God ever fashioned on earth is a young wife's sweet affection; yet stones prepared in our saloons and hurled by a drunken husband's hand, are shivering them on every side.—The Amendment Herald.

—The Christian Advocate says Rev. Williams Summers, M.D., a graduate from Pennington Seminary, is about to lead a party of Christian missionaries into Central Africa, under the lead and general supervision of Missionary Bishop William Taylor. The plan of Bishop Taylor, concisely stated, is to plant about twenty mission stations on a line running through the rich belt of country which lies just south of the Congo River, and stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. For this gigantic enterprise forty missionaries are needed to open the work. Of this number about twenty have been secured. Bishop Taylor himself will enter Africa from the Atlantic coast with twenty missionaries about October or November, and Dr. Summers will enter Africa from the Indian Ocean with twenty more missionaries in May or June next. Both parties will advance toward the interior until they meet, thus completing the chain of mission stations across Africa from the mouth of the Congo on the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Zambezi on the Indian Ocean.

reason given was not satisfactory to the guard, and the stranger departed without gratifying his curiosity to "see a great man."

Those familiar with the history of Morgan's taking off will remember that on the night after he was drowned in Niagara River, there came to the house of Colonel King, in Youngstown, a man who told the Colonel he had been sent by the "eastern lodges" to execute upon Morgan the penalties of his Masonic obligations, and inquired where he could be found. When informed that he came too late, that his victim was already disposed of, he flew into a rage, and brandishing an ugly knife he had brought, with which to do his work, disappeared as suddenly as the mysterious stranger left Dunlap. There is certainly a very striking coincidence in the two cases; but for humanity's sake let us hope that the latter had not a commission from western lodges to perform like sanguinary deeds; but it would certainly be gratifying to know who this stranger was, why he was there, and where he went to. Taken in connection with the occurrences of the day and evening previous, it has about it a very suspicious look. Can the craft of Dunlap give us any light?

Among the "instruments of cruelty" prepared for use on the second night of the mob, which were found near the hall on Sabbath morning, were pieces of barbed fence wire, some four feet in length, which showed the diabolical character of the work intended, and the deliberation with which it had been planned. A quantity of eggs remained and were taken away in the morning. Stones of all shapes and sizes convenient for the purposes of a mob were scattered around, and the stained and battered side of the building gave evidence of the strength of arm and vigor of purpose with which the assault was made.

Bros. Feemster and Starry remained quiet with friends during the Sabbath, receiving every attention that sympathizing hearts and skillful hands bestow. Further trouble was feared by some, and it was thought advisable to quietly remove the object of Masonic hate to some place of greater security. Arrangements were made for a night voyage to Americus, and when the friendly shadows fell upon the historic plains of "Bleeding Kansas," Bros. Starry and Feemster were not "let down by a basket from the wall," but were taken by a circuitous route to a neighboring town, and thus escaped with their lives.

The Freemasons of Dunlap made good their declaration that the 3d degree should not be publicly worked in their town, and defying all law, and assailing a peaceful assembly, and making a murderous onslaught upon defenceless women and children, have voluntarily placed themselves on a plane with those border ruffians whose cruelty and cowardice was unparalleled by any other atrocities committed during the Southern rebellion.

REPORT OF THE OUTRAGE FROM DUNLAP.

In connection with the above report, the letter of Mr. Atchison, principal of the Freedmen's Academy of Dunlap, to the Associate Presbyterian and Christian Statesman, has a special interest, showing the local feeling in respect to the outrage:

The lecturers came on Friday, September 19th. They were kindly received, and arrangements were made to hold the meetings in the Freedmen's Academy. The white people became excited about the matter through the influence of the Masons, and everybody came. The first evening was occupied chiefly by Mr. Starry, who worked out the first, or Entered Apprentice degree, giving frequent comments and answers to questions. The Masons and Odd fellows became very angry, and indulged in threats and terrible abuse. During the lecture a number of eggs were thrown through the windows and broken over the speakers and audience. They smelt quite too good to express the corruption of the lodges. When they were thrown the justice of the peace, who was present, ran away, saying he would not protect the institution.

On Saturday the Masons were asked for an interview, that we might arrange the meetings so as not to give too high an offense. But they were so angry that they refused to be consulted, and spent their hot rage in contriving slanders, abuse and violence. On Saturday evening we boarded up the window next to the speakers and proceeded with the exercises, opening with Scripture reading and prayer. A number of the negroes were brave enough to be present, although many had been frightened, and others had been persuaded to stay away. About two-thirds of the audience were women and little children, some infants. These we regarded as sufficient security against rude violence. But no! we had not proceeded above half an hour, when heavy stones were hurled through the closed window, dashing boards, sash and glass over the speakers and audience. Then came another volley of stones through the open window. Strange providence of God! although several were hit, yet none were badly hurt except Mr. Starry, who was struck in the face by a stone, which would have killed him had it been an inch higher. Some of the women were frightened to delirium, and quite a panic was produced. A number of shots were fired at the time of the attack and we have since ascertained proof that at least two attempts were made to shoot Mr. S. before the stones were thrown, and that similar violence was intended toward some of the Academy teachers. Some of the mob brought to the meeting scourges made of barbed fence wire. Who could imagine more horrid cruelty?

After the riot Mr. Starry was taken up into the library room of the Academy, his wounds dressed by a physician, and then he was carefully nursed through the night by the Academy teachers, and the building was well guarded by some honorable negroes. We were not molested again except by some suspected spies.

On Sabbath morning a great many colored friends called to express their sympathy with Mr. Starry. In the forenoon Rev. Mr. Snodgrass preached a good sermon on the duty of the church toward the secret orders. In the evening Rev. P. S. Feemster lectured on the lodge religion; contrasting it with Bible truth and Christ's example. It was a grand discourse; every sentence was like a thunderbolt. The fact that the lodge pretends to take men from the state of sin and fit them for heaven was clearly proven. The sole authority of the true Saviour and his supreme right to our undivided service, were shown with an eloquence that needed not the support of the surrounding signs of Masonic vengeance to impress itself never to be forgotten.

We secretly conveyed the brethren to Americus, eight miles distant, when night had fallen over the scenes of sin and danger.

We ask you, dear friends, to thank God for our deliverance, and to stand by us now as your representatives in a conflict that is very important to both church and state. The entire colored population will be swallowed up by the secret orders if they are not protected. We are few and feeble, but we look to our Leader; even death means victory to us and our cause. Already fifteen churches, in whole or in part, condemn secret orders. Ten thousand Christian men in Kansas, and a multitude of women, pray that these orders may be driven from the face of the earth. We do no superficial reform work here! We follow, as closely as we can, the footsteps of our Master.

Cordially, Andrew Atchison.

The Churches.

—A series of evangelical meetings are in progress at Chicago avenue church. Major Whittle is preaching every evening. Pres. C. A. Blanchard, who has for some time been preaching at this church, has been for two weeks detained at his home in Wheaton because of the dangerous illness of his wife.

—Miss E. Dryer, whose name has for many years been associated with the Bible work of Chicago, has 150 men and women every Sunday afternoon in her Bible class in Moody's church, and there is room for more.

—The new dormitory building of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the Northwest was formally presented to the Board of Trustees, Tuesday, October 14. There was a very large gathering of gentlemen and ladies, not only of the Presbyterian, but many brethren from the Baptist, Congregational, and Methodist churches were present. Mr. C. H. McCormick, Jr., formally presented the keys of the new dormitory to the Board of Directors. On behalf of the Board of Directors, the Rev. Dr. Cleland accepted the tokens of conveyance of McCormick Hall to their custody. A dedicatory prayer was offered. Speeches were made by the Revs. Dr. Halsey, John Hall, and J. H. Marquis. Dr. Hall, of New York, had just returned from London for the purpose of being present on this occasion. Dr. Halsey gave a short history of the seminary, which is an institution of the Northwestern synods. It was founded fifty years ago in Indiana, and was for a long term of years at New Albany. Twenty-five years ago the late C. H. McCormick offered a donation of $100,000 if they would permanently remove to Chicago. Twenty-five acres of ground were donated by Messrs. Sheffield, Ogden, and Diversey, and the work was begun. The new addition, which cost $80,000 to construct, was also the gift of the late Mr. McCormick, and he had arranged for the presentation to take place formally on the date of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their work here. The building is of red pressed brick with stone trimmings, four stories high, size, 40x130 feet. There are fifty-two suites of rooms for students, and each suite is finely furnished by the various Presbyterian churches of the Northwest.

—The seventh anniversary of the opening of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, conducted by Colonel and Mrs. George R. Clarke, was celebrated Oct. 14, in the mission room, at the corner of Van Buren street and Fourth avenue. In a resume of the work of the mission, Colonel Clarke read the following statistics: Since 1877 there have been held 2,440 meetings; in the last twelve months, 453 indoor and 56 street meeetings; total, 509. the aggregate number of hearers at the meetings since the mission was founded has been 85,560. The total attendance, in addition, at the Sunday-school has been 8,500; the kindergarten, 6,600; the sewing school, 1,000. Grand total, 100,960. There have been distributed 220,000 tickets of invitation and 35,000 tracts. There have been in all 3,200 seekers of religion, and there never has been a meeting without some. In addition to this mission work proper, Mrs. Clarke has paid 104 visits to the county jail, and distributed 4,000 religious papers there during the last year. The expense of conducting the mission during the last year, exclusive of the Sunday-school, the sewing school and the kiudergarteu, has been $4,727, of which only $647 has beeu contributed by outside parties and the balance borne by Colonel Clarke.

—The meetings held lately by the evangelists, Moody and Sankey, in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, were under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. No special effort had been made to advertise the meetings, yet in the afternoon the large building was crowded, and in the evening it was as full as it could hold, and hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Over 500 persons were on the stage, and in the gallery men stood in lines twenty deep. Mr. Moody exhorted his hearers with great fervency to lay hold of eternal life now, while it is offered. Mr. Sankey's singing made a deep impression. On Monday, meetings were held in Dr. Cuyler's church. A large audience was present in the morning. In the afternoon the church was literally crowded, and in the evening hundreds were unable to secure even standing room. The services were exceedingly impressive. These meetings are the beginning of a series to be held in central localities, intended to arouse Christians, and arranged in the hope that they may lead to a general revival this winter.

—The workers at Farwell Hall seem stirred, of late, upon the subject of divine deliverance from bodily ailment. It is a theme frequently upon their lips as they pursue their evangelistic labors in various parts of the city, and several remarkable cases of recovery from physical ailment have occurred which have called the attention of not a few to some study of the matter. The particular subjects of such curative power referred to in a noonday meeting, recently held, were men under the influence of strong drink. Several instances were narrated by eye-witnesses wherein men already under the stupor of drink were, in immediate answer to prayer, smitten with a clearly manifested and sobering conviction of sin, and abandoned the cup on the spot, to start out with meek and chastened spirit upon a uew life. What the power of God can work in answer to believiug prayer, it is not for mortal to conjecture; and certainly, while we examine such examples with needful caution, we are not allowed to pass them by indifferently or undevoutly.—Chicago Standard.

—At the Copenhagen Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, among other topics that of religious indifference was discussed. The picture Dr. Christlieb presented of Germany was appalling. In Berlin, with a population of 1,000,000, only 20,000, or two per cent., attended public worship. In Hamburgh, with near 400,000 people, only 5,000 attended. In certain districts of North Germany there were suicides at the rate of thirty to forty a week. The state of things in the rural districts was also bad. The working classes were so hard pressed during the week, and had to work at such small wages, that they thought they were bound to labor on the Lord's Day in order to increase their income. The study of infidel books he represented as very common. In London it is said that over one million out of its four millions never attend church. In Glasgow, 200,000 out of 700,000 neglect public worship. It is probable that New York and other American cities would show figures which indicate a like indifference.—Intelligencer.

—At the meeting of the American Missionary Association in Salem, last week, Rev. Dr. Striedy read a paper on the conference between the American Home Missionary Society and the American Missionary Society. The committees had found a satisfactory solution of the differences. It has been agreed that both societies were National, and not limited by sectional or geographical lines; that the American Home Missionary Society's special work was church planting in the new regions of the West and Southwest. It has also done some important work in some of the Northern States. Neither society will establish in any locality a church that will not admit colored persons to membership if suitably qualified, nor will it sustain any church that will not keep fellowship with neighboring Congregational churches, or unite with the conference of that association. The appeals of the two societies to the common constituencies shall be on this basis: that contributions for the South should flow mainly through channels to the American Missionary Association, and that no large proportion of the funds of the American Home Missionary Society should be spent on Southern fields, as there are pressing demands in the West and Southwest for all and more than can be raised.

—The sum of $151,752,000 is expended annually in China for the worship of ancestors.

—The Union Theological Seminary dormitory accommodates 150 students, and its library contains 50,000 volumes. Its new buildings have cost $750,000.

—From 1810 to 1820 the Protestant denominations of this country gave $206,210 to home and foreign missions. During the last two years they gave $56,186,636, and yet there are people who say the world is growing worse.

—The skeptics are as enterprising as the Christians, for we are told that in India and Ceylon they have presses and uewspapers by which to propagate their opinions. In Madras there is a society managed by American infidels, and their two papers call religion a "cancer," and Christians "superstitious fools."

—Mr. Henry Bergh's Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is the legatee of a handsome sum ($250,000) by the will of Miss Welton, who lost her life some time ago in making the descent of Long's Peak, in Colorado.

—A Pennsylvania correspondent of the Christian Advocate says that the Moravians of Bethlehem, Pa., have decided to undertake a mission to the Esquimaux of Alaska, their reason being, beyond the general obligation to preach the Gospel to every creature, that the field is a particularly difficult and uninviting one. A veteran missionary and a young graduate of the Theological Seminary at Bethlehem were set apart for the work, and last April were sent out to prepare the way for the establishment of regular mission stations. At Oonalashka they met an Esquimaux woman, and from her learned the important fact that the Alaskan Esquimaux speaks almost exactly the same language as those of Greenland and Labrador, among whom the Moravians have had successful missions. This will enable them to make use of the Christian literature already prepared in that language. At the latest accounts, the two pioneers had left the last trading-post for a journey to the North, and are now, the correspondeut says, no doubt hundreds of miles away from any white man's dwelling, alone in the Arctic wildcrness, with only the wild Esquimaux around them.

—Moody and Sankey held, last week, a short meeting in Boston. This week they are to be in Worcester, Mass., from Thursday through the Sabbath. The Worcester Spy says of the meeting: "The convention will include the whole of Worcester county. Circular letters will be sent to all the evangelical clergymen in the county, inviting the co-operation of their churches. The meetings of the convention on Friday and Saturday will be for the discussion of topics relating to the spiritual work of the churches and of the individual members, and to means for increasing their activity in reaching the unsaved, with pertinent addresses from Mr. Moody and others. Services under the direction of Mr. Moody will be held Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening. Mr. Sankey will have general charge of the singing. The convention will be similar to the one held in Boston last week, and some of the most earnest and consecrated Christian workers of Massachusetts will be present and have a place upon the program."

—Pastor Seguin, of the French mission of this city, was admitted to the Presbytery of Chicago, at its late meeting at Joliet, and will receive the assistance of the Presbyterian churches in his work. He had been arranging for a series of meetings, and had engaged Father Chiniquy's assistance; but the latter is unable to come, at present, and the special effort has been postponed until December.

—The Central Illinois Congregational Association took final action, at its late meeting, respecting J. B. Shay, of the Streator church, which seceded, a few years ago on account of the testimony against the lodge of the Independent church. Shay was heavily supported by Col. Ralph Plumb, the present Republican candidate for Congress in that district, who is reported as of infidel tendencies and a Mason. The Association found that Shay had deceived them about his ecclesiastical relations, and has shown himself unworthy of recognition as a minister of Christ. They therefore withdrew fellowship from him, and struck off his name from their roll.

—It is proposed in England to furnish the Moody schools at Northfield, Conn., and the Y. M. C. A., at Newcastle Pa., with libraries as a testimonial of gratitude for the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London, last winter.

—The Five Points Mission, of New York, served during the last year 99,200 dinners to needy people, and sent 315 children into the country. The receipts, in cash and goods, were $42,617.18.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an ineidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merita become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

LUCILE VERNON.

cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Preshyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," hut with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Preshyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, hut the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, hut are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Preshyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, hut soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had hut little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, hut the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

FARM NOTES.

THE BEST HORSES.

If I were called upon to name the two requisites most necessary for a farmer to possess, in addition to a good farm, I should say a good wife and a good team; and when a young farmer becomes possessed of these, he has made a good start on the road to success While no industry of the farm pays better than raising good horses, none is more unprofitable than raising inferior ones. It costs but little more to raise a horse which, when six years old, will command a ready sale of $400 or $500, than one which can with difficulty be disposed of for $100, or than it does to raise a heifer or a steer which at maturity is worth $50 or $75. The best team for the farmer is the one which will best answer all the purposes of the farm—plowing, hauling, taking the farmer and his family to town, or his boys and their sweethearts for a lively sleigh-ride; and in addition to all this, will give him a pair of colts every year, which will earn their keep from the time they are two years old until they are sold for $800 or $1,000 at five or six. The team to do this is a pair of handsome bay mares sixteen hands high, weighing 1,000 to 1,250 pounds each, with small, bony heads, large nostrils. broad forehead, large, bright eyes, small, tapering ears, long necks nicely arched, deep as they spring from the shoulders and small at the throat-latch; long, oblique shoulder-blades; moderately high withers; short backs and deep but not over-broad chests, because a horse with a very wide breast, although usually of good constitution and great strength, is seldom a graceful or rapid trotter; is apt to have a "paddling" gait, and if used for road work will generally give out in the forelegs from the extra strain put upon them by the weight of the broad chest. Our team must also have long, muscular thighs, large knees and other joints; short cannon (shin) bones; legs broad below the knees, and hocks with the sinews clearly defined; fetlocks free from long hair; long, moderately oblique pasterns; rather small though not contracted feet; broad loins; wide, smooth hips, and long, full tails. They must have plenty of nervous energy and good knee action; must be prompt, free drivers, capable of trotting a mile in four minutes; be fast walkers and good, hearty eaters; must not "interfere," and must carry their heads well up without checks when on the road.

ANEXPERIENCE IN TRANSPLANTING TREES.—There is an interesting passage in the annual report for 1884 of Mr. Edward Clark, architect of the Capitol, concerning an experiment in tree culture begun on the Capitol grounds ten years ago. Over one hundred trees, whose trunks averaged one foot in diameter, were transplanted. To adapt them to removal their roots were cut off at a distance of three and one-half feet from the trunk. The operation was regarded as hazardous, and was characterized as an injudicious and disastrous one. It is now reported that all of the trees, with two exceptions, have flourished, and are growing more rapidly than others in the same park.

ONIONS IN THE FALL.—It is a good plan to sow onion seed or put out the sets in the fall. Onions, to do well, want to make an early growth. It is often difficult to sow the seed in the spring as early as is desirable. While if the work is done in the fall they will start to growing very early in the spring, and will come into market earlier than spring planting. Every gardener has noticed that if in harvesting onions in the fall a few are left how quickly in the spring they will start to grow and how much earlier they will be ready for the table. The soil for onions should be rich, well ploughed and harrowed, and made as soft as possible. Whatever manure is applied should be worked in the soil near the surface. Sow the seed or set out the sets in the fall, say in the last of September. In October mulch with a good dressing of stable manure; it will not only protect the plants, but be a valuable stimulant. It can be well worked into the soil in the spring after the plants begin to grow. Where manure cannot well be procured, mulch with straw, and then at the first favorable weather in the spring rake off the straw. Ashes, whether applied in the fall or spring, I find to be a valuable fertilizer for onions. They should be applied on the surface and merely worked in so as to mix with the soil, as shallow as possible. Onions feed near the surface, and in order to be beneficial the fertilizers must be kept on top. The soil should be worked fine and put in a good condition before sowing the seed.—N. J. Shepherd, in Fruit Recorder.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

'A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The old Masonic Temple of Philadelphia is to be transformed into a dime museum. Civilization is making some progress in the Quaker city. From a heathen temple to one of amusement is certainly a step upward.

—The Great Council of Red Men of the United States convened lately at Springfield, Ill. The organization numbers 40,588 persons, has 507 subordinate branches, and paid out for the relief of members last year, $132,814.98.

—A note from Norfolk county, Mass., tells of the elopement of James R. Stevens of East Weymouth, with a disreputable woman. He was a man of affairs, as he was married, was a church member, and a Freemason. Several other secret orders were also patronized by him.

—The Chicago Sirup and Food Company, which purposes to manufacture articles of diet and sirups from vegetables and cereals, was incorporated by the Secretary of State Wednesday, the capital being placed at $2,250,000.

—The National Executive Committee of the Master Plumbers' Association, Andrew Young, of Chicago, president, held secret meetings Oct. 16th at St. Louis, and refused to divulge the proccedings. In Chicago it is almost impossible to buy material for plumbing without the order of a member of the plumbers' society.

—The colored Grand Lodge of Ohio has forty-six subordinates, with 1127 members; an average of twenty-five. It is recognized by the German Grand Lodge League, the Grand Orient of Peru, the Grand Lodge of Hamburg, the Grand National Orient of Dominica, the Grand Orient of France, the Grand Orient of Italy, the Grand Orient of Hungary, and St. John's Grand Lodge of Hungary. J. G. Findel, the Masonic historian, is an honorary member.—Hebrew Leader.

—The row among the Masons of Canada continues with increased fury. The Grand Lodge of England has chartered lodges in the provinces without regard to the pretended rights of the Grand Lodge of Quebec. It is now positively stated that the Grand Lodge of Quebec is about to take action in consequence of the Grand Lodge of England's continued hostility, and will forbid Quebec Masons communicating with or recognizing English lodges.

—The Supreme Lodge of the United Order of Honor, meeting in Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 16, inst., elected the following officers: Supreme President, Thomas E. Boyd, of Noblesville; Vice President, R. L. Williamson, of Cleveland; Secretary, Everest Dudin, of Indianapolis; Treasurer, Henry F. Thompson, of Indianapolis; Chaplain, P. E. Culberson, of Jersey City; Conductor, H. W. Smith, of St. Louis; Inside Guard, H. M. Anderson, of Cincinnati; Outside Guard, E. W. Collins, of Pendleton, Ind.; Medical Director, Dr. D. Haggart, of Indianapolis; Trustees, George W. Powell, W. H. Doll, Matthew Roth, of Indianapolis; J. A. L. Tice, of Iowa City; J. B. Michener, of Kokomo, Ind.

—Early during the present month there was a great excitement reported from Beauharnais, in the province of Quebec, Canada, owing to the denunciation of a Catholic secret society by Father Jasmin.

—We reported lately the case of the Masonic Rev. W. M. Collins, minister of the M. E. church, Galesburg, Ill. Collins having suddenly disappeared some two months ago, it was reported that he had been foully dealt with at Cleveland, where he was last seen. But he being a Knight Templar and under process of trial before his conferen e for adultery, it was generally believed that his Masonic brethren were keeping him out of the way until after conference met. A Galesburg dispatch, dated Oct. 17, shows the conjectures to be true: "The Rev. W. M. Collins is in Toronto, Canada, under an assumed name, the Rev. William M. Myers, Myers being his middle name. He holds a life insurance policy of $5,000 in the C. M. B. A. The officers of the association sent Deputy Sheriff Richey to Toronto, having previously found clews pointing to his whereabouts. Mrs. Collins had not put in any claims for the insurance due her in case of his death. Mr. Richey saw the missing minister in the postoffice at Toronto, and saw him take mail postmarked Galesburg. This was before Mrs. Collins' last trip to Cleveland."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—The Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, candidate for Vice President of the United States, on the Democratic ticket, arrived in Chicago last week, and spoke to nearly 10,000 people. All the Democratic marching clubs paraded in honor of the event.

—The great demonstration of the Republicans Saturday night eclipses all the Blaine receptions during the campaign. Blaine and Logan reviewed together the marching thousands, who were estimated to be from 15,000 to 20,000, while perhaps a hundred thousand people were on the streets as interested spectators. The enthusiasm was so great that no speaking could be heard, and after one or two attempts it was abandoned.

COUNTRY.

—Two-thirds of the employes of the State, War and Navy Departments in Washington are ill with malaria owing to the dredging of the Potomac. Chills and fever are almost epidemic.

—The expenditures of the Postoffice Department for the year ended June 30, 1884, exceeded the receipts by $3,593,137. Last year the receipts were $2,653,189 more than the expenditures.

—The patent examiners-in-chief at Washington Friday made decisions in the telephone case of Bell, Edison, and others in favor of Bell, one decision involving the principal feature of the telephone.

—The jury in the Clawson polygamy case at Salt Lake reported a failure to agree Wednesday morning, and Judge Zane ordered an immediate retrial of the case.

—A heavy snowstorm Thursday morning caused a number of vessels to lay to in the St. Clair flats, blockading the passage between Lakes Erie and Huron.

—A train on the Northern Pacific Road brought to Fargo, D. T., Monday, 110 cars filled with wheat—the greatest wheat train on record. At Duluth the same road delivered on the same day 216 cars of wheat.

—While driving to market at Cleveland, Ohio, Thursday morning, Charles Kimball fell asleep in his wagon. His horses became frightened near a crossing and dashed into a coal train, Kimball and his team being killed, four cars derailed, and a stretch of track torn up.

—While three men were examining a defect in the top of a coke oven near Funnelton, W. Va., Monday night, the cone caved in, letting the men drop into the fiery furnace. The oven was cleaned out after an hour's work, but no trace of the victims was found save little lumps of metal, probably melted buttons or coins.

—The boiler of a threshing engine, run by a carpenter, exploded at Beltrami, Minn., Monday morning, killing five men instantly and mangling and scalding three others.

—The Fall River mills closed Monday, rendering 10,000 persons idle. H. H. Fisher's pipe mill at Allentown, Pa., has suspended operations, throwing 800 persons out of employment. H. B. Scott & Co., barbed wire manufactuers at Pittsburg, have notified their 800 employes that wages will be reduced 10 per cent.

—Wednesday, at a point one mile west of Knoxville, Ill., a dastardly attempt was made to wreck the train conveying General Logan and party to Peoria. Upon rounding a curve the engineer noticed an obstruction on the track. He put on the brakes, but did not succeed in bringing the train to a halt until the engine had run over two of four ties that had been laid across the track.

—Fire in Carthage and East Carthage, N. Y., on the 20th, destroyed 200 dwellings, three churches, the hotel and opera-house, an academy and school-house, and some mills and factories, the loss being estimated at $500,000. Numbers of people were rendered homeless, and but few houses are left standing. The residences burned comprise the best in town and there are not houses enough to shelter the inhabitants. A greater portion of the furniture removed from the houses afterward took fire in the street and burned. The fire is to Carthage what the fire of 1871 was to Chicago. Assistance is asked for the destitute people. No lives were lost, but a number of people were badly burned.

FOREIGN.

—At Point Claire Station, Quebec, Wednesday night, a Grand Trunk express dashed into a stock train, the locomotives interlocking and their boilers exploding. An engineer was killed and his fireman fatally hurt, while a number of passengers were bruised. All the freight cars were completely wrecked and 120 sheep killed. The loss is placed at $100,000.

—While four children were alone in a farmhouse at St. Jacobin, Quebec, one of them placed a flask of powder on the stove, and also threw some in the fire. The explosion shattered the dwelling and fatally injured three of the children, but the other may recover.

—The latest advices from Madagascar state that it is believed to be too late in the season for the French to march upon Antananarivo, the capital. This will involve a delay of eight months. The sickness among the French is increasing. In deference to the influence of missionaries, Hova deserters from the Malagassy army are shot instead of being burned when captured.

—General DeLisle advises the French government an effective force of 20,000 men will be necessary to continue offensive operations and repel the invasion of Tonquin.

—France has declined England's overtures to mediate in the Franco-Chinese difficulty. Reports are current here that the Chinese are pushing their advance into Tonquin, and are about to besiege Hung Hoa. The remainder of the Chinese troops before Chu have been withdrawn. The Chinese there have abandoned their intrenchments.

—A St. Petersburgh dispatch says a desperate attack was made by a body of Nihilists on a train carrying the mail, in which there was $50,000. As the train was nearing Kharoff they attempted to wreck it for the purpose of robbing the mail pouches. The guards fired at the wreckers, the engineer put on steam and the train escaped.

—The British Cabinet has not yet sanctioned the advance of the Nile expedition to Khartoum. It will not decide the question before the return of Lord Northbrook. Wolseley will be ready to advance Nov. 1. Egyptian correspondence shows that the government offered a reward of $100,000, or more if necessary, to any sheikh who would secure Gordon's safe retreat from Khartoum. Among Lord Northbrook's recommendations to the British Government on his return to London will be that foreigners resident in Egypt shall be subject to taxation.

with other publications. Full information forwarded upon application.

Write what papers or magazines you wish to take in connection with the Cynosure.

TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The Christian Cynosure will be sent to any address eight weeks on receipt of twenty-five cents.

Much of the progress made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neighborhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

SPEECH OF HON. S. C. POMEROY.

"The Mission of the American Nation to Mankind," 18 pp., including John Quincy Adams on the Duty of American Voters, 4 pp. Twenty-five copies of this pamphlet of 22 pages will be sent during the campaign for fifty cents. 25 copies, postpaid, 50 cents.

A Journal of Enlightened Statesmanship, Sound Public Morals, Choice Literature, and General Information.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY IN

New York City.

It aims to promote every Christian Reform Measure on the following

PLATFORM:

God, who is the source of all authority, has appointed our Lord Jesus Christ the Ruler of Nations. The Bible, God's revealed Will, contains law for Nations, and is the Standard by which all Moral Issues in Political Life are to be decided. National acknowledgement of this authority, and obedience to the law, constitute a truly Christian Nation.

The internal revenue collections for October in the district of which Peoria, Illinois, is the center, were $1,422,436.79, against $1,312,551.17 for the some month last year; increase, $109,885.62. There were also 293,705 gallons of liquor imported into the district. These figures show the power of the drink traffic. But a greater power is against it. Prohibition must conquer.

A great Roman Catholic council is about to meet in Baltimore which will be attended by some 700 ecclesiastics and remain in session probably for weeks. But while the ostensible object of the meeting is the welfare of mankind, the whole conference, excepting on Sabbaths and Thursdays, will be entirely secret. Such a part as the members choose will be published at the close. If the Catholic church is opposed to secretism this is not consistent.

Philadelphia made a good beginning Tuesday against the practice of betting on elections. The Pennsylvania law of 1839 declares that any one betting on the result of an election is disfranchised thereby from voting. At the polls in Philadelphia a man was challenged under the old law and the judges refused his vote. Let us have such a law well enforced in every State.

Hon. Hiram Price, Indian Commissioner has prepared his annual report. No miserable, cruel and expensive Indian wars have darkened the history of the year, and much progress has been made, not only by the Indians themselves, but by the whites who exercise authority over them. A better understanding of the Indian character and habits, and a more general and pronounced recognition of them as human beings, entitled to all the rights granted to other men, is taking the place of the old Custer war-cry of extermination. Mr. Price urges an increased and early appropriation, and a stringent law forbidding the sale of arms and the enforcement of the law against liquor. The establishment of courts for Indian offences has proved of great use, and in addition the establishment of a United States court in the Indian Territory is urged. The great value of the school work is demonstrated by the report, and a much greater amount of money asked for to carry it on. The solution of one part of the Indian problem is noted in the removal of the Crow Indians in Montana and the addition of 3,000,000 acres of their reservation to the public domain, from the sales of which the tribe may become self-supporting. In all these measures, it is of the greatest satisfaction to note that the spirit of the Gospel is prevailing over that of war in the settlement of the Indian question.

The latest report from the Soudan causes apprehension in England. It is that General Gordon is again in danger of being overpowered and captured by the forces of El Mahdi, and that the relief expedition of Gen. Wolseley cannot hope to penetrate to him before December on account of the difficulties of transportation. Wolseley's instructions are to bring General Gordon and Colonel Stewart from Khartoum. No further offensive operations than should prove necessary to serve this end would be permitted. Neither the English nor the Egyptian government was prepared to assume the responsibility of the government of the Nile Valley beyond Wady-Halfa, though they would be glad to see an independent government at Khartoum which would keep peace with Egypt, would encourage commerce, and would prevent the slave trade. The successes of Gordon inspired the hope that he would be able to extricate himself and bring away the Egyptian garrisons from the Soudan without other help, and the British expedition may have been more tardy from an expectation of the same kind. The jealousy of France has been also a great hindrance. President Ferry lately said France was prepared to make arrows of every sort of wood to fire at England unless she gave France satisfaction in Egypt. Sometime the latest republic will realize that nations need as much to recognize the demands of humanity as to follow their own ambition and greed.

Two State Supreme Courts published decisions last week that are of peculiar interest to temperance reformers. In Iowa the court at Des Moines unanimously decided that justices of the peace have jurisdiction to try certain cases under the altered constitution. The decision is a reversal of that of Judge Hayes whose brain is fertile in expedients for the benefit of crime. Hayes ruled that the justice court had no jurisdiction because the costs as fixed by law were above the limit of that court; but the Supreme Court decides that the costs are no part of the punishment in a case, but are for compensation to officers for enforcing the law. When the Supreme Court gets around to Hayes's last decision, making the purchaser of liquor particeps crimnis with the dealer, we shall see its fallacies brushed aside.

The other decision in Ohio was probably a political move. It was made by three Democrats over the vote of two Republicans, Judge Johnson, just re-elected Supreme Judge, being one of the latter. It is a reversal of a former decision by the same court in favor of the constitutionality of the Scott law. The constitution of Ohio forbids the licensing of liquor-selling. The Scott law was intended to be some restriction upon the unlimited traffic which might otherwise be legal, and, with secondary provisions restricting sales on the Sabbath and to minors, its main point is as follows: "That every person in the State engaged in the traffic in intoxicating liquors, other than the manufacturer thereof from the crude material and who sells in quantities of one gallon or more, shall be assessed and pay annually a tax of $200 if he sells distilled liquors, and $100 is he sells fermented liquor alone. The law makes a lien on property in or upon which the liquor is sold, and punishes by severe penalties any person who sells on the premises of another without his written consent." The three members of the court who regard the law as unconstitutional published the decision very seasonably to produce the greatest sensation. As the taxes which have been collected amounted to several millions, the probable repayment of this amount touches a very tender spot. The Democratic managers estimated that to publish the decision would drive the German saloon interest into their ranks; the Republicans claimed that it would swell their vote from the enraged tax-payers; and the Prohibitionists, with better reason than either, looked for an increase because it was evident that neither of the old parties intend to more than play with the great temperance issue, always making it subserve their ambitious party ends. True temperance men need not mourn for the dead law; it was a temporizing scheme, planned to put off a little longer the day of vengeance that will soon arise against the drink curse.

The Masonic prayers said over the stones of the United States post office in this city ten years ago by Cregier, Gurney, Hawley, and their aproned companions, were but a part of the work which the lodge put upon the immense, but shaky structure. The Current comments thus upon the work during its earlier stages: "At Chicago there is a dark, forbidding-looking structure within a very beautiful plot of grass. This building has a history, and a history is all there is about it which promises any degree of stability. The united treachery of Chicago soil and Uncle Sam's office-holders has resulted in the erection, for $4,000,000, of an edifice which has 4,000,000 chances of falling down for every one it has of standing up. During the period of construction, a high and tightly jointed board fence concealed the operations of the builders, so that nobody could see the slow progress of the architectural monstrosity. Had it been open to popular criticism, as other improvements are while they are making, there is little doubt that the discovery of the architect's incompetency and the unsubstantial character of the foundation would have been made years previous to the appointment of the Sooy Smith commission, which to-day, as events prove, seems to have whitewashed the job out of pure amazement at the waste of so much money. Congress will now be asked for $100,000 worth of proppage."

"SUMPTUARY LAWS."

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

This is another characteristic "dodge," trotted out and paraded around ever and anon by the liquor-dealers and their political satellites and allies whenever prohibition is brought before the people, a sort of galvanized ghost to frighten timid, hesitating souls and conservative old fogies and the morbid victims of drink. As though it was germane to the subject, or had anything on earth to do with the right of the government to suppress the crime of liquor traffic and its duty to protect society from its diabolical effects. Nothing can be more disingenuous, sophistical or absurd; and probably nothing is more utterly insincere than this stale, hackneyed, and, for that matter, oft-refuted and demolished subterfuge. Prohibiting the liquor traffic neither prescribes nor proscribes what people shall or shall not eat, drink or wear. If individuals can get, and are bound to take strychnine, sugar of lead, prussic acid, opium or alcohol, and dement, demoralize, disable and kill themselves, they can; and, it seems, do; but the government is under no obligation to supply them with these poisons. On the contrary, it is not only the right, but the duty of the government to prohibit the sale of such poisons for any such purpose. Just as it is the right and duty of the government to prohibit the sale of and protect the people from poisoned foods, tainted m flour, small-pox infection, cholera, yell

Neither government nor human society could long exist without the right and power to protect itself against the cupidity of the selfish, unprincipled and depraved. Liquor men and their political allies, who are flaunting this "sumptuary" and "personal liberty" bosh in the faces of the people, know it to be bosh; but use the sophism to pull the wool over weak eyes, to deceive weak minds, mislead and divert public attention; to raise a false issue and thereby avert if possible, the doom that awaits those who put the poisoned chalice to their neighbor's lips and make them drunken!

But the true, faithful and intelligent friends of God and man, those who properly estimate the value of a true and noble manhood, and of sober, industrious, peaceful and prosperous communities, and of true liberty as against license, will not be diverted from their high and holy purpose to banish this enemy of all that is good and pure and great and noble by any such weak transparent sophistry.

But now before dismissing this subject we will turn the tables upon these disinterested and profound defenders of the gross, sensual and devilish drink traffic, who prate so loudly about "personal liberty" and "sumptuary laws." The fact is, the very converse of their flaunting swagger is the truth! Our license system is not only in direct violation of God's Word, which pronounces a woe unto him who puts the cup to his neighbors lips and "maketh him drunken," but it is "sumptuary," both in its nature and effects. The government thereby fosters and feeds the liquor cormorants who corrupt and curse the country. It supplies the means and tempts to the "sumptuary" indulgence of the very worst and most impious and fatal kind. It panders to and pampers an unnatural, depraved, gross and sensual appetite, and to an indulgence which beastializes its victims and converts them into bloated, blear-eyed, swaggering, swearing loafers and bummers, bibblers, idlers, idiots, paupers and prowlers for outrage and plunder; reckless men, mad men, murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers! Our poorhouses, penitentiaries and prisons, our madhouses, hospitals and insane asylums are filled with the victims of these sumptuary license laws. While thousands of homes are made hapless and wretched, and a hundred thousand palsied and ruined souls are every year sent staggering into eternity unprepared thereby!

Is it not high time this inconsistent, inexcusable, anti-republican, un-Christian and barbarous system was abolished? Justice, righteousness, morality, religion, humanity, true statesmanship—all cry out against it, and every interest of mankind, every consideration connected with the peace, prosperity and happiness of the human race, the stability of our government, the perpetuity of our civil and religious institutions, imperiously demand not only the abolition of the barbarous sumptuary license system which has so long disgraced our statue books and stained our records with the most unnatural and revolting crimes; but as imperiously demands the enactment and enforcement of local, State and National prohibition. "Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people."

Rochester, N. Y.

WEEK DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Sometime in the perfect glory of a summer afternoon when "the south wind blows softly," and the elm tree over the way casts long shadows, a remembrance stirs in my heart of a burial in a country churchyard, and a little child holding fast her father's hand and gazing with wonder-filled eyes into the dark yawning recesses of the tomb where had just been deposited precious seed to await the harvest of the R[illegible]n. Death is a mystery to a child's heart, [illegible]le it is a bright mystery full of radiant [illegible]ssibilities, and the gravity of the [illegible]the cape-bonnet is rather the shadow [illegible]emnity than anything deeper. Be[illegible]one remembrance connected with [illegible] now passed to her "exceeding [illegible] soft hand placed on her head [illegible]exhortation to "be good and love [illegible], childlike words addressed to a [illegible] they echo across the fields of [illegible]he voice of bells that call to

[illegible]owhere uttered a truer word [illegible] are not so ill with you and [illegible] been is half owing to the [illegible]lly a hidden life, and rest in [illegible]who was thus laid quietly [illegible]ummer sunshine had lived [illegible]ngland clergyman of the [illegible]inful preacher," who visited from house to house—the poor as often as the rich—who talked and prayed with all the sick and afflicted, who loved little children and preached every Sunday about election or the divine decrees or some other theological subtlety as taught in that old school of the prophets, headed by Edwards and Bellamy and Hopkins, her early conversion, her love for the Saviour, her joyful sense of his continual presence, her longing to win souls, her increasing devotion to every duty, seemed to mark her out from her girlhood as one especially destined to do some great work for the Master. Yet she never became a missionary, or even a minister's wife; her name was in no religious journal, was shrined in no memoirs, stood at the head of no benevolent societies. She lived a single life shadowed by sorrow and disappointment, and cut off by death in its meridian. It was simply hidden, as the body of Moses was hidden, by God himself.

The words uttered thirty years ago in the ear of the child, have become a vital and living power in the heart of the woman. For when we are tired with the length of the way and wearied with the continual assaults of the tempter; when we are pressed by foes from without and the weakness of our own hearts from within, that watchword of our childhood, "Be good," is better than a thousand dissertations on courage and patience: and I am sorry for whoever gets beyond the need of it. He is farther from the divine source of goodness than he thinks, and must find his way back slowly and perhaps painfully to the first principles of that kingdom, which, whoever would inherit must become as a little child.

And so to-day I lay this flower, whose seed was sown so long ago, on one of earth's many "unvisited tombs." May it waft fragrance into some other "hidden life."

THE KEY OF THE BASTILE.

BY ALEXANDER THOMPSON.

'Tis only a key, but that key has a story,
Might cause you a shudder to tell,
For the door that it opened, led never to glory,
But was once as the gateway of hell.

The Bastile—what name on the page of the past,
Stands out with a meaning like this,
So pregnant with horror, so dreadful and vast,
Unspanned by one rainbow of bliss.

The Bastile—the tyrant but uttered the word,
And the dungeon threw open its door;
And who of the victim again ever heard
This side of eternity's shore?

Gone sweet air and sunshine; gone voices of men;
Died hope in that bed of despair;
And where life had been, there was only a chain,
And a skeleton bound to it there.

O mighty upheaval! O tempest of mind!
Like the rock-lifting forces below,
Ye came in a might that no tyrant could bind,
And the Bastile came down at a blow.

O t'was not in vain that the forces below
Shook stratas of granite and flint
And rushed like a torrent to grapple the foe,
Through every red fissure and rent.

O t'was not in vain when the Bastile came down,
And the bulwarks of tyranny crumbled,
When the people, instead of the king, won the crown,
And the pride of the noble was humbled.

O t'was not in vain, for a brighter to-day
Looks out from the rage of the past,
And the grand ship of freedom speeds on her good way
With the tri-color nailed to her mast.

DARK LANTERN POLITICIANS.

Secret political parties are demoralizing and mischievous. Under a despotism they may be necessary, but there is no place for them under our free and popular government. They are a fraud upon the people, and the only motive for organizing them is that the purposes and the methods of the conspirators will not bear the light. If their objects were such as could be openly avowed and discussed they would be boldly presented, and adherents would be sought by reason and argument. It is as true now as ever that "men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." In secret parties the leaders are more or less clever and ambitious tricksters, and their followers are generally dupes. Mystery has a strong fascination for some minds, and the consciousness that they are sharers in a secret is as enticing as the machinery of pass-words, grips and other flummery. Political secrecy is demoralizing, because the member of a secret organization surrenders his independence and becomes the slave, not merely of the majority, but of designing leaders, whose decisions take the shape of decrees, which the followers are compelled to obey. This vice of such organizations is illustrated by the letter which we published yesterday. "The orders may come even at the last minute to kill off Jefferson." Whose orders? Why, those of the leaders of the party, of course, who decide in secret conclave whether they will put up or pull down candidates, and call upon the members to execute their decrees. The members must "be on hand" awaiting orders. They may wish to nominate Mr. Jefferson, or may prefer some other, or they may be divided in opinion among several candidates, but the exercise of individual judgment is not tolerated. "Orders may come even at the last minute" to reverse all that had been previously determined. Decision is the function of the leader, obedience the duty of the individual member.

The organizatian is founded in fraud, and, of course, its masters have no scruples in using fraudulent methods when these will serve their purpose. The members at large may not be aware of this dishonesty, but they are its instruments and its victims. Because the whole concern is dishonest in its inception, mischievous in its aims, unsuited to popular institutions, and a fraud upon them, overbearing and despotic in its management and demoralizing in its methods, a secret party seldom flourishes long. American citizens will not long endure the yoke which is laid upon them. Exposure comes sooner or later, and the consequence of exposure is certain defeat and ignominy. Membership of a secret party is everywhere accounted a reproach. Who likes to be reminded that he was a Know-Nothing thirty years ago, and how many ambitious politicians every year are forced to meet this damaging imputation and repel it as best they can? In our local politics the presence of this evil thing has long been suspected. Its influence has been seen in many instances and it was always bad. Now it has been brought to light so that it can be seen in all its ugliness. No man whose judgment has not been misled by plausible sophistries or distorted by prejudice can fail to see that the first political duty now demanding attention is to crush out this un-American, un-republican, mischievous, ignoble and vicious little reptile. They can do it this very day by attendance at the caucuses in overwhelming numbers, and showing by their action that that they can and will do their own business, without the dictation of any such conclave. The dark-lantern party when confronted with the mass of Republicans who disdain concealment and resent dictation is impotent and contemptible.—Worcester Daily Spy, Oct. 21.

MINISTERS' CHILDREN.

Scoffers sometimes point to a rake who is the son of a minister and thereby seek to revile Christianity itself. It is very seldom they are able to do that, as most sons of ministers are worthy boys and men. The rare exceptions are readily accounted for without supposing that the holy example, wise teaching and fervent prayers of a pious father tend to make his sons worthless vagabonds. In rare instances there are ministers who are unholy, and though they may keep up a fair outside show, their children know them to be corrupt. The sons of such are likely to be infidels or worse. In other cases unwise ministers bring up their sons in idleness and pride, which is sure to spoil them. The most carefully prepared statistics show that as a rule the sons of ministers compare favorably for worthiness and ability with the sons of any other class. □This is only saying that the sons of pious parents start in life's race with unspeakable advantages over the sons of those who know not the great salvation brought to man by our Lord Jesus Christ.

"A gentleman, when challenged to show that more of the children of ministers than of others did not turn out ill, took for a test case the city where the challenger lived, Newark, New Jersey. After calling up the children of fifty ministers who had lived there the preceding thirty years, including nearly 150 persons, it was found that three or four had become permanently disreputable, and one or two infamous; twenty or twenty-two had not amounted to much; all the rest had occupied honorable positions, and some had risen very high. When the test was applied to other professions and kinds of business the challenger gave up in a few minutes. Try this thoroughly in any city, county, or synod, for a period of forty years, and it will soon appear that the sons and daughters of ministers, as a class, reflect honor upon their parents' vocation."

—The Rev. Dr. Sankey, of Rochester, N. Y., who has just returned from the Presbyterian Council at Belfast, is reported as having said a few days ago: "I believe the Presbyterian churches of England, Scotland and Ireland are tending toward ritualism very rapidly. This is especially so in the Scottish churches, surprising as it may seem."

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

Stephen Howland, standing with his hoodwink over his eyes, doubtful, bewildered, curious, was in a receptive rather than critical posture of mind. It did not even occur to him to ask with Pilate, "What is Truth?" But how shall we excuse his pastor, the Rev. Theophilus Brassfield, who is one of that masked company, and only the previous Sabbath preached from the text, "I am the Way and the TRUTH and the Life!"

"The stranger now awaits our mystic rites," solemnly pronounced the figure in the black robe.

"Then at once the chains prepare," said the one on the right hand in a disguised and sepulchral voice. And a chain was accordingly thrown over his shoulders, brought around under his arms and tied behind. "Now! bind him to the stake!" chimed in the one on the left; but the black-robed figure interupted this cheerful proposition with, "Hold! Brothers! shall we proceed in these, our mystic rites, or shall we mercy show?" And from the masked assembly in a low hesitating murmur came the answer, "Mercy—mercy show."

All this did not appear to Stephen nearly as foolish as it probably appears to the reader. Whether it be a case of magnetism, or snake charming, or the mere influence of one set of minds on another, it generally makes all the difference in the world whether we are inside or outside the circle. And Stephen was inside, caught in the whirlpool of all this spiritual jugglery. He had not the smallest fear of any personal harm, yet his flesh crept with a cold shiver as the faint tolling of a bell struck on the silence. When he was a boy he well remembered that sound; how he used to count the strokes; one, two for the infant; eighteen, twenty for the youth and maiden; five and forty for the life gone down in its meridian; fourscore for the aged and full of days; how solemnly they floated out from the little country church, and reverberated amidst the quiet of those green hills; and how each one seemed like a separate voice out of the dim shadowy shores of eternity, as awful and mysterious as the voice of the Apocalypse! And by a curious but not extraordinary trick of memory as he was led slowly around the room the clank of his fetters brought to recollection an old hymn often sung by his mother about her work:

> "How sad our state by nature is!
> Our sin, how deep it stains!
> And Satan binds our captive minds
> Fast in his slavish chains."

Meanwhile he in the black robes delivered a melancholy harangue, intended to deepen still further the solemnizing effect. "Man in darkness and chains! How mournful the spectacle! Yet it is but the condition of millions of our race who are void of wisdom, though they know it not. We have a lesson to impart to him—one of great moment and deep solemnity; a faithful exhibition of the vanity of worldly things—of the instability of wealth and power—of the certain decay of all earthly greatness." But Stephen hardly heard it in the sense of receiving any definite impression therefrom. It all mingled together—a bewildering, bewitching, stupefying draught of enchantment, till he felt the hoodwink slowly taken off, and was told "to contemplate the scene before him."

Stephen Howland looked. He saw the coffin, the skeleton, and the two sepulchrally attired figures, one at each end holding up lighted candles which threw into broad relief every repuguant feature of the sight on which he gazed—from the eyeless sockets to the fleshless mouth on which seemed to be set Death's horrible grin of triumph. In common with most healthy physical natures he shrank from all sight and contact with such emblems of human mortality. Coffins and graves, skulls and crossed bones he had no morbid fancy for contemplating, but his nerves were strong and he did not even change countenance, but looked steadily as bidden while the dreary harangues went on with their lessons on the instability of life and the certainty of death, which, divested of all their superfluous and high-sounding phrases might have been found in any child's primer.

Then he was again blindfolded and lead a short distance to where, the hoodwink being once more removed, he found himself confronted by an apparition hardly less startling. It was that of an old—a very old man, whose years to all appearance rivalled Methusaleh's. He was clad in a long black robe, tied closely at the neck and waist and reaching to the feet; his long grey hairs swept his shoulders, a beard of silvery whiteness descended to his waist, and he leaned on his staff for very age. To this personage Stephen was now introduced with due formality as the Venerable Warden of the lodge, and commanded to listen to his words of wisdom, which unfortunately lost not a little of their impressiveness from the fact that he discerned, or thought he discerned, the voice of Mr. Felix Basset under the trembling accents of this lodge Methusaleh. From thence he was led to the chair of another dignitary, the Worthy Vice Grand. At the mandate of this officer who was clad all in celestial blue, the chain and hoodwink were taken off and the obligation administered with the assurance that it would not conflict with any of the exalted duties he owed to God, his country or himself. And with his right hand on his left breast Stephen Howland promised: "never to communicate to any one unless directed to do so by a legal lodge, the signs, tokens or grips, the term, traveling or other passwords, belonging to the Independent Order of Odd-fellows; never to expose or lend any of the books or papers relating to the records or secret work of the order to any person or persons, except to one specially authorized to receive him; never to reveal any private business which might be transacted in his presence in this or any other lodge; to abide by the laws, rules and regulations of the lodge, the Grand Lodge of the State or any other Grand or working lodge to which he might be attached; never to wrong a subordinate or Grand lodge to the value of anything; never to take part or share directly or indirectly in any illegal distribution of the funds or other property of the lodge; never to wrong a brother, or see him wronged without appraising him of approaching danger, and should he be expelled or voluntarily leave the order to consider this promise as binding out of it as in it."

All this while the presiding officer of the lodge, the Noble Grand, had been hidden behind a red curtain, and pretended at first to be exceedingly busy, but finally condeseended to appear, dressed in a robe of Babylonish searlet, and instruct still further the young novitiate,—said instructions being supplemented by a long closing lecture from another officer, the Worthy Past Grand, in which he was told that the general design of the order was to teach the principles of universal fraternity, and improve and elevate mankind—in short, do for him what Christianity has always claimed to do, and actually done, in the judgment of many honest souls who will even point you in their simple credulity to numerous facts both of private experience and written history that would really seem to prove them right in their belief.

And then the farce was over. Stephen Howland was a duly initiated member of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, entitled to the fraternal greetings and congratulations of his new made brothers, as a sharer with them in all its privileges, temporal and spiritual. Of these Mr. Felix Basset was naturally foremost.

"Now what is there in Odd-fellowship that a Christian man can possibly object to?" he inquired with a beaming smile of triumph. "You've found it just as I told you,—a teacher of morals and religion all through."

"I must confess that many times as I have heard its beautiful and instructive ritual," observed the Rev. Theophilus Brassfield, as he too extended a fraternal hand, "they strike me at every repetition with new force and beauty. In this changing age it is good to have a form of sound words which, like the old Episcopal liturgy, time and fashion cannot alter."

The fact that the Odd-fellow's ritual has been altered twice since 1844 was one of which the reverend gentlemen was either ignorant, or else it had slipped his memory. And Stephen Howland, who knew as little of the history of the institution he had joined as he did of Voudoohism, could only smile assent.

"That is what I always tell people," put in Mr. Green, a prosperous grocer and an enthusiastic member of the order. "I tell them that only we insiders know the first letter of Odd-fellowship; and as to there being anything ridiculous in the ceremonies I never felt so solemn in my life as I did the night I was initiated."

But Mr. Van Gilder, the keeper of a livery stable near by, who was looked upon by the brethren of the stricter sort, as rather a scandal to the lodge, through his convivial habits, to say nothing of other and worse ones of which he was suspected, seemed to look on the matter in a slightly different light.

"Hang it all, Green;" he interrupted. "What is the use of long faces? You like a jolly good time as well as any of us."

Some of the brethren chuckled at this hit, and one remarked, "He has you there, Green." While still another member, conscious perhaps, that the minister, who as chaplain of the lodge was generally present, was not yet out of earshot, took up the cudgels.

"Come, Van Gilder; that is no way to talk. If you don't want religion now you will some time. If Odd-fellowship didn't teach what I call pure religion I should'nt care anything for it. But I say it does. I always feel after seeing a candidate initiated just as solemn as though I had been to a prayer-meeting."

Stephen, on whom the "solemn" effect was fast wearing off, leaving him in a state of general doubt as to whether the whole thing was a religious ceremony ar a harlequin play, was glad to get out into the night air and feel its reviving breath on his face. But as the worthy members separated, or rather broke up into little knots which took different streets according to the direction of their several homes, his ears were greeted by another scrap of talk of a slightly different tenor. It was near enough to election for those political straws to be flying about, which show office-seekers whether the wind is to blow fair or foul on the all-important day that is to decide their destiny at that throne of King People, the ballot-box.

"Finch stands a chance to get a good many votes," said one lodge brother, "unless the Democrats can put up a stronger man than either he or Putney."

"Finch is popular with a few crooked sticks," responded the other with a knowing air, as he stopped to light his cigar; "but of course the third party can't carry the day. It's Putney that has got the inside track, you may depend on that."

"There'll be lots of bolting done."

"Let 'em bolt, then. It won't make much difference. We might get a worse man for Governor than General Putney. He's backed up by all the Grand Army Posts, beside. That's the way he came to be nominated. The thing was worked up neat by Putney's friends. You see I was there and I saw it all. They kept mum till nearly all the candidates were named, and then Judge Dorsey got up and proposed General Putney's name. There was some hissing then and a great deal of confusion, for if the General has got his friends he's got his enemies, too. But the judge kept cool. He had two strings to his bow, and he laid it on so thick about Putney's record in the war, and what a good friend he had always been to the soldiers—how he had worn himself out in their interests trying to get Congress to pass increased pension bills, I tell you when he finished his speech the boys in blue could have been heard a mile."

Only the last part of the talk reached Stephen Howland's ears in any corrected shape, but his mind had a natural bent in the direction of politics. He was interested in the movements of parties and the prospests of candidates, while hating political trickery and wire-pulling with all his heart. He had a sincere wish that the people should understand better who and what they were voting for instead of being made mere figure-heads, having a show of sovereignty, while the actual power was vested in a few unscrupulous party leaders, who manipulated the conventions, and nominated or rubbed out at their own sweet will without the least regard for what their constituents really wished. Though so young when the war ended that the roar of cannon and ringing of bells which announced the fall of Richmond had left only a faint echo in his memory, he had a genuine patriotic feeling of friendliness and respect for old soldiers who had ventured their lives for the Stars and Stripes, and he believed their claims should be ever held in remembrance by the government they had fought to save; and it was natural that he should feel a proportionate indignation when he saw them made the mere puppets of politicians who sought by playing on their selfish interests to make them stepping-stones on which to mount higher in the scramble for preferment. He had heard of Gen. Putney, and knew him to be a low, vulgar demagogue. So this was the way in which he was hoisted into office; by a trick of clap-trap oratory appealing to the selfishness or the gratitude—it was hard to say which—of the country's veteran defenders for whom he cared not a straw except as they could be made subservient to his own political advancement!

Stephen was thinking it over when a hand was laid familiarly on his shoulder—the hand of one of his new-made lodge brothers.

"Warmest evening I ever saw so late in the season. Step in here and have a glass of lemonade. I'll stand treat."

Stephen was not thirsty, but he accepted the invitation, thinking it would appear churlish to refuse; and followed his guide, nothing witting, into the fashionable restaurant, which was likewise one of the genteel drinking places that with others not so genteel, flourished under the very noses of the Sons of Temperance, Rechabites and Good Templars to the mystification of many of the worthy citizens of Jacksonville who could by no means understand why the mice should play when the cat was not away.

An hour or two later Stephen Howland was kicking off his boots in his office, which was also his only sleeping room, with the feeling of one just awakening from an opium dream.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Mithras Lodge of Perfection duly celebrated its "Lodge of Sorrow" in the Congregational church of this city on the night of the 17th. The ceremonies are described as very impressive; and, as an advertisement of the order it will have some commercial value. Its most marked effect will be the assuring of the Christian public that the First Congregational church of Washington, which aspires to be the metropolitan church, is fully in sympathy with the institution of Freemasonry.

It was needful that such a declaration should be made, for though a good many of its members are Masons, its leading supporters are pronounced opponents of the order. The late pastor, Dr. Rankin, Pres. Patton of Howard University and Hon. S. C. Pomeroy are all on record as Anti-masons. It was therefore a matter of some moment that some effort should be made to concilitate an arrogant, selfish and anti-Christian order, that has both money and influence, of which this church thinks she has need. One of the most important things is that the character of men and institutions shall be fully understood, that men may "discern between the righteous and the wicked," and "between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not." It is exceedingly painful to see a church that was planted here as the representative of advanced Christian principles, and which has done much excellent service in opposing the spirit of caste, as well as in general missionary work, take sides with blasphemers and haters of Christ, but if their sympathies are on that side it ought to be known.

It is with great pleasure that I call attention to the labors of Bishop Wm. Taylor, who is now in this city. On Sabbath, the 25th, I listened to him in the Metropolitan M. E. church. Perhaps no man since the days of the apostles has done so much aggressive Christian work in so short time and with such limited means. Born in Virginia, he commenced his ministerial work as a street preacher in Baltimore. At the time of the most intense gold excitement in California he went to San Francisco, not to get wealth, but to save men. He asked no support from any church or missionary society, but labored with his hands and preached on the streets with wonderful power. The intense worldliness that surrounded him only stimulated to greater efforts. We next see him in South America, India and South Africa, preaching the Gospel, founding churches, schools and colleges, and planting missions; till now there are more than one hundred and fifty missionaries in these fields, all sent out and sustained without asking aid from any missionary society.

As a result of his labors in India a missionary conference was organized, which sent him as delegate to the late General M. E. Conference in Philadelphia, which made him Bishop of Africa, but left the details of the work as it has been heretofore, solely to his own discretion. He now proposes to take a band of missionaries into the heart of Africa, a thousand miles from the coast. It is hoped to establish a chain of stations across the continent by the way of the Congo, Lakes Tanganzika, and Nyassa, and the Zambezi. It is said that in the central equatorial regions of Africa there are a people that have made considerable progress in civilization, among whom there is a most hopeful field. He goes out soon with about twenty missionaries, who are to depend entirely on the support they will receive on the field. He asks nothing from missionary societies, though he does not undervalue their labors, but will accept donations for a Transit Fund.

Mr. Taylor has the advantage of a large, well-proportioned frame, a vigorous constitution and a well-balanced practical mind. His fifty years sit lightly upon him, and his experience and executive ability are indications of a grand success. The Christian world will watch with great interest this stupendous undertaking, a work which, considered simply in its commercial results, will be worth a thousand-fold more than all the Arctic expeditions, and will be in every respect of incalculable advantage to Africa and to mankind.

The very general celebration both here and throughout the country by both Jews and Gentiles of the one hundredth birth-day of that distinguished philanthropist, Sir Moses Montefiore, attests the respect that universal humanity always pays to practical benevolence.

The electric lights on Pennsylvania Avenue, which were sometime since discontinued, are now to be replaced, the wires running underground. It is quite probable that ere long electricity will take the place of gas in all our large cities.

The report of the Hon. Hiram Price, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommends an increased number of agents, increased appropriation for the support of Indian schools, and increased pay to agents. None but those who have made the Indian problem a study, can appreciate the extreme folly of the war policy, and the vast importance of thorough and persistent efforts for the education and civilization of this unfortunate people.

Just now there is a great exodus from this city. Department clerks and others are going by scores and hundreds to the States of which they are citizens, to vote. For the time being all else is held in suspense until the great political contest is decided. "Shall we turn the rascals out?" or, "shall we keep the rascals out?" Surely, we ought to do both.

THE U. S. GOVERNMENT BECKONS TO THE LODGE.

The following from the pen of Prof. Loy of Capital University of Columbus appears in the last number of the Lutheran Standard, and forcibly reminds the reader of the lodge farce in 1874 over the government building in this city:

"The United States government is erecting a new building in this city, the corner-stone of which was laid last week by the Masonic lodge. A number of Masonic documents were deposited in the box, a Masonic chaplain said a prayer, and a Masonic dignitary delivered a speech. Those who represent the United States government probably mean no kind of offence to any of their fellow-citizens in such a proceeding, but they ought to know that there are thousands of Christians who are insulted by the performance and prominence which is thus given to a deistic institution, and the opportunity which is thus afforded its adherents to flaunt their natural religion in the faces of Christians. That the opportunity is gladly embraced was again shown by the eulogy on Masonry pronounced on the occasion, just as if that were of course the religion of the American people. The speaker said, for instance: 'Religion must teach moral rectitude. A brother is in a Mohammedan lodge—the square, the plumb and the level are his emblems, and the speaker would recognize him. If a Mason practices the principles symbolized here and to be found in the grand old institution, he would at last stand at the right hand of the Grand Master of the universe. On the master's chart are found two parallel lines, one representing John the Baptist, or man's duty toward God, and the other John the Evangelist, or man's duty toward man. Inscribed within these lines is a circle, representing the path that a Mason must follow. When this path is followed the traveler cannot but be saved at last, even if he be a Persian fire worshiper, Buddhist, or Mohammedan, among whom there can be no connection except the noble contention as to who shall do the best work.' Such a religion has no word for Christ and Christianity, but Christians who know that Christ is the only hope of mankind therefore want none of it, and have reason to protest against its being disseminated under the auspices of the United States government."

A THRILLING REMINISENCE.

FROM THE ANNUAL ADDRESS OF MISS MARY ALLEN WEST AT THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION, W. C. T. U.

What has the future in store? Let the past answer through its history of another struggle of the Christianity of the nation with another national sin.

About forty years ago I attended my first political convention, the first anti-slavery convention ever held in Peoria. I came with my father and mother and I love to remember that in the inception of that great reform as in this, father, mother, and children stood side by side. We reached Peoria the night before the convention, but no hotel or home dared shelter us, for fear of the mob which was even then gathering. Moses Pettingill secured an unfurnished, unfinished room in a warehouse, were we women spent the night in darkness, lest a light should betray us to the raging mob. My father, with my uncle, Levi Spencer, one of the earliest pastors of this church, and other men were guarding points liable to attack, and while engaged in this duty Mr. Spencer was wounded in the head by a brickbat thrown through the window. The mob seized a poor fellow whom they mistook for an Abolitionist, tarred and feathered him and rode him on a rail through your streets. The grim procession, heralded by oaths and lighted by torches, passed our retreat. I shall never forget the weird scene, nor the impression this first torchlight procession made upon me.

The convention met next morning in a small private room, because no church or public hall would open its doors to the Abolitionists. One row of benches against the wall of the little room accommodated all that attended that meeting. My father sat on the end of the bench nearest the door, with me on his lap. He was appointed secretary, and placing me on the seat took a chair at the rude table.

Soon the door opened and the leader of the last night's mob entered—a big burly butcher, armed with a club with which he had doubtless felled many a beef. He closed the door, took his stand in front of it, planted his club close beside be and leaned on it right over my head. For a time which seemed to me interminable, he stood there. Then restrained from doing the meditated violence by a power he did not know, he withdrew. Twenty years later I saw that same man in the streets of Galesburg as captain of a band of Wide Awakes, parading in honor of the Abolition President, Abraham Lincoln.

When such changes are wrought in the space of a short score of years, what may we not hope for in a cause as sacred and never so despised as was abolition. The fact that we meet here, in the strong hold of the liquor interest, that this beautiful church throws open its doors and decks itself with flowers for our reception, that we are welcomed to the loveliest homes in your city, all this indicates that our hopes are nearer fruition than were the hopes of the Abolitionists twenty years before the strong, clean hand of Lincoln struck the shackles from the slaves.

And the same God who commanded in that struggle is our leader. He it is that fighteth for us, for "the battle is not yours, but God's." We know not the way nor time when he will give the victory, but we know it will come.

He hath sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat,
He is sifting out the hearts of men before his judgment seat;
Be swift, my soul, to answer him, be jubilant, my feet,
For God is marching on.

—The late Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows voted 100 to 42 to retain the color line, excluding the colored races.

—The Grand Lodge report of New Hampshire Odd-fellows gives their total revenue for the past year as $61,251.85; total relief, $25,054.20, which shows that it cost $36,197.65 to run this benevolent machine. In other words, it cost each brother a little over $6.12 to give for charity $2.50.

American Politics.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

As we go to press, Wednesday morning, the election returns are too meager to forecast the final result with any assurance. The election of Cleveland is claimed in New York city, with some enthusiasm; but the Republicans are hopeful. The returns put Illinois and Wisconsin among the doubtful States, with New York Republican by only 2,000. Pennsylvania gives Blaine 55,000 over Cleveland, and Ohio 35,000. In Illinois Carter Harrison is defeated. The vote for St. John is meagerly reported, but Wheaton, Ill., seems to be the banner town, with 61 votes, or nearly twenty per cent. The election is so close that it will probably be several days before either party can claim the victory.

—C. D. Coppock asks what were the Logan Black Laws under which St. John was arrested in Illinois. The first of the Illinois "Black Laws" are found in the statutes for 1845; but additions were made for ten or fifteen years subsequently. In 1853 John A. Logan, then a young man just entered the bar, was member of the legislature, and moved a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee "to report a bill to effectually prevent the emigration of free negroes into this State." A little later, as chairman of that committee he reported, pushed and carried a bill embodying the blackest of the Black Code. General Logan has probably repented of that folly, but there are many colored men who voted for him who would be glad to know it.

OUR CHOICE.

"The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitudes of the isles be glad." Yes, my Lord is my Chief Magistrate. I elected him forty-five years ago, and have chosen him anew every day since. I like his administration better every day. He will never be ex-President. As Ruler he puts all others in the shade. He has been slandered more than all the Presidential candidates put together. Man nor demon could find one spot on his holy character. Nay, demons themselves said, "We know thee, who thou art, the Holy One of God." His august presence wrung one truth even from the devils. Do the slanderers of Presidential nominees know that they will have to give an account for every idle word they utter in the day of judgment? Do the candidates themselves know they too will stand before our Chief Magistrate to be judged?

Ho! Blaine and Logan, Cleveland and Hendricks, St. John and Daniel, and all the aspirants to the White House, remember the Lord reigneth and rejoice with us.

"Jesus reigns where'er the sun Does his successive journeys run."

Every plank in his platform is sound, and will endure while law and equity endure. Though clouds and darkness are round about him, judgment and justice are the habitation of his throne. He is right on the tariff, prohibition, the lodge, and all the moral issues, known and unknown, throughout his dominion—the universe. His laws are fundamental. All human laws which antagonize them are counterfeits. He prohibits lodgery: "Swear not at all." He prohibits intemperance; and, of course, licensing intemperance. Human license to sell whisky as a beverage, is law just as counterfeit money is money—no law. Now, under his (Christ's) reign I am shouting happy, let who will be President of these United States. His administration, his providence, is my inheritance. As Spurgeon says, with such an inheritance we need not chafe over the price of wheat. "Let the people be glad." O ye party-shrunk souls! Will ye shout Blaine, Cleveland, St. John? Raise monuments to creatures "whose breath is in their nostrils." So the "people gave a shout and said, It is the voice of a god and not of a man." "So Herod was eaten with worms and gave up the ghost." Poor soul, he "gave not God the glory." The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth; let earth and heaven rejoice. Amen.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

"NOT GOOD AT THIS TIME."

A GOOD ARGUMENT TO REMEMBER FOR NEXT ELECTION.

Hushai, the Archite, said this concerning the counsel that Ahithophel had given to Absalom as to the best way to carry out his conspiracy against David. A great many good people say the same thing now concerning the urgent advice and entreaty to vote for prohibition and St. John. The advice is good, but not at this time, not because they are opposed to St. John or his principles and policy, but they don't want to endanger the dear old Republican party, lest something terrible may happen as a result. How many of these are in the habit of inculcating the duty of doing right and leaving results to God. They don't want us to throw away our votes. Now we intend to vote for prohibition, and want others to do it "at this time," not because we certainly expect that St. John will be elected now, but because we want to see a vote rolled up that will foreshadow beyond a doubt that he or some one like him will come to the Presidency in 1888. And we believe in God that very few if any of us will be left as was Ahithophel, to "hang ourselves,' just because our wishes are not complied with even four years or eight years from this time. Mrs. Stowe said at a gathering made in her honor a few years since, that in looking over the past she had come to the conclusion that somehow in God's providence what ought to be will be. So far as the rooting up of Satan's mulberry patch is concerned, it is true. And the liquor business is one of his most deadly trees. It will have to go.

W. W. AMES.

THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

The refusal of Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of Iowa, to act with the National W. C. T. U., because of its action in St. Louis, has called general attention to the position of that society as a factor in National politics, and has subjected it to unjust and censorious criticism from the bigots of the Republican press. Mrs. Willard, editor of the Union Signal, sends to the Inter Ocean an account of the political debate in St. Louis, from which the following is taken:

The resolutions of the body covered a wide range of opinion, including woman suffrage, the prohibition principle, and a reaffirmation of our sympathy with whatever political party declared in its platform for prohibition and home protection. These were all adopted with little or no dissent save the last. It was late on Friday afternoon when this was reached, and although the sentiment of the convention was largely in its favor, an adjournment was agreed upon unanimously, and the discussion of this resolution was made the order of the day at 10 a. m. on Saturday.

When this hour arrived it was recognized by all that no more important position was ever taken by the society than that which seemed the inevitable outcome of the debate. There was therefore a mighty impulse given to the prayers and songs which preceded the discussion.

The debate was frequently interrupted by an earnest prayer; lasted, with the exception of an hour of recess at noon, until nearly 6 o'clock in the evening. It was the finest exhibition of tender consideration, gentle firmness, keen logic, solid argument, and elevation of spirit that I have ever witnessed. The Inter Ocean speaks of it as a "squally time;" but a much apter and more truly descriptive expression, carrying out the nautical phraseology, would be that a good stiff breeze was blowing and all sails were set. There was no quarrel or disposition to quarrel. Every speaker was given five minutes till it came to Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, whose time was extended by common consent to fifteen minutes, after which it was decided by the convention that the same time be given to a speaker from the other side, and then the roll of States should be called and every State not already heard from should be given five minutes. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop gave the main speech, and a dozen or more speakers followed her on behalf of their respective States, and the vote by yeas and nays was taken all in good order, but with very interesting incidents as the delegates arose and gave their votes somewhat after this fashion:

Miss Lucia Kimble—Yes, for the children's sake.

Mrs. T. B. Carse—Yes, for my boy's sake, who casts his first vote this year.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster—No, for Constitutional prohibition's sake.

Others—Yes, for God and home and native land, and so on just about in this proportion of aye and no, for when the vote was counted the convention stood 182 for and 52 against the resolution, which reads as follows: We refer to the history of ten years of persistent moral suasion work as fully establishing our claim to be called a non-political society, but one which steadily follows the white banner of prohibition wherever it may be displayed. We have, however, as individuals, always alied ourselves in local and State political contests with those voters whose efforts and ballots have been given to the removal of the dram-shop and its attendant evils, and at this time, while recognizing that our action as a National society is not binding upon States or individuals, we reaffirm the positions taken by the society both at Louisville in 1882, and at Detroit in 1883, pledging our influence to "that party by whatever name called, which shall furnish us the best embodiment of prohibition principles and will most surely protect our homes." And as we now know which National party gives us the desired embodiment of the principles for which our ten years' labor has been expended, we will continue to lend our influence to the political organization which declares in its platform for National prohibition and home protection. In this, as in all our progressive effort, we will endeavor to meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, denunciation with kindness, and all our difficulties and dangers with prayer.

Not so very formidable or pugnacious a document surely, and one that might have been expected most certainly from any but the most craven cowards, after the repeated declarations of the last two or three years.

"With malice toward none and charity for all," the organization takes its stand on the structure of ten years' thought and effort along the lines of a creed which includes the removal of the dram-shop from our streets by law.

To do other than it has done would be to tear down that structure. It would be as was said in the debate by one honest speaker, "The W. C. T. U. deserting her own child." The position of to-day is but another form of the crusade. Eleven years ago, amidst more criticism than is now visited upon them, a band of almost despairing women invaded the saloons on the streets of Ohio. To-day, in as much faith in God, but equally despairing of help from those political parties which are dominated by the brewery and the dram-shop, the W. C. T. U. enters the crusade upon the saloon in politics.

THE MASONS ON ST. JOHN.

Mr. M. L. Knight, an attorney of Chicago, having addressed a letter to the editor of the Cynosure, through the daily press, asking his reasons for supporting St. John and leaving the Republican party, the reply drew out the following growl from the lodge, in the Inter-Ocean:

PAYS NO DUES.

BRAIDWOOD, ILL., Oct. 29.—In your issue of to-day appears the following: "Governor St. John says he has not been in a Masonic lodge for seventeen years, never shall be again, and pays no dues." Poor, unfortunate dude he must be, that is obliged thus publicly to announce that he has probably been kicked out of the grandest secret organization the world ever knew; one that gathers under one banner the pick and flower of every nation, from the honest Christian king or prince to the humble honest laborer in the field. Had the poor fellow but lived in another day he would doubtless have been a Judas or a doubting Thomas.

There are thousands and thousands of us who are rock-rooted prohibitionists, but we will wait until we can vote for a man with a brain and an idea.

We would like to know the true nature of his offense, if it is so serious that he never expects to be in a lodge again.

A MASON.

"The unprotected American hen still suffers from the pauper labor of Europe, the number of eggs imported free of duty in the year being, in round number, 200,000,000, or 16,500,000 dozen."

The above is another illustration of our need, as a nation, of a high tariff. Clapp a heavy duty on foreign eggs, and not ruin our whole chicken property.

A correspondent in Douglas county, Kansas, is roused by a Republican meeting to say a few words respecting it and his own vote:

One good old "soldier of the cross" talked at length, tears in his eyes, of his fidelity to the noble temperance cause, and said that if he thought it would win he would vote for it; but that he was a Republican and always expects to be one as long as he lives, and after as long as there is a Republican party. The last sentence was well timed, for I think he will soon be released from that responsibility.

The first ballot I ever deposited was as a Free-soiler. After the Republican bird was hatched in the political manger I tried faithfully to help hold up its unfledged wings until some cruel politicians severed the body from the wings four years ago; then I came over on the Lord's side, to stay, and voted for Bro. Neal Dow. I voted three times for St. John; and, by Hon. S. C. Pomeroy's permit, I will vote for him again.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE POLE-STAR IN THE SOUTH.

NEW IBERIA, LA., Oct. 27, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—For several successive weeks I have been the highly-favored recipient of your invaluable journal. Whether this has been the result of your benevolence or that of some other beneficent lover of humanity and right, I have no means of ascertaining; but to whomsoever the credit may be due, please allow me, through the Cynosure, an expression of my most sincere and heartfelt gratitude for so valuable a gift, and of my hearty concurrence with the principles which it so fearlessly vindicates. Would that I had suitable language with which to satisfy my ever-to-be-esteemed donor with the full assurance that by this generous act he has not "cast pearls before swine;" for I shall not fail to peruse each issue carefully, and, as far as practicable, advocate its—the Cynosure's—course.

My first acquaintance with your journal was formed in the young men's reading-room of Talladega College, Ala., where it made its weekly visits about seven years ago. At that time I was a student of the school just mentioned, and of the many worthy periodicals with which our reading-room was favored, the Cynosure received most of my attention. This fact, I must admit, however, was due chiefly to the mere curiosity which was excited by the then-appeared-to-be peculiar course of your paper; for never before had I seen or heard anything against lodgery. But, as I continued to peruse the columns of your journal I was conscious of a constant melting of my conviction into its manly course. These diffident convictions became fixed principles in my character when hearing two lectures from Mr. H. H. Hinman, while upon his tour in Alabama, in the interest of anti-lodgery. The lectures referred to were delivered at Marion, the place of my birth and childhood. By them, together with the information gained from the Cynosure, I became fully convinced of the propriety of your wonderful mission.

In 1881 I left Alabama, and allowed myself to lose trace of your journal till last year, when you honored me with it as an exchange for the People's Weekly Inforuer, of which I was editor and proprietor two years, at Paris, Texas. The greatest and only real antipathy with which my paper met (and there was no small amount of it) was due solely to my refusal to advertise for rum-dealers, and to publish anything that encouraged lodgery. I was called a fool for taking that position, and were that my merited title I deserve it more to-day than then.

During February last I responded to a call to the pastorate of a Congregational church in this place, and for this work in particular I find the Cynosure an inestimable aid. I feel more indebted to your journal than to any other means for not being to-day writhing in a labyrinthine slough of gross idolatry, as is the fearful misfortune of so many ministers (?) of Christ's pure gospel. My soul trembles at the mere thought of its ever having been possible for my feet to have made that fatal step into an abyss and delusion of ruined souls. God be thanked for my escape.

I did not think that my disgust against the lodge could be deepened, till a few Sabbaths ago, at the funeral services of one of its deceased members I saw non-professors of religion performing religious ceremonies, from the sacred desk of an edifice that has been dedicated to our Heavenly Father, for divine worship. And oh! how abhorrent it was to hear a minister of the gospel (?) and a member of the lodge to which the impenitent deceased belonged uttering such phrases as, "The secret chambers above," "The Grand Lodge of Heaven," "Christ, our Grand Worthy Supreme, will recognize our grips and passwords when we meet him in the air," etc, etc. And to me it was alarming to hear the loud "amens" from the vast, misled audience. Surely, "they know not what they do."

I feel called upon of God, by a deep sense of moral obligation, to protest against lodgery and rum, and I will do it. In this we are not alone; for God is for us, and "who can be against us?" Whatever others may think, say or do, my vote and influence will be for St. John and Daniel, the champions of national moral reform. Hitherto I was a Republican; yet I feel it honorable to announce my present stand. Yours for a square fight,

BYRON GUNNER.

INDIA CONFIRMS.

DEAR EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since you sent me the anti-secrecy books and tracts I have been sending them ont. The following letter is from one of the grandest Christian men in India, who was converted about ten years ago, giving up the lodge at once, and having lived a spotless life during all these years before all men, in an important position of trust on one of India's largest railways. Bro. Geering has been a dear friend of mine ever since I came to India, in 1876. His confirmation of the exposure of Masonry settles the last doubt in my mind. Peter Geering cannot lie. Your Brother in Jesus,

C. B. WARD,
Editor India Methodist Watchman.

THE CONFIRMATION.

JUBBULPORE, Sept. 13, 1884.

DEAR BRO. WARD: Your letter, also the beautiful lot of books and tracts, came duly to hand. I have read some portions of the "Master's carpet," and from what I can see of it, as well as from the tracts, they are a clear exposure of the subject they treat of. If what is written in them is not Freemasonry, I must say I have never known it. I passed seven degrees, and was master of a lodge for two years. During that time I initiated several candidates. The ceremonies, as recorded in these books you have sent me, are the same as those I used on those occasions. You may circulate them in the fullest assurance that you are sowing the seeds of a genuine exposure. Your Brother in Christ,

P. GEERING.

P. S.—Bro. Geering has been an honored member of the Methodist church since his conversion. C. B. W.

ARE OUR SECEDERS ALWAYS MASONS?

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Allow me, through the columns of your paper to ask George Warrington if that rule of the Wesleyan church is not a safe and consistent one? With such a rule would the U. B church have been in the terrible struggle with the lodge that it now is engaged in? With the universal claim of Masonry, "Once a Mason always a Mason," and the known fact that it is the obligation that makes the Mason, in taking the obligation does not the man admit the universal claim of Masonry to himself, let him do what he will? And when we see the best of Masons taking official oaths that are in conflict with their Masonic oaths, and they still loyal to the latter, can we expect our church covenants to hold them unless we know that the other bond is broken? And how shall we know in the Mason's case without the proof? I think the Wesleyans are right.

The church to which I belong makes opposition to secret societies a condition of membership. To oppose would be breaking the obligation. We look at it in this way: we are soldiers enlisted under Christ; soldiers are enlisted to fight as well as for other duties; and Christ's soldiers should fight his enemies; and if secretism is not an enemy of Christ, then I do not know of anything that is. R. J. WILLIAMS.

IS ST. JOHN'S CONSCIENCE BOUND.

WEST BRATTLEBORO, VT., Oct. 23, '84.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am now at the home of C. W. Potter, secretary of the Vermont Association.

In the Cynosure for October 16, '84, page 8, is an article purporting to be a statement of Mr. St. John's whereabouts on the Masonic question, in reply to George T. Dissette. Permit me to say that an intelligent Mason would deem the matter unsettled until it were ascertained whether Mr. St. John believes or does not believe the Masonic oaths to be binding.

All that has been said in the Cynosure has more or less weight. But it is known that the doctrine of the lodge is, "once a Mason and always a Mason," In the lodge there is but one answer to the question, "What makes you a Mason?" and that answer is, "My obligation."

So I must insist that the question to be answered is—Has Mr. St. John renounced the Masonic obligation or oath as not binding. Faithfully,

A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VII.—Nov. 16, 1884.—Solomon's Sin.—1 Kings 11: 4-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.—Prov. 4: 23.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The beginning of Solomon's sin. Vs. 4–8 One of the saddest and strangest things recorded in Scripture is the apostasy of Solomon in his old age. Indeed, some commentators have thought it impossible he could have been an actual idolater, and suppose that he simply permitted these heathen orgies without personally participating therein. But the plain words of Scripture forbid any such interpretation. "His heart was not perfect with the Lord his God as was David his father." David sinned often and sinned grossly, but in his case it was the result of sudden and strong temptation, and not of any change in his loving loyalty to God. He could have said with Paul, "When I would do good, then evil is present with me." But Solomon, instead of thus keeping the inner citadel firm for the Lord (see Golden Text), let in pride, love of ease, worldly pleasure—three deadly enemies. He did not go after other gods till "his heart was turned away" from Jehovah by a course of persistent, wilful disobedience. In his desire to surround himself with the pomp and luxury of an Eastern despot, he deliberately broke every one of those laws by which God had meant to guard the liberty and oneness of the Hebrew nation. (Deut. 17: 16, 17.) And we see the outcome: in sight of that temple which he had dedicated to God with such fervent petitions, Solomon built a high place for the cruel and licentious rites of Baal worship. But is there less guilt in the pastor or professing Christian who supports the lodge side by side with the church, and even tolerates its heathen ceremonies in the very sanctuary?

2. The punishment of departing from God. Vs. 9–13. These entangling alliances—this trading and intermarrying with heathen nations—may have seemed to Solomon politically expedient. The Republican party leaders are to-day taking counsel of fleshly wisdom by entering into just such an entangling alliance with the rum power. Like Solomon this party began by obeying God and "doing judgment and justice," but like him it has now turned aside to worship the false gods of the saloon and the lodge; and if its leaders were not blind and deaf they would hear the same warning: "I will surely rend the kingdom from thee." Solomon's sin rent the kingdom in two and laid the foundation for that long period of national apostasy which culminated in the Babylonish captivity and the blotting out of ten tribes so completely that their disappearance has long been one of the mysterious problems of history. Every voter is a sovereign. He can worship God with his ballot as truly as with his prayers, but if party demagogues "turn away his heart" to pay homage at the polls to the lodge god and the saloon god, let him too heed the solemn warning, "I will rend the kingdom from thee." He is helping on anti-Christian and anti-republican forces which will not rest content till all justice and law is secretly or openly subverted,

"And the fair fabric of our liberties
A shapeless mass of wreck and ruin lies."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What hill near Jerusalem was named from Solomon's sin? 2 Kings 23: 13; Jer. 7: 30–34. What did he become at last? Ec. 4: 13. What lesson should his fall teach us? 1 Cor. 10: 12.

NOTES FROM PELOUBET.

"That his wives." The chief queen, no doubt, was the Egyptian princess. But she was surrounded by a vast array of inferior wives and concubines from Moab, Ammon, Edom, Phœnicia, and the old Canaanite races. Such a system must have completely destroyed the character of the royal family, and brought with it the inevitable evils of the Oriental seraglio.—Stanley. He had 700 wives, princesses, and 300 concubines. Why Solomon had so many wives. First reason. For the sake of an alliance with the surrounding nations. Second reason. As Solomon grew in riches, esteem, and power, excelling all other kings in these, he wished also to surpass them in what, according to Eastern ideas even in the present day, especially belonged to the court and splendor of a great monarch, i. e., the largest harem.—Bahr. Third reason. Partly from ostentation, partly from that sensualism which is the most common failing of Oriental monarchs, he established a harem on a grand and extraordinary scale.—Cook. In this he disobeyed God in two respects. (1) He was directly commanded not to multiply wives (Deut. 17: 17). (2) He not only multiplied wives, but took them from the nations with which Israel was not to enter into any close relationship whatever (Deut. 7: 1–4).

"Turned away his heart after other gods," i. e., they succeeded in making him indifferent towards the strict and exclusive religion of Jehovah, and milder and more indulgent towards the worship of their gods.—Bahr. Solomon did not ever openly or wholly apostatize. He continued his attendance on the worship of Jehovah, and punctually made his offerings three times a year in the Temple (1 Kings 9: 25).—Cook. (1) It is nowhere said that he "served" other gods, the expression constantly used of the idolatrous kings (cf. 16: 31; 22: 53; 2 Kings 16: 3, etc.). (2) Had he formally worshiped idols his sin would have been greater than that of Jeroboam, which is so often alluded to, while there is no mention of the idolatry of Solomon. (3) The expressions, "his heart was not perfect" and "he went not fully" (ver. 6) are inconsistent with the idea of idolatry. The essence of this sin was that having permitted himself, for purposes of state and pride and ostentation, the love of many strange women, he permitted them, and possibly some of his subjects also, to worship their false gods. And by so doing he gave a direct sanction to superstition.—Pulpit Com.

"His heart was not perfect with the Lord," i. e., not entirely devoted to the Lord (cf. chap. 8: 61). "As was the heart of David, his father." The sins which constituted Solomon's decadence appear to have been (1) POLYGAMY. Of all the institutions of an Oriental monarchy the most characteristic and the most fatal is polygamy. The life he lived was degrading to his manhood. Love became debased to lust. (2) EVIL COMPANIONSHIP. The Israelites were often warned against marriage with the heathen. (3) EXTRAVAGANCE. The wealth of Solomon was enormous. The king was proportionately extravagant. See the account given of his palaces, his gardens, and his retinue. No country could long bear such a strain. (4) OPPRESSION. He appears to have copied the Pharaohs not only in magnificence, but in disregard for human suffering. The Canaanites were reduced to the position of helots; multitudes were torn from their homes to fell timber in the forests, or hew stones in the quarries. Even the Israelites had to do forced labor. (5) IDOLATRY. Solomon erected temples to Ashtoreth, Milcom and Chemosh. All idolatry was sternly forbidden. The cultus of those deities was hideously cruel, dark, impure. Heathenism degrades man and dishonors God.—E. De Pressense. (6) A FALSE TOLERANCE FOR FALSE RELIGIONS. His wives, having joined him, should have laid aside their former idolatries; but from a false view of their rights, to the wrong of the whole nation, Solomon allowed them to worship idols. (7) HE ENCOURAGED IMMORALITY AND CRUELTY, which were an essential part of the idolatrous worship he allowed. (8) THUS HE DISHONORED AND INSULTED THE ONE TRUE GOD who had given him all his blessings. (9) He did all this in spite of repeated warnings, and great gifts, and remarkable privileges, and uncounted blessings bestowed by God upon him. (10) From whatever cause, the one institution of the Jewish commonwealth which received no visible growth or encouragement during Solomon's reign was the prophetical order.—Stanley. (11) He led Israel into sin by his example and influence. The seeds of sin and disaster were sown among his people.—Peloubet.

These sins were committed by whom? (1) By the wisest of men. (2) By the most favored and enlightened of men. (3) By the builder of the Temple. (4) By the teacher of the Church. (5) By a man who warned others. (6) By a man of age. (7) By one in no sudden or unexpected temptation.—Pulpit Com.

"Likewise did he (i. e., he built high places) for all his strange wives." Having done it for one, he must needs do it for all. Each one must have her own religion in which she was brought up. "No hill about Jerusalem was free from a chapel of devils."—Hall. Incense and the smoke of sacrifices to idols—such sacrifices, in some cases, as even nature abhors—were thus seen rising close to the Temple of Jehovah, and under the very walls of the holy city.—Geikie.

"I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant." It is well worthy of notice that in this announcement the oppression of the people by compulsory labor, and taxes, or despotism, is not given as the reason of the dividing of the kingdom by Jehovah, and of limiting Solomon's dynasty to dominion over one tribe; but only the sin against Jehovah, the "going after other gods." It was just the same in Ahijah's address to Jeroboam (vers. 29–39).—Bahr.

—Miss Mary Hilliard, who belongs to a well-known East End family, has been lame for twenty years, and has been unable to walk, unless she wore a boot and a steel rod fastened to her waist. One Sunday she visited the house of a friend, took off her boot, and joined with three or four others in prayers for her recovery. At the conclusion of the prayers she started for home, leaving her boot and steel supporter in the house. She walked without difficulty, and has since walked freely. She says the best physicians in London and New York pronounced her case hopeless, and that her instantaneous recovery is due to nothing but prayer.—Christian Herald.

MEMORIAL NOTICE OF MRS. H. W. PETTENGILL.

To one familiar with the horrors of war and death upon the battlefield, with all its aggravations, a Christian's exit from life in the sunny room with every comfort, and children and friends waiting around to hear each word and note each look, or sigh, or wish, death, though even then sad, seems robbed in great measure of its terrors.

It was in the month of June, 1821, in a quiet home in the town of Middlebury, Vt., almost under the shadow of those grand old Green Mountains lying east of it, that the subject of this notice was born. She was an active, sprightly child, though rather small and frail; delighted in viewing, even in very early life, the varied and romantic scenery of her native State. Blessed with pious parents who did not leave their duty to be performed by the Sabbath school teacher, she was early instructed from Watts' Catechism for Young Children, and his hymns and songs, and later from the Westminster Catechism, all in connection with the Bible, which was studied and referred to as the standard and umpire in religious instruction. The Sabbath-school, in the church she attended, formed an important auxiliary in her Christian education. She united with the Congregational church in her native town when fourteen years of age, under Dr. T. A. Merrill, its long-time, able and excellent pastor.

In the Female Seminary of Middlebury she enjoyed high intellectual advantages. Miss Nancy Swift, for years at its head, was a lady possessing rare qualities of mind and heart, with skill to use them, and our then young friend highly valued the training she received from her during a course of years, through all which her love of nature, fondness for flowers, fruits and minerals, and the grand scenery surrounding, helped to give elasticity and vigor of body and mind, and she was loved for her gentleness and purity of character.

After completing her education she accepted an invitation to visit her sister, Mrs. J. Blanchard, in Cincinnati, then called the Queen City of the West. She entered with zest into the scenes of that, to her, new world. She engaged in Sabbath and other schools, both in Ohio and Kentucky. In Oct., 1845, she was married to Mr. Silas Tyner, a merchant of Brookville, Ind., and an elder in the Presbyterian church of that place; a man of excellent character and spirit, but who was taken away very suddenly a few years after, leaving his widow, with an only son, to buffet adverse winds and waves. The husband and father being taken so unexpectedly out of an extensive business—his affairs unsettled—only a moiety of what should have been an ample estate could be rescued from the wreck for the support of Mrs. Tyner and her son. But the God of the widow and the Father of the fatherless left not himself without witness in their case. By diligent attention, industry and care, they lived for years in respectability, their means continually increasing.

In the summer of 1866 Mrs. Tyner was united in marriage to Mr. Moses Pettengill of Peoria, whose praise is in all the churches, and whose record as a Christian reformer and an earnest follower of him who went about doing good, sheds on his name a glory far above that which merely human princes or heroes attain. Mrs. Pettengill was in thorough sympathy and accord with her husband in his benevolent and reformatory work. She also delighted in giving, in a quiet, unobtrusive way; but it was a constant stream of good works and alms giving, as those who knew her most intimately can testify. The foreign and home mission work, the freedmen, the poor and unfortunate, temperance, anti-secrecy work, and church work at home, all received something from her hand and heart.

Her interest in Christian education was unwavering. Though for years an invalid, year after year did she accompany her husband to the annual meeting and commencement exercises at Wheaton College, and no one was more observant there and interested than she. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pettengill were anxious to aid that institution, as it set itself against this world's current by espousing each unpopular but needed reform as it came up. They wanted a ministry which would lead and guide public sentiment aright. They wanted institutions of learning that would not allow youth to fall unwarned into secret, oath-bound societies, absorbing both their time and money and then make them slaves for life. Mr. Pettengill, in his last visit with his wife to Wheaton, in the fall of 1883, remarked that what he had given to this college paid him better than any other investment he had made. Such a remark from one so good and so sagacious is heart-cheering. Let us "thank God and take courage."

The Cynosure had a prominent place in Mrs. Pettengill's house. She also contributed a number of very interesting letters to it, giving incidents of travel in California, Florida and Arkansas, which good critics pronounced beautiful and almost faultless in sentiment and expression.

She was esthetic in her tastes and aimed at perfection in whatever department of work she engaged, and so persistent was she that she seldom commenced a work which she did not complete. But life's work has now dropped from her ever-busy hands, the grave covers all of mortal imperfection which was hers; and Jesus, we doubt not, by his strong arm took her safely through, for she said near the close, "Jesus is with me in the ship." We would like to transcribe some of those fitting and forceful words uttered by her former pastor, Rev. A. A. Stevens, at her funeral (which by her request was held in her pleasant home), and to guide the reader, as Mary and Martha once did our Saviour, to her quiet resting-place in Spring Dale cemetery, where by the side of her husband she rests until the resurrection.

A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, HENRY L. KELLOGG, } EDITORS.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1884.

A private letter from Mrs. Prof. Bailey of Washington gives an interesting and encouraging account of the anti-secret reform in our national metropolis.

The brilliant sunsets have returned again, and their cause is as mysterious as ever.—The American.

Star dust from a demolished globe; light reflected from a volcano, etc., were the weak suggestions of science, as possible causes of the rubicund evening light. Has any one attempted to explain the red Aurora Borealis seen toward the North Pole?

Mrs. President C. A. Blanchard, daughter of Dr. A. M. Milligan of Pittsburgh, Pa., died at her home in Wheaton, Ill., Oct. 31, 1884. Her loss is mourned and lamented, not only by her husband and four young children, but by the community in Wheaton. In her last hours she spoke with the power of inspiration to those in the room and some promised her, "with God's help," to become Christians. It was the end of a beautiful life.

"THE PARTHIAN ARROW" was poisoned and shot by men who dared not face their antagonists, but who fired back over their shoulders in full retreat upon their brave pursuers. Such are the Republican arrows shot at St. John on the eve of election, too late for the return-fire, till it is past. It is alleged that St. John married and was divorced in early life. The scavengers searched the old records, loaded their scandal blunderbuss and fired back on the pursuing Prohibitionists, too late for reply and explanation. There is no denial of his long years of integrity and piety such as the sainted Finney lived after his divorce.

THE SITUATION.

Every four years our country, politically, passes through an earthquake period. Such a period is now passing, and while the votes are being counted, and returns coming in, let us take our observations and lay our course anew, as the ship-master does after a blow. Let us see where we are.

1st. There is but one God and Saviour of this lost world, and our only deliverance depends, not on elections or convention, etc., but on "the Spirit poured upon us from on high."

2d. The opponents of secret societies have been all the time and steadily increasing. The American platform has been published by papers outside of the reform, and in many States, and not a plank of that platform has been successfully controverted; indeed, scarcely assailed.

3d. Dr. Pitt Norris of Iowa, says that hundreds of thousands now know of our reform who had not heard of it before the Pittsburgh convention and the change of candidates; and, with the exception of some Masonic mobs, we are treated with decent respect.

4th. The secret lodge system is seen by multitudes to be no local or particular issue, but fundamental to the world's hope, as against the Redeemer of the world; and it is so treated by learned and august organizations; as witness the Canada Presbyterians.

5th. A paper (the American), has been started in Washington under Prof. Bailey, with a fair and steadily increasing list, while the Cynosure list has not, as some feared, very materially diminished.

6th. Denominational differences have produced no dissension, but we have respected the conscientious convictions of each other in church matters, and tendered constantly the one issue, "Christ vs. anti-Christ," and labored together in love.

7th. Some few of our best men have doubted or denied the wisdom of voting for St. John, while the mass of the American party reasoned that, as Senator Pomeroy signified his wish to withdraw, as he had a right to do, finding St. John declaring personally that he stood "on every plank of our platform," though he was the candidate of the Prohibitionists; and, though he had given little attention to the argument on which our cause rests, we have voted for him, which has had a double or treble effect, viz., we have made the Prohibitionists friendly to us, made the Masons distrust and hate them and love Masonic distillers, etc., thus winnowing the nation, and opening a way for our arguments to reach new multitudes of minds.

8th. The dissent among the Americans is nothing so great as among the women. Mrs. Foster of Iowa, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and Susan B. Anthony of New York, Mrs. Livermore of Massachusetts, and Phœbe Couzins of St. Louis, protested powerfully against voting for St. John, yet some of them still avow their adherence and co-operation.

Thus the party which surrounded and followed Christ while on earth, differed more or less through diversity of taste and judgment; but Christianity went on, and is now conquering the world.

The Cynosure now counsels joy and gladness, whether Blaine or Cleveland is elected. Let our wise men write for our papers and give their advice how best we may purify the communion table and the ballot-box. Let us now, as we did in Senator Pomeroy, seek some one to stand for our principles; unite all the reform elements; bring all Christian denominations to our cause, and elect a President in 1888.

INTERPRETING THE CONSTITUTION.

The Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter, (Pittsburgh), says of the Prohibition party: "It has our warmest sympathy." It honors the platform of the American party, by inserting its principal articles with apparent favor; but dissents from the senior editor of the Christian Cynosure, who holds that the Constitution is to be sworn to, as the Bible is received, according to each man's "private judgment" or best understanding of it.

Our admiration of the history, testimonies, and fealty of the Covenanters to Christ, and our personal relations to some of them who are dear to us, make us reluctant to criticise any of their utterances. But we do not relish being put on a level with Mr. Garrison, whose one virtue of opposition to slavery does not, with us, atone for his setting aside the divine authority of the Bible and its Sabbath; and his personal neglect of Christ, his non-recognition of Christ's death, his utter contempt of churches as mere "corporations," and his rejection of voting and law-enforced government. (See his Declaration, Boston, Oct., 1838.)

Our nation is "Christian and not heathen;" or there is no Christian nation, there is no Christian church on earth; no, nor is their a Christian family, not even among the Covenanters; that is to say, no perfect Christian family.

Our Constitution is to "establish justice," Christian justice, equal justice between equal men, of which pagan despotism knows nothing; and though through human imperfection some unjust things were left in it, that no more makes it a "league with hell" than a wrong regulation in a family, or an omission of a right regulation, frees children in that family from the recognition of and obedience to the parents who made the wrong regulation. There are no perfect governments, churches, or families on earth; and if wrong customs, regulations and principles exonorate citizens, church-members, and children from fealty, save only where plain sin is required, then there are not only no Christian states, churches or families, but there are no states, churches or families at all! The flaw must be shown to be fatal, to vitiate either; as adultery kills marriage.

But our government is not fundamentally vicious. People have less to fear from the United States government than from absolute anarchy, which leaves each man's knife at the throat of his neighbor. Let us thank God for our government, and pray and strive to make it better.

The only justification of the Covenanters in their principle of non-voting, is, that God chooses some to testify and others who have, perhaps, less power of generalization or clearness of perception, to vote and make laws, and thus > "Builds on wants and on defects of mind,

> The glory, peace, and virtue of mankind."

—Now the election is over what do our readers propose to do: 1st, To keep young men out of the lodge; 2d, To get those out who are in; 3d, To root out the unrighteous principles of secretism and implant in the heart of the nation the truth of Jesus Christ?

—One of the best means is in the wide circulation of the Cynosure. Read the letter from the young colored pastor in Louisiana in this number.

—The printing of the Cynosure and the election of President could not take place on the same day. Not because both are events too momentous to occur together; but the presses did not run Tuesday, so this issue is a day late.

—In next number we hope to print a fine portrait of Salmon P. Chase, the great Secretary of the Treasury under Lincoln and Supreme Judge. The biography accompanying it will make a valuable paper.

—Rev. J. A. Richards of Ft. Scott, Kansas, called on the Cynosure last week. This noble-spirited brother is as earnest as ever for reform, and rejoices in every foot gained from the enemy and held for Christ. He has been visiting a number of the Wesleyan annual conferences in the place of Rev. D. S. Kinney, the business agent of the denomination, who was compelled to return home on account of the sickness of his wife.

—The appointments of the New York State agent last week were at Hess Road, Price Hill church and Ransomville, with other places in view where meetings would probably be held.

—An esteemed Baptist brother writes that he heard it lately stated in a Sabbath-school class, on Masonic authority, that Hiram of Tyre appointed Hiram Abiff foreman of the building of Solomon's temple, and that the rejected stone referred to one prepared by the latter and refused by the building committee. A mind stuffed with the lies and follies of the lodge is one of the most pitiful ruins of a noble work of God.

—At a recent meeting of the Toronto Presbytery of the Canada Presbyterian church, the Masons and the Oddfellows received an unlooked-for blow. In the report on "the state of religion," the question, "What do you consider hinderances to the cause of Christ in your neighborhood?" the committee answered, "Dancing, tippling, Odd-fellowship, Freemasonry, and practical infidelity among professing Christians." Dr. Gregg, professor in Knox College, Toronto, said he was glad to see that at last the secret societies were mentioned as hindrances to religion. "I consider that Freemasonry is doing a great deal of mischief for the cause of Christ. They [Masons] are doing harm in one way, in that they ignore the mediation of Christ in their prayers to the Almighty."

—At the close of a lecture several years ago in Missouri, a Presbyterian minister arose and said: "A high Mason in this country once said to me, 'Masonry is evil, and only evil. No man can be a Mason for any length of time and have a conscience' I asked, 'Why are you a Mason?' He replied, 'I am often engaged in lawsuits, and I could not gain my suit without the Masons.'" —To the above testimony of the powerful but utterly vicious operation of the lodge in courts, add one to its work in politics. A certain St. John club in Illinois is largely if not wholly composed of Anti-masons. A county nominating convention was held under its auspices made up of the same reform element. The committee on nominations reported in favor of putting one Democrat on the ticket already nominated by his own party, but opposed to lodge and liquor; they also selected one from the Republican ticket of the same character. But opposed to the latter on the Democratic ticket was a high Mason, a man of few redeeming qualities known to the public. Now there appears in the convention a man, little known to the body, who opposes most bitterly and strenuously the nomination of the Republican, and succeeds in getting a third candidate nominated, which he knew would draw off enough Republican votes to elect the Mason. It appears that this person has been acting all along with the Republicans and marched in their club; but professed to have been converted to St. John the day before the Prohibition convention. But beyond his political relations he has been into about every secret order where they would take him, is a Knight Templar and member of a Masonic consistory of the 32d degree, and is very friendly with the Democratic Mason candidate. He has been, moreover, working all the season to secure a Masonic candidate for the office in question, which is that of prosecuting attorney.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The directors of the National Christian Association are hereby called to meet at 221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Nov. 11, 1884, at 10 o'clock, A. M., in the office of said Association. There is business of importance to be considered, and the meeting should be preceded by earnest prayer, and every member of the Board should be present.

JOSEPH TRAVIS, Chairman,
A. J. LAIRD, Sec'y.

Will each member of the N. C. A. Board read the notice and make a note of the time, Nov. 11th, at 10 o'clock A. M. It is very desirable that every member should be present, that we may have the united wisdom of all in planning for the future. The Presidential campaign is over, and it is highly important that a line of policy be clearly defined, so as to avoid misunderstandings, and move with united strength against a common foe.

J. P. STODDARD.

—It cost the New Hampshire Rebekahs $58,366.30 to carry $12,573.01 to their distressed sisters during the past year. The "brethren" manage better than that.

INDIANA STATE CONVENTION.

Albion, Ind., Oct, 26, 1884.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Indiana Christian Association opposed to secretism will be held at Roann, Wabash Co., Indiana, the 25th and 26th of November, inclusive. This point will be easy of aecess from every direction via. the I. P. and C. and Eel Rlver railroads. A number of eminent speakers will be there; among others Elder J. L. Barlow. The election will be over, and we will have time to think of other important matters. Let the friends of reform in Indiana rally to this meeting. By agreement of Executive Committee,

S. L. Cook.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

La Salle, Ill., Oct. 27th, 1884.

I preached in the Congregational church here yesterday and am waiting for a train to the city. The town is Democratic and its population very largely of foreign birth. The Catholic churches are the largest and by far the most wealthy in the town. "St. Patrick's" has been recently refurnished and renovated at an expense, I am told, of $20,000; the altar costing, in Rome, $3,000.

Yesterday the rain fell fast and the streets were exceedingly muddy, but the throng of children, women and men that gathered at this place at the five diffcrent services was, as scen from the streets, simply immense for a city with a population of only 10,000. It was in very striking contrast with the congregations in at least two of the Protestant churches, where I attended services. The Congregationalist church here is without a pastor and apparently very much in need of "a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." There are a few spiritually-minded members who have a mind to work, but most of them seemed depressed in spirit. At the M. E. church Sabbath-school I met Rev. Mr. White, who has recently come to this charge. He spoke in the language of the mystic order, so well understood by "a Masonic brother," and although the superintendent gave me a class to teach and asked me to speak to his school, and the pastor was very gracious at first, yet when I gave him my name, he asked, "Is it J. P. Stoddard?" I said "Yes." He replied, "I have heard of you"; and turned away very abruptly.

In the afternoon there came a "slack," and I took some copies of Pres. C. A. Blanchard's sermon on "The Duty of Christian Voters", and went out on the streets. The saloons were running openly and in full blast, and there were some wretched specimens of their work hanging around the entrances talking politics and apparently waiting for the "drinks." I gave a sermon to any one I met that had the appearance of Christian respectability, though the number, I am sorry to say, was very few, and spoke a few words where it seemed proper to do so, but received not one response favorable to temperance. At the hotel where I was entertained, and from other friends with whom I have conversed, I learn that there are very few business men here who meet the temperance issue squarely and openly contend against the accursed system of rum. There is one notable exception, and that is Mr. G. L. Blanchard, who favors open methods of work, is ceaselessly active, and will vote for St. John and Daniel if he lives.

I find here a few anti-secretists, but the pressure is so severe that they are constrained to keep quiet. May God hasten the day of their emancipation and the destruction of the rum and lodge systems. J. P. Stoddard.

THE DADEVILLE ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT.

Dadeville, Mo.

Editor Cynosure:—If you please, I have an item or two of farther interest to communicate, in relation to our late "confab" with the minions of the lodges.

1st. I am authorized to announce to you the names of the following gentlemen as seceding Masons, viz.: A. Grinstead, eighteen degrees; A. Cantrell, three degrees, and S. H. Wheeler, two degrees. True, the last named, Masonically speaking, was not a Mason. Nevertheless, he was two-thirds of the way in that direction, themselves being judges. But on seeing the inherent wickedness of the institution, thank God, he had the moral courage to break loose therefrom, before going the whole length of the accursed ordeal.

2d. I wish to say a word or two in relation to the "spoils" taken on said memorable event, since in my former article, I only referred to the slain and prisoners captured. And, by the way, it often turns out that the spoils are by far the most important consideration of the whole affair; which I think, nay, I have not a shadow of doubt, will prove literally true in this instanee. I refer to the earnest attention, the unstopped ear, and unqualified approbation of the entire community that our meeting has secured for the great anti-secret reform—lo! in these dark ends of the earth. Praise God! I could enlarge in the above strain, to quite an extent, were it necessary. But for fear what I might say should not prove suffieiently interesting to the general reader to justify the occupation of that much space in the pole-star sheet of our reform, I forbear.

I will, however, with your leave, add a word or two in regard to our future, anticipated operations. We, like other counties, have a county-seat, or capital, which I don't think will reach two thousand inhabitants, though it may. Well, such is the power and control of the lodge there that but one signature could be obtained among the prominent citizens of said town, inviting an investigation of the subject of Masonry from an Anti-masonic standpoint; as the following directory will amply prove:

1st. "Constantine Commandery, No. 27, Knights Templar: T. J. Vanosdell, E. C., and S. B. Bowles, Rec."

2nd. "Greenfield R. A. Chapter, No. 37: J. W. McDowell, H. P., and S. B. Bowles, Rec."

3d. "Washington Lodge, No. 87, A. F. and A. M.: W. L. Bailey, W. M., and Alfred Kennedy, Sec."

4th. "Greenfield Lodge, No. 446, A. F. and A. M.: J. F. Lyngar, W. M., and Seymour Hoyt, Sec."

Grand Army of the Republic, I don't know how strong (numerically).

In regard to the Odd-fellows and minor secret orders, I shall say nothing, from the fact that I am not posted in refcrence to them. But the strong inference is, from the above, that their name is "Legion."

Notwithstanding all the above array of impenetrability, and appearance of invulnerability, I am happy to say to you that it has been resolved, in the strength of Israel's God, that the above stronghold must and shall be taken. The God of the Bible and his holy cause have been, by far, too long insulted! Up, up! Ye profcssed reformers, to the rescue! The survey has been made, the route deemed practicable, and the contract let. Hence I trust by the wisdom and grace of God alone, the undertaking has begun; and if heaven prove propitious, before many days the great Anti-masonic engine, followed by his numerous train, will whistle forth the clarion notes of emancipation and freedom in the very citadel itself.

J. W. Thompson.

MARGARET ELLEN BLANCHARD.

The death of this young wife and mother has brought a sore grief to the hearts of many whose names are familiar in the conventions of our reform. The wife of President C. A. Blanchard, the daughter of Dr. A. M. Milligan, niece of Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, of Rev. J. C. K. Milligan of Our Banner, and his brother and co-worker in Kansas, and sister of Rev. David McFall of Chambers Street Presbyterian church, Boston, she seems like a friend and aequaintance to an host of reformers who have never known her personally.

She was reared in the romantic hill scenery of Western Pennsylvania, studied at Vassar College, and maintained her place in her father's household and church (the First Reformed Presbyterian, Pittsburgh) with becoming graee and devotion. She was married to President Blanchard, who had not long before resigned the office of General Agent of the N. C. A., to enter the faculty of Wheaton College, Oct. 16, 1873; and at the same time her sister was united to Rev. David McFall.

As was excellently said by her pastor at her funeral, she made a choice like that of Moses—to "suffer affliction with the people of God." In the trials that came upon the College a few years later, her counsels were always wise, her heart calm, her faith strong; and in the succeeding triumph of the truth no mean share was hers. The churches in Paxton and Streator, Ill., where her husband ministered, will also remember her with affection and gratitude.

Her final illness began with a sudden nervous attack just before commencement in June last, which nearly proved fatal, and left a heart trouble which rapidly developed and caused her death. After her first attack she accompanied her husband to the Pittsburgh Prohibition convention in July, though not able to attend that meeting. She was with him also at the Bible conference at Harbor Springs, Mich., in August. She returned from there to her home to go no more from it. The last few days of her life witnessed glorious triumphs of faith. On Tuesday evening last week she called in the elders of the church to pray with her, and spoke of her spiritual state, of her desire to remain with her children, but above all her submission to the will of God. It was a season of great spiritual profit to all present. She lingered until early Friday morning, conscious, calm and clear, though suffering greatly. Her appeals to the unconverted who came to her bedside were most touching; nor could she release them without a promise to seek Christ; and her great desire was that her death might be profitable for the salvation of the living.

The funeral on Monday forenoon of this week was attended by a multitude of weeping friends. The Moody church in this city, of which Pres. Blanchard is acting pastor, manifested the deepest esteem and sympathy. Some thirty members of the large choir with their leader, Charles Herald, and some fifty others went out to attend the services. Rev. A. J. Crittenden of the College church preached most impressively from Philippians 1: 21, and Major D. W. Whittle, the evangelist followed briefly, using Christ's words to the disciples concerning Lazarus, "I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe," to encourage believers and powerfully convince the unconverted. The occasion will not be forgotten by any present; and many have faith to believe that from the lesson of that hour and out of this heavy affliction will spring a blessed harvest of salvation.

LITERATURE.

The Reign of Law. By the Duke of Argyll. pp. 282. Cloth, $1.00. John B. Alden, New York, publisher.

George John Douglass Campbell, eighth duke of Argyll, has been called the "orthodox" scientist, and his contributions to the leading reviews, as well as his books: "Primeval Man", "The Unity of Nature", and the present volume, entitle him to this honor, while his clear, manly, dignified style, never dull and often eloquent, make his interpretations of scientific theories worthy of a wide popularity. "The Reign of Law" treats in its different divisions of "The Supernatural"; "Law: its Definitions"; "Contrivance a Necessity arising out of the Reign of Law—Example in the Machinery of Flight"; "Apparent Exceptions to the Supremacy of Purpose"; "Creation by Law"; "Law in the Realm of Mind"; "Law in Politics".

A single, brief quotation from the last chapter, shows the author's vigorous and wholesome style: "Step by step Legislation has retired from a Province once considered peculiarly its own: step by step it has advanced into another Province within which the Schools of Political Economy would have denied it a foot of ground. Since 1802 there have been passed a long series of laws removing, one after another, all restrictions which aimed at the guiding of the individual Will in its sharp and sagacious pursuit of material wealth. During the same period there have been passed another long series of acts imposing restrictions more and more stringent on the individual Will in its blind and reckless disregard of moral ends. In neither of these movements was Parliament impelled by the light of reason, but under the blessed teaching which belongs to the Reign of Law."

This work, though written in 1866, bas not had such an introduction to American readers as its merits deserve. The popularity of Mr. Alden's publications will help to remove this misfortune.

The Theatre: An essay upon the non-accordancy of Stage-plays with the Christian profession. By Josiah W. Leeds; pp. 85. Price, cloth, 40c., paper, 18c. Published by the author, 528 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

When a young man intends to become a rake he begins by going to the theatre, has been wisely said by an observing and candid writer; and similar are the testimonies from ancient and modern writers, heathen and Christian. quoted in this little book. The author takes up his subject with all the dispassionate spirit of his Quaker creed, which, while it may not arouse the enthusiasm of opposition, does compel a powerful conviction of the evil nature of the play-house. Young people whose eyes are fascinated by the glaring show bills on the streets should by all means send the money they have saved for the first entrance fee to a theatre to get this book. Let them read it with a determination to know something of both sides of the question, and the question is settled. It is a book eminently well adapted to be put into the hands of all instructors of the young as well as of young people themselves. We are glad to notice that the author, beside summoning the witness of the ages against the theatre, argues very ably against the spectacular performances in churches, Sabbath-schools and church fairs. These have the tinge of the pit upon them, and many times are lit up by the baleful fires of the pit. The Christian church should rejoice in the publication of such a work as this, and urge its circulation.

The November Century marks the beginning of the fifteenth year of the magazine (the fourth under the present name), and also the beginning of the most extensive enterprise yet undertaken by its conductors,—the recently announced series of papers on the Civil War, by Generals Grant, McClellan, Rosecrans, and others in high rank. The first paper, on "The Battle of Bull Run," is contributed by General Beauregard, who adds to his description of the engagement a postscript on the subsequent conduct of the war on the Confederate side, and his own relations with Jefferson Davis.

The frontispiece is one of Mr. Elihu Vedder's illustrations of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, the Persian poet, five others of which are reproduced, with text by Mr. Horace E. Scudder.

Bishop Potter discusses "A Phase of Social Science," and George Ticknor Curtis makes some apposite suggestions, and proposes an amendment to the Constitution in a paper entitled, "How shall we elect our Presidents?" "Topics of the Time" discusses "Lawyers' Morals," "The Bible in the Sunday-school," "Bribery in Politics," and "False Issues."

St. Nicholas for November begins a new story by Trowbridge to illustrate the evils of heedlessness. The young readers of this magazine will find an interesting series of articles begun by a former page in the United States Senate, entitled, "Among the Law Makers," with illustrations of the Capitol, the Senate Chamber and Hall of the House. "Ready for Business; or, Choosing an Occupation," is the first of a number of practical papers for boys. Another entertaining series of articles is begun on foreign travel, with the history and personal recollections which a tour would usually suggest.

THE HOME.

JESUS IS VICTOR!

Jesus is Victor! O so gladly we cry,
Jesus hath triumphed and gone up on high.
Jesus is Victor! We have nothing to fear;
The foe He has conquered—deliverence is here.

Jesus is Victor! Hallelujah! 'tis done;
In Him is our armor, in Him we o'ercome.
Jesus is Victor! and our shepherd will keep
From harm,—yea, from danger,—the weakest of sheep.

Jesus is Victor! His power and His love
Are met for our succor in earth and above.
Jesus is Victor! our watchword shall be,
Till in His dear image our likeness we see.

Jesus is Victor! He is coming again,
The cry of His loved ones is ever—Amen.
Jesus is Victor! If He calls through the grave
We'll follow Him fearless, the Mighty to save.

Jesus is Victor! So while under His wing.
We will say unto death, where now is thy sting?
Jesus is Victor! we will shout all our days;
Then crown Him in glory, while singing His praise.

A SWEET SURPRISE.

It is related that Dr. Adoniram Judson, while laboring as a missionary to the heathen, felt a strong desire to do something for the salvation of the children of Abraham according to the flesh. But it seemed that his desire was not to be gratified.

During a long course of years, even to the closing fortnight of his life, in his last sickness, Dr. Judson lamented that all his efforts in behalf of the Jews had been a failure. He was departing from the world saddened with that thought. Then, at last, there came a gleam of light that thrilled his heart with grateful joy.

Mrs. Judson was sitting by his side while he was in a state of great languor, with a newspaper, a copy of the Watchman and Reflector, in her hand. She read to her husband one of Dr. Hague's letters from Constantinople. That letter contained some items of information that filled him with wonder. At a meeting of missionaries at Constantinople, Mr. Schauffler stated that a little book had been published in Germany, giving an account of Dr. Judson's life and labors; that it had fallen into the hands of some Jews, and had been the means of their conversion; that a Jew had translated it for a community of Jews on the borders of the Euxine, and that a messenger had arrived in Constantinople asking that a teacher might be sent to them to show them the way of life.

When Dr. Judson heard this his eyes were filled with tears, a look of almost unearthly solemnity came over him, and clinging fast to his wife's hand, as if to assure himself of being really in the world, he said:

"Love, this frightens me. I do not know what to make of it."

"To make of what?" said Mrs. Judson.

"Why, what you have just been reading. I never was deeply interested in any object, I never prayed sincerely and earnestly for anything, but it came; at some time—no matter how distant the day—somehow, in some shape, probably the last I should have devised, it came!"

What a testimony was that! It lingered on the lips of the dying Judson; it was embalmed with grateful tears, and is worthy to be transmitted as a legacy to the coming generation. The desire of the righteous shall be granted. Pray and wait. The answer to all true prayer will come. In Judson's case the news of the answer came before he died, but it was answered long before. So we may know of the results of prayers and toils even while we sojourn here; but if not, what sweet surprises shall await us in the great Beyond!—Sel.

ANOTHER JOSEPH IN PRISON.

In the New York Observer of April 25, 1884, there was an article in regard to a young man in Tokio, Japan, who was imprisoned for the utterance of political views which were not approved by the government, and during his confinement he engaged in active Christian work among the convicts. After his release he sent a letter to the Home Department giving an account of the wretchedness and sufferings that prevailed in the prison, and his earnest convictions that there was great need of reform.

He further stated that the best of all remedies for the wickedness of men was the grace of God in their hearts. It had been shown that the religion of Jesus Christ was sufficient to make the most hardened criminals good men; and it would be for the advantage of the country to have these doctrines taught. Without some such influence as Christianity exerts, it was of little use to attempt to make men better by the most severe punishment. Experience had shown that many only become the more hardened and desperate by being thus thrown together and treated like dogs. He believed that the prison government should be in accordance with Christian principles; and if possible Christian men only should be placed in charge. After some time had elapsed he was invited to the office of the Home Department and consulted in regard to the views expressed in the letter. Then he was asked to give up his business and take a position under the government where he could carry out in person the views he had so ably advocated.

He called at the Bible House and said: "I am now on my way to Hiogo to superintend the establishment of a new prison. I am to have the charge of the same with express permission to teach Christianity and it is hoped that all might be converted. I once thought that my imprisonment was a punishment from the Lord, and it filled me with great shame and sorrow. Now I see the goodness of God in it all, and I bless him that I have so large a field and so good an opportunity for Christian effort. I am very weak of myself, but with the help of God I hope to do much good.

He requested a grant of Scriptures for use among the prisoners. This was readily made, and he now goes forth with new zeal and power to shed more of the blessed light of the Gospel into the haunts of deepest darkness and degradation. This is none other than the hand of God.—New York Observer.

THREE REASONS FOR NOT BEING AN INFIDEL.

I once met a thoughtful scholar, says Bishop Whipple, who told me that for years he had read every book he could find which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ. And he said he should have become an infidel if it had not been for three things.

First, I am a man. I am going somewhere. To-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all that such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray of light upon the darkness. They shall not take away the only guide, and leave me stone blind.

Secondly, I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that it was not a dream.

Thirdly (and he said it with tears in his eyes), I have three motherless daughters. They have no protecter but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world, if you should blot out from it all the teachings of the Gospel.

Add to this testimonies like those that follow, and how can they fail to have weight with persons of thought and sound judgment?

The Bible is a book worth all other books which were ever printed.—Patrick Henry.

As to Jesus of Nazareth, I think his system of morals and his religion, as he left them to us, are the best the world ever saw or is likely to see.—Benjamin Franklin.

I have always said and always will say, that the studious perusal of the sacred volume will make better citizens, better fathers, better husbands.—Thomas Jefferson.

Christianity is the only true and perfect religion; and in proportion as mankind adopt its principles and obey its precepts, they will be wise and happy.—Benjamin Rush.

Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of our liberties. Write its precepts on your hearts, and practise them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide to the future.—U. S. Grant.

I know the Bible is inspired, because it finds me at greater depths of my being than any other book.—Coleridge.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depths of my conscience.—Daniel Webster.

Christianity never lived in the hearts of so many millions as at this moment.—George Bancroft.

There is no book upon which we can rest in a dying moment but the Bible.—Selden.

The Scriptures teach us the best way of living, the noblest way of suffering, and the most comfortable way of dying.—Flavel.

There was never found in any age of the world either religion or law that did so highly exalt the public good as the Bible.—Lord Bacon.—American Messenger.

SEARCHING QUESTIONS.

What right has a Christian lady to give herself away to a skeptical scoffer—a man that hates her Bible, her Christ, and her God—a man that tramples the law of her God under his feet? What right has a Christian man to become linked with a scoffing, swearing woman that has no faith in God and the Bible? "Be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers." Yet the moment you touch this question they throw up their heads and say, "I will marry whom I please." Well, we give you the Word of God, and if you go against that you must reap what you sow. There are hundreds of men and women in this country weeping, and they are reaping bitter fruit. Oh, how many times I have had a mother come to me with a broken heart and say, "I want you to pray for my drunken son." "How came your son to be a drunkard?" "Well, my husband set a bad example. He insisted upon having wine upon the table." "How long have you been a Christian? Were you a Christian before you married him?" "Yes." "Did you know he was a scoffer before you married him?" "Yes, but I thought I might save him." You had better "save him" before you marry him; better see him converted before you risk your happiness, and possibly your own soul.—Selected.

THE ONE HELPER.

Wouldst thou have much power against sin, and much increase of holiness, let thine eye be much on Christ; set thine heart on him; let it dwell in him, and be still with him. When sin is likely to prevail in any kind, go to him, tell him of the insurrection of his enemies and thy inability to resist, and desire him to suppress and help thee against them, that they gain nothing by their stirrings but some new wound. If thy heart begin to be taken with and moved toward sin, lay it before him; the beams of his love shall eat out the fire of those sinful lusts. Wouldst thou have thy pride and passions and love of the world and self love killed, go sue for the virtue of his death, and that will do it. Seek his Spirit, the spirit of meekness and humility and divine love. Look on him, and he will draw thy heart heavenward, and unite it to himself, and make it like himself. And is not that the thing thou desirest?—Leighton.

BIBLE READINGS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE FIRST-FRUITS. Read Deut. 26.

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase. Pro. 3: 9.

What were the Israelites commanded to do with the first ripe sheaf of the land? Lev. 23; 10-14; Exod. 34: 26.

What did they acknowledge by offering the first-fruits to God? Deut. 26: 3-10.

Why must the priest wave the sheaf before the Lord? 1 Cor. 15: 20-23.

In what way can we now offer first-fruits to God? 1 Cor. 16; 2; 2 Cor. 9: 7.

Name some who were distinguished for their liberality. Luke 21: 2 4; John 12: 3; Exod. 36: 2-7.—Notes for Bible Study.

CONQUERED HIS ENEMY.

It is not every exasperated person that has the wisdom and Christian self command to remember that "a soft answer turneth away wrath." Most of us are too much carried away by the hot resentment of the moment, when angrily assailed or coarsely provoked by another, to think of choosing mild terms or moderating the tones of the voice. But the golden text is charmingly true, as all find it who really succeed in trying it. A well-known business man thus relates his own experiment and the result of it:

I once owned a large flock of hens, which I generally kept shut up. But one spring I concluded to let them run in my yard, after I had clipped their wings so that they could not fly. One day when I came home to dinner I learned that one of my neighbors had been there, full of wrath, to let me know that my hens had been in his garden, and that he had killed several of them and thrown them over into my yard.

Greatly enraged at his proceedure, I determined at once to be revenged; to sue him, or in some way to get redress. I sat down and ate my dinner as calmly as I could; and by the time I had finished my meal I became more cool, and thought perhaps it was best not to fight with my neighbor about hens, and thereby make him my bitter, lasting enemy. I concluded to try another way being sure that it would do better.

After dinner I went to my neighbor, who was in his garden; and strange to say he was in pursuit of one of my hens with a club, trying to kill it. I accosted him, and he turned upon me, his face inflamed with wrath, and said:

"You have abused me. I will kill all your hens if I can get at them. I never was so abused. My garden is ruined!"

"I am very sorry for it," said I. "I do not wish to injure you, and now I see I have made a great mistake in letting out my hens. I ask your forgiveness, and I am willing to pay you six times the damage."

The man seemed confounded; he looked up to the sky, then down to the earth, then at his neighbor, then at his club, and then at the hen he had been pursuing, and said nothing.

"Tell me now," said I, "what is the damage, and I will pay you six-fold, and my hens shall trouble you no more. I will leave it with you entirely to say what I shall do, for I cannot afford to lose the love and good will of my neighbors, and quarrel with them, for hens or anything else."

"I am a fool!" said the neighbor. "The damage is not worth talking about, and I have more need to compensate you than you me, and to ask your forgiveness than you mine."—Youth's Companion.

PERSONAL STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

PRACTICAL HINTS TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

Without attempting to elaborate, I shall call attention to the following general rules:

DAILY READING.

First, make it an invariable rule to read some portion of the Word every day. Let it be as regular a feature of your daily life as the feeding of your body. If it be but a few verses, read some portion under all circumstances.

AS A WHOLE.

Secondly, read it, as you can make opportunity, by whole books. You will find this oft-urged and oft-forgotten rule a valuable source of pleasure and profit if practiced. It applies to the longer as well as the shorter books of the Bible.

A GOOD PRACTICE.

Thirdly, make a practice of memorizing Scripture. What a well-equipped soldier is he who is faithful here! With a mind richly stored with texts he has an answer to each quibble of the adversary—a shield against each dart of Satan at hand.

As the hunter needs different kinds of ammunition, so the Christian, watching a chance to fire here and there a shot, needs to have ready the right bullet to send from the quickly aimed gun, fired just at the right moment. The Scriptures are our source of help in winning souls. To them must each man go for the axe with which he may enter the world's great wood and hew timber for the temple of God. He is a wise man who carries his axe with him always.

RIGHT HELPS.

In our fourth rule the use of commentaries is commended. These useful helps to a right comprehension of divine truth no man can afford to neglect. Every family should have some good work of the kind upon the whole Bible. New light will often be thrown upon the sacred page when Matthew Henry or Scott is consulted. It is not necessary for every Scripture student, however, to go beyond these, and study such critical commentaries as Ellicott or Tholuck. It is well to remember, too, the value of marginal references—nor should any one neglect the text in studying the comments upon it. There was wisdom in the remark of the old lady who said the "coarse print at the top" explained the rest of the book so nicely. Do not neglect that coarse print.

TOPICALLY.

Our fifth rule is: Study the Bible topically. Take some particular subject, such as justification, or repentance, or sanctification, and go through the Scriptures, examining in their order the passages bearing upon it. A faithful compliance with this rule in the right spirit will make any one a good theologian and "mighty in the Scriptures." In this connection we may mention the suggestion so much urged by Mr. D. L. Moody—i. e., taking a single word: as blood, faith, love, and tracking it from Genesis to revelation.

THE WORD OF GOD.

Our sixth rule is: Study the Bible as God's Word. Remember always that its inspiration has been fully established, and handle it reverently. Remember it is from above, and where you cannot understand simply believe and trust. The great Father is all-wise and all-good, and what he has said must be right. The product of Infinite Wisdom, this glorious Book, may not be completely fathomed by the mind of man in time. Its continued study shall probably form part of heaven's employment, and on the bright hills of glory we may again raise the cry, "Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

WITH PRAYER.

Our last rule is: Study prayerfully. There is a reciprocal relation between the use of the Word and the presence of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit ordinarily requires the Word as an instrument, and the Word requires the Spirit's presence in order to be of saving power. Pray, then, for the guidance of that mighty Expositor and Applier of divine truth as you engage in its study. So shall new beauties continually unfold upon the sacred page, and so shall your Bible study be blessed to your own good, to the good of those with whom you come in contact, and to the glory of the great God by whom and for whom all are created.—Word and Work.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DRAM-SHOP IN BUSINESS AND IN POLITICS.

The dram-shop stands the confessed waster of wealth, the disorganizer of labor, the degrader of the laborer, the destroyer of home, the disturber of social order, the ally of every vice, the fomenter of every crime, the paralyzer of every uplifting agency of education or religion,—in fine, the foe of civilization and the enemy of the human race. No one is shameless enough to advocate it, and yet it stands in defiant strength. What is the secret of its strength? The whole liquor interest feels and resents an attack upon any of its outposts. With a sagacity born of selfishness it sees that the whole traffic, in its varied ramifications, is a unity; and, as the Boston Advertiser said years ago, "The liquor interest, now that slavery is gone, is the strongest single pecuniary interest in the country." Strong, not merely in the enormous capital invested in it, but strong also in that cohesion which binds together those engaged in a traffic obnoxious to the general public. To the power of wealth, nowhere greater than in the United States, we must add the force of an army of employes, and a vastly larger army of patrons enslaved by appetite; and such are the most obedient of vassals. Then we must count as allies many who would be ashamed to be known as such—the owners of real estate that derive large rentals from the saloons. The traffic has thus secured a business recognition. Its chiefs are known on 'Change; it is a customer; it buys as well as sells. It has the sympathy of the commercial classes; not of all, to be sure, but of those who secretly believe that the chief end of man is "to buy and sell and get gain." As in the old days of the slavery contest, the names of merchant princes, the names of leading business firms, appear in defense of "vested interests," although those interests are in deadly hostility to human welfare. And now, thus supported, the dram-shop appears as a political power. Its employes and devotees have ample time to attend the caucus, and are never absent from the polls. Except in our largest cities, it rarely rises to the audacity of bringing bar-tenders to the front as candidates for responsible situations; its interest lies in presenting less offensive champions; but nevertheless, it knows its men and makes no mistakes. The law-abiding citizen is handicapped by his attachment to his party, and by his supposed obligation to support its regular nominees; while the liquor interest comes into politics as a free lance, knowing no party but the party that bids most for its support. Hence the politician regards the liquor vote with respect, the temperance vote with contempt. The "trade" is ready to sacrifice men or parties that stand in its way; its opponents are, as one legislator naively wrote, "willing to do as much for the cause of temperance as the good of the Republican party will allow." The result is inevitable; the trade have it their own way. Sometimes they insist on the enactment of shameless laws; sometimes they are content with the election of shameless officials that nullify the enforcement of decent statutes. The general result, either way, is the impunity of the grog shop. Ten years ago the Republican party of Massachusetts, in convention assembled, resolved that the dram-shop should suppressed. But, with its immense majority, it failed in the task that its shrewd politicians never intended to undertake; and to day the dram-shop is licensed instead of suppressed.—Judge R. C. Pitman in North American Review.

WHY IT IS NOT A LOCAL ISSUE.

If the liquor question is a local issue it need not be transfered from the limits of the family. Let each household settle it for itself. The trouble with that is that certain members of one household who may be in the minority will visit another household where the drinkers are in the majority and they will make merry and become drunken. The reformers believe that domestic laws and influences are powerless to stop the evil. Well, then, try local option. One town votes against liquor and the one adjoining votes in favor of it. People in the first named who feel that they must have it go to the second and get it. Perhaps they carry some home in a jug or a bottle and get into a fight and kill somebody in their own town. Then the reformers say that local option is a failure. They must have a higher law which will make prohibition general within the entire State and compel the license towns to go without liquor as well as the no-license towns. The State legislature passes the law. Distillery, brewery and saloon property is confiscated and a drink cannot be had. No one within the borders of the State has any to sell or give away. It is a great success. Presently it is noticed that men are getting drunk just the same, and rich men are found to have plenty of wine on their tables. Where does it come from? Indiana is a whisky State still. The people may have voted on the question of prohibition and declared against it. Indiana has whisky enough and to spare, and it will not prohibit the traffic in it. In fact, her people find many good customers in Illinois and they are making money out of them. They ship beer and spirits into this State in dry goods boxes marked "calico," or in barrels marked "mineral water," and any man who has a $5-bill may have his saloon in his cellar. Then the reformers discover that State prohibition is no good. Liquor is still to be had because adjoining States sell it. Only one thing remains. The Federal authority must be appealed to. They wonder why they never thought of that before. Prohibition can be made effectual only by amending the Constitution of the United States so as to force it upon unwilling States as abolition was forced upon the South.

These are the reasons why prohibition is no longer a local issue. When prohibitionists were at work in the family it was a domestic and personal issue. When they made a stand for local option it was, strictly speaking, a local issue. When they first made campaigns in States it was a State issue. Now that they are besieging the seat of Federal power it is a national issue. Timid men, infatuated partisans who are afraid some ancient party is going to be hurt, and interested politicians anxious for success on any policy cannot change the fact. The Prohibitionists make the issue; their enemies do not. The Prohibitionists have found that the various circumscribed movements which they have engineered have not stopped intemperance. They now say that it can and must be rooted out by national authority. The man who calls this uprising a local issue now does so in ignorance or deceit. If it was a local issue St. John would not now be in the field as a candidate for President. The fight which he is making is national in its scope, and it is one which is destined to grow.

The Herald believes that the temperance question is a personal one, and it is unchangeably opposed to the idea of legislating righteousness into any man. It sees in the St. John uprising, however, something more than a local movement. It is one which must be met and defeated in the broad domain of national polities. Men who undertake to dodge it will be ground to powder beneath the two hostile elements which are rapidly forming to do battle at the ballot box on this issue.—Chicago Daily Herald (Independent).

BRANDY THE CURSE OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Fresh from a journey of four thousand miles in a mule-cart and ox-wagon, up and down the most disturbed districts in South Africa, with the exception of Zululand, the Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, the traveling secretary of the London Missionary Society, reports that in all the tribes of South Africa bad brandy is the greatest curse of the natives. The brandy keg does more harm than the powder-barrel. In North Bechuanaland brandy has been kept out hitherto with considerable success; and in Basutoland, in the old times, the import of brandy was forbidden. Since the late Basuto war liquor has been introduced freely. As a result, half the chiefs in Basutoland are dipsomaniacs. They drink morning, noon and night, and many of their absurd actions are attributable, not to the inherent folly of the Basuto nature, but to the baleful influence of the white man's revenge.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?

The Mail and Express of this city prints an extended interview with Mr. Richard Katzenmayer, Secretary of the United States Brewers' Association. In the course of it he says:

"In Kansas the Prohibition system has been in operation for two years, and all the brewers are ruined. No organization, therefore, exists in that State."

A little further along, speaking of Iowa, he says:

"The Prohibition law which has recently gone into operation there has made terrible havoc among the brewers, and many of them are completely ruined. As a consequence their political influence has been greatly diminished.

The Iowa Prohibitionist says in Linn County, that State, no intoxicating or evasive drinks are now sold openly, or to the knowledge of the Citizen's League. Before the Prohibitory law went into effect, on the 4th of July last, three breweries and seventy saloons in this county were in full blast. Now not one of these places for the manufacture or sale of strong drink remains.

Knowledge, the London journal of Richard A. Proctor, gives a new "wrinkle" in the dealings of the liquor men. A catalogue falling under the edittor's notice has an article called "Spirit Flavors," one pound of which added to fifty gallons of plain spirit will make immediately a fine old brandy. Then there is "Wine Aroma," with which a customer's bottle of "rare old port" is made within two minutes from the time of the customer's order.—Caveat emptor.

A Council Bluffs woman, it is said, followed her husband to a saloon, and just as he was in the act of taking a drink of whisky she rushed up and snatched the glass out of his hand, and then ran for a justice's office, where she deposited the glass and its contents before the astonished official. She swore out a warrant against the saloon keeper, and with the glass of liquor in her custody thinks she has outwitted even Judge Hayes.

A German settler in Kansas thus writes of his experience of Prohibition in that State: "Like most Germans I was very much opposed to Prohibition before it was adopted in our State. Indeed, my aversion was so great that I earnestly contemplated selling my farm and turning my back on Kansas. Fortunately for me I could not sell. I say fortunately, because I have since found that I was greatly mistaken. The State, instead of going down, as was prophesied by the liquor party, has experienced the height of prosperity. It was said that immigration would cease if prohibition was adopted; but the reverse took place. Immigration increases every day and the price of land has raised in value."

—Rev. Newman Hall says he had no idea of the enormous size of this of this country until after traveling westward at least a thousand miles he reached St. Louis, where he was "dumbfounded" on being asked if he intended to go West.

—Constitutional prohibition is a rising tide. I hope to see it a successful issue in both State and national politics.—Joseph Cook.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. J. A. Richards, after visiting a number of the Wesleyan annual conferences in the interest of the Publishing House, assisted in the dedication of a fine new church, at Quasqueton, Iowa. Although the day was rainy and the congregation thereby diminished, $300 was raised to make the last payment.

—The Evangelist Bell, of Ravenswood, near this city, assisted by Bro. B. Loveless, of Wheaton, has been engaged in a powerful revival in West Union, Iowa, in which all the churches joined. There were some 225 who came to a new life, and signified their purpose to join themselves to the people of God.

—At Ashtabula, Ohio, the Finnish Lutheran church recently received an accession of fifty members by immigration. The congregation will build a new church the coming winter. Student Luehde, from the Rock Island Swedish Seminary, is preaching to these people.

—It is said that invitations have been extended to Mr. Moody and his singing co-laborer, Mr. Sankey, to conduct evangelistic meetings at Rochester, Buffalo, Syracuse, Utica, and elsewhere, all of which have been accepted.

—The Presbyterian Board has sent into the Indian work 380 laborers, and expended more than half a million dollars in the cause, with rich and cheering results. In some instances the tribes have become wholly or partially civilized by means of the Word proclaimed.

—The Sandwich Islanders are such strict Sabbath keepers that M. D. Conway confesses, "Never, in Scotland or Connecticut, have I seen such a paralysis as fell upon Honolulu the first day of the week." Such testimony is demonstrative of the power of truth over the life.

—There was an interesting and suggestive tableau presented during the Friends' Yearly Meeting at Lawrence, Kansas. Steamboat Frank stepped to the front of the rostrum and commenced singing; Joseph Bean, of Iowa, stood by his side and laid his hand on his shoulder; almost at the same moment Noah C. McLain, of Ohio, stepped to the other side and placed his hand on the other shoulder. Thus standing, they sang together the praises of Jesus. The representatives of three races—the Anglo Saxon, the Indian and the African, and all three recorded ministers of the Society of Friends. It made a deep impression.

—Mrs. Mary Benson, member of a Methodist church at Augusta, Ga., who was afflicted with a tumor, hearing of many faith cures, became greatly impressed, prayed fervently, and arose from her bed a few days ago apparently in perfect health. Doctors had told her to prepare for death.

—At Worcester, Mass., Friday, the Convention of Christian Workers, led by Moody and Sankey, began its sessions in Mechanics' Hall, which was densely crowded.

—The Presbyterian Synod of South Carolina has disapproved Dr. Woodrow's teaching in the Columbia Theological Seminary, declaring his belief in Darwin's theory of the descent of man, and considering it not inconsistent with the Scriptures.

—The meetings in Portland, Maine, Oct. 19–21, under the direction of Mr. D. L. Moody, were thronged. Three times each day the spacious city hall was filled to overflowing; and two overflow meetings were held at the same time. A deep impression was made. Prayer-meetings were held after each preaching service, and addresses on special topics when many rose for prayers. The work of the Holy Spirit was clearly presented by Mr. Moody, and his power was felt.

—Joseph Cook contemplates a visit to Nova Scotia early in December. He is to deliver several lectures in St. John, and will probably speak at other points.

—The National Methodist Woman's Home Mission Convention was in session at Cleveland last week, Mrs. R. B. Hayes presiding at the opening session.

—It is reported from Japan that the government has withdrawn its aid from the Buddhist priests and temples, as well as from those of the Shinto faith.

—One hundred years ago there were five Baptist churches in Georgia, with 420 members. There are today 2,500 churches, with an aggregate membership of 255,000. Of this number 130,000 are white Baptists.

—Edmund Block, a young Hebrew, embraced the Lutheran faith Sunday at Fort Wayne, Ind., and will enter the Concordia Theological school at St. Louis to prepare for the ministry.

—The organization of the Japan Conference of the Methodist church has just been completed by Bishop Wiley. Twelve American and five Japanese elders, and one American and three Japanese deacons, are reported.

—Miss Josephine L. White and Miss Mary J. Campbell have accepted the appointment of the United Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions to the work in India. They are expected to sail from Philadelphia on the 12th of November.

—The Ohio Presbyterian Synod meeting in Cincinnati last week resolved: "That the increased desecration of the Sabbath calls for prayer, and for a united and vigorous effort on the part of all good and law-abiding citizens to secure the faithful observances of the sacred day, the great end to be attained being the sacredness of the Sabbath and the entire prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage."

—From March 1 to Oct. 1 of this year the missionaries of the American Sunday-school Union in the Northwest, organized 388 new Sunday-schools, either in new settlements or in places in the older States where the children and youth were uncared for religiously. These schools had when organized 1,578 teachers, and 12,812 scholars; but besides doing this great work of planting schools, these missionaries aided 696 other schools, where there is a membership of 3,460 teachers, and 30,605 scholars. They also held 1,231 meetings, made 6,626 visits to families, and distributed 3,514 Bibles and Testaments, and religious books and papers valued at $4,095. This society has planted over 400 Sunday-schools in Dakota since the Territory was organized.

—A correspondent of the Observer writes from Yokohama of a young man who was imprisoned in Tokio, Japan, for the utterance of political views which were not approved by the government. During his imprisonment he engaged in active Christian work among the convicts. After his release he sent a letter to the Home Department, giving an account of the wretchedness and suffering that prevailed in the prison, and his earnest conviction that there was great need of reform. He declared also his belief that the prison government should be in accordance with Christian principles, and that, if possible, Christian men only should be placed in charge. The result was an invitation to give up his business and take a position under the government where he could carry out in person the views he had presented. He is to have charge of a new prison at Hiogo, with express permission to teach Christianity, and feels that his unjust imprisonment, which he at the time regarded as a disgrace, has opened to him a great opportunity for Christian effort.

—The Disciple churches are sustaining several missionaries in the Turkish empire. Their missionary board reported a year ago a church at Sevas, Asia Minor, organized with thirty members. They also report: "When Garabed Tavitian left Bardizag, he settled in Smyrna. In this city he did not cease to teach and to preach Christ. Some months ago Bro. Shishmanian made him a visit and aided him in a series of meetings, which resulted in the formation of a church of seventeen members. On the 18th of September the executive committee resolved, in view of the increased interest in the Turkish Mission, to grant $20 a month to Garabed Tavitian."

—The missionary committee of the Disciple churches report that a new mission has been established at Tocat, Asia Minor, where the American Board has long had a station and formerly a theological school which was burned by the Mohammedans. The missionary there is Mr. Garabed Kevorkian, who studied in this country for a medical missionary, completing his studies in Chicago. The Christian Standard speaks of this work thus: "On the 29th of October the executive committee adopted the following: 'Resolved, That Garabed Kevorkian be employed as our missionary to Tocat, Asia Minor, and that we appropriate $1,500 for his support for one year, it being understood that he shall out of this sum provide himself a medical outfit and pay his passage to Tocat.' Bro. Kevorkian sends the following report of his work: 'Since my arrival in Turkey I have spent three months out of Tocat, and never lost an opportunity to speak a word for the Master, either in public or in private. On the 20th of July I baptized ten persons in Hajee Keny, and organized them into a church. I spent several weeks in Marsivan, and baptized two. In Tocat I baptized two. Our school is doing well. The demand for medical aid is very great. I am working in hope that I shall be able to win many souls to Christ. We need schools and chapels and fellow-laborers to help in this great work which God has put in our hands.'"

—There is a unique and useful organization in West Philadelphia, known as the Band of Mercy. Twelve thousand children belong to the organization in the city. Its beginning was due to a lady and gentleman who were extremely annoyed by the blasphemy and obscene language of a crowd of boys who congregated in a vacant lot opposite their residence every evening. This lady and gentleman concluded that they would try and win this crowd from the streets. They removed the furniture from the parlor, furnished it suitably for such children as they knew could be gathered there from the street, and invited the boys to spend the evening. Since that time the parlors have been open every evening, books are furnished, and two or three times a week entertainments are given. Instruction is given on two or three evenings, but no attempt is made to give the rooms the appearance of school, or to conduct the exercises in such a way as to give the impression that it is a school. The result has been most beneficial to the boys, and the good results following were so evident that it has resulted in the establishment of similar institutions in various parts of the city.—Christian Union.

THE CONGO MISSION.

In explaining the reasons which controlled the Livingston-Inland Mission of London, in recently making over its great enterprise on the Congo to the American Baptist Missionary Union, Mrs. H. G. Guinness said: "Fifty brethren and sisters in all have been sent out on the staff, and yet it consists to-day of only six-and-twenty. This may give some idea of the large amount of apparently fruitless outlay necessitated by work in such an unhealthy country. In spite, however, of a legion of difficulties, the Livingston Inland Mission has nobly made its way, carried out its original program, and planted mission stations at intervals through three or four hundred miles of country right into the interior. The terrible preliminary difficulties have been overcome, the heavy initiatory expenses met, the first fruits of the harvest reaped, much precious and costly experience gained, and the mission occupies to-day a position which we hardly dared to hope, when it commenced, it could attain so soon. The American Union takes the staff as it stands, together with all the stations, steamers and property of the mission. . . . As it happens, many, if not most, of the members of the staff of the Livingston Inland Mission, hold Baptist views, and the only other mission in the country is that of the English Baptist Missionary Society. We were partly guided in the matter by the conviction that it would not be wise to introduce a second denomination into the field. If it be objected that it is a pity to hand over to Americans that which has cost so much English life and treasure, we reply, What does it matter by whom work is done, if it only be done, and done well? Neither we nor the Council of the Livingston Inland Mission, nor the friends who have so liberally sustained it for the last seven years, had any personal, denominational, or national object in view. Our sole end and aim was to do good to men and obey Christ by proclaiming his Gospel among the fifty millions of the Congo country. If we have secured this, is not our object attained?

—We are indebted to Rev. Isaac C. White, of Newmarket, for a copy of the Minutes of the General Association of the Congregational and Presbyterian churches of New Hampshire. They have about 200 churches, 200 ministers, and 20,000 members. The report mentions skepticism, secret societies, dramatic entertainments, dancing, tobacco, and Sabbath-breaking as hindrances to the progress of the kingdom of Christ.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the POLITICAL NEWS.

—In the six weeks since Mr. Blaine left Augusta he has traveled by rail more than 9,000 miles, and made from ten to twenty-nine speeches per day.

—In the United States Court at New Orleans Friday, in the case of the supervisors of election demanding that the State Registrar expunge 7,000 names of dead or fraudulent voters, the judge decided that he had no jurisdiction, and denied the order to strike out.

—Members of the district committee of the State Liquor Dealers' Protective Association, at a late meeting decided to send a circular to every saloon keeper in Illinois, advising them to support Carter Harrison for Governor as well as the Democratic candidates for the State legislature.

—A great sensation was caused last week in New York by District Attorney Olney unearthing vast registration frauds. The greatest scandal was among the colored people. In one section of the colored quarter less than a thousand feet square, Pinkerton's detectives found 400 illegally registered negro voters. Warrants were out for several hundred exconvicts who were registered, and were expecting to vote.

—Lieutenant George M. Stoney, who was detailed by the Government to explore the great unknown river of Alaska, discovered by him last year, has returned. He says he ascended the river for 500 miles, where he reached a large lake through which the river flows. On account of the lateness of the season he was obliged to return. Stoney brings specimens of gold, copper and coal which he discovered, and also numerous specimens for the Smithsonian Institute.

—E. A. Burke, Director General of the World's Exposition at New Orleans, has announced its formal opening to take place at 12 o'clock, Dec. 16, 1884. Applications for space will be received until Nov. 25th and exhibits until Dec. 10th Main building, Horticultural Hall, Machinery, Extension and Saw Mill Building are now ready for installation. The building for Government and State Exhibits will be ready Nov. 15th, the Art-Gallery Nov. 25th, and the stock buildings Dec. 1st. Steam will be raised Nov. 25th.

—Two Indians were killed lately at Long Creek, Grant county, Oregon, by a party of unknown whites. The band had camped on the stream for the purpose of hunting and fishing, and the whites crept within rifle range and fired into their camp, killing two braves, and made their escape. It is said these Indians took an active part in the recent Bannock war, and committed several outrages and murders among the whites. In that county, hatred of the Indians is intense. The matter is to be investigated, as trouble is feared, and an Indian outbreak of serious proportions is thought very probable.

—A white church was dedicated at Parkesville, South Carolina, October 26. It is reported that colored men disturbed the services by firing pistols. A bad feeling has continued since, and culminated in the killing of James Blackwell, an officer, in attempting to make arrests, by a volley fired by negroes who were barricaded in a house. There is great excitement and further violence is expected.

FAST OWL EXPRESS.

NEW LINE BETWEEN CHICAGO AND ST. LOUIS.

Commencing with Sunday, Nov. 2d, 1884, the Burlington Route (C. B. and Q. R. R.) will run fast daily trains between Chicago and St. Louis. These trains will be elegantly equipped with Pullman Sleepers, Reclining Chair Cars (seats free) and first class Coaches, and will run through without change, as follows: Going south leave Chicago, 8:30 P. M., Aurora, 9:40 P. M., Mendota, 10:55 P. M., Galesburg, 1:30 A. M., Bushnell, 2:20 A. M., Vermont, 2:57 A. M., Beardstown, 3:50 A. M., arriving St. Louis, 7:45 A. TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The Christian Cynosure will be sent to any address eight weeks on receipt of twenty-five cents.

Much of the progress made in this reform has been through individual efforts of old subscribers in introducing the Cynosure to their friends and neighbors. A single Cynosure sent by some old subscriber has been the means not only of securing a permanent subscriber to the paper, but also of setting to work agencies which have evangelized whole neighborhoods, and have broken the backbone of lodge power in that community.

Those who have sent in trial subscribers for the campaign will begin now to secure them for the balance of the year. Write for special terms.

BIRNEY.

The sketch of JAMES G. BIRNEY, candidate of the Liberty Party for President, in pamphlet for 25 cents. A limited number of copies of this handsome pamphlet for sale at the N. C. A. office.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

This twelve-page pamphlet is now issued in a new and attractive style, with a neat cover. The orders for it which more than exhausted the first edition testify to its popularity.

"AMERICANS HAVE NO CONFLICTING INTERESTS RESPECTING SECRET SOCIETIES. WE SHALL HAVE BUT ONE OPINION WHEN WE UNDERSTAND THEM."

Thus opens an exposition of the relation of the Secret Empire to Civil Government, which will remain of great and permanent value to every citizen until the triumph of the American party shall have put the secret lodge system under the ban of law. SINGLE COPIES, 5 CENTS.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

IN THE COILS;

— OR —

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

'A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, Chicago, Ills.)

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

WATCH THE FLUES.

A careful farmer's buildings should not burn unless set on fire by lightning. On the farm there are no fires for manufacturing purposes; fire cannot be communicated from one's neighbors; that class which furnishes incendiaries is lacking; and all household fires can be kept under the eye of the farmer and his family. The newspaper reports of the burning of farm buildings show that the fires can nearly always be traced to negligence, and in more than half the cases to faulty flues. The season is now at hand when all the occupied rooms will be heated, and the danger from defective flues is consequently great. Let there be no delay in examining all flues to make sure that they are perfectly safe. If any are found defective repair them at once. The most dangerous place in a flue is the point where the pipe enters it. If the flue is not built from the floor up (a common way of construction once), this point is in the garret, and rarely noticed. Unless the pipe fits the opening very closely, sparks will escape, and falling upon the adjacent woodwork, made dry and combustible by the heat from the pipe and flue, will occasion a conflagration. At least twice every year the joints about where the pipe enters the flue should be plastered, pressing the mortar firmly against the flue and into the crevice between it and the pipe. —American Agriculturalist for November.

GOOD MEDICINE.—A correspondent of the New York Evening Post tells this story of Dr. Gray, a homeopathic physician, who recently died in that city: A poor sewing girl, who went to the late Dr. John F. Gray for advice, was given a vial of medicine and told to go home and go to bed. "I can't do that, doctor," the girl replied; "for I am dependent on what I earn every day for a living." "If that's so," said Dr. Gray, "I'll change the medicine a little. Give me back that vial." He then wrapped around it a ten-dollar bill, and returning it to her reiterated his order: "Go home and go to bed;" adding, "take the medicine, cover and all." He who takes account of the cups of cold water will not forget such deeds of kindness and charity. Oh, to hear him say, at the last, "Ye have done it unto me!"

JEWS AND CHOLERA.—It is noted as a curious fact that the Jewish population at Marseilles and Toulon have been most remarkably exempt from the cholera plague. Of the Jewish community in Marseilles, comprising 4,000 souls, only seven have been seized with the disease. Two of these seven were life-long invalids; another was ninety-seven years of age, and two others had not observed the Jewish law. The American Hebrew of New York ascribes the comparative immunity to the dietary laws of Judaism, and denounces "the unclean, offal feeding things of sea and land" which Christian epicures prize so highly. How far out of the way is the Hebrew? Did Moses make a mistake when he gave that law which has made the Jews the healthiest people on the globe? Surely divine wisdom dictated that law.— The Christian.

CUTTING GLASS.—Any hard steel tool will cut glass with great facility when freely wet with camphor dissolved in turpentine. A drill bow may be used, or even the hand alone. A hole bored may be easily enlarged by a round file. The ragged edges of glass vessels may also be easily smoothed thus with a flat file. Flat window glass can be readily sawed with a watch-spring saw by aid of this solution. In short, the most brittle glass can be wrought almost as easily as brass by the use of cutting tools kept constantly moist with carbonized oil of turpentine.

One of the recent cures for diphtheria is "smoke of burning tar and turpentine." A daughter of one of the compositors of the New York Times was supposed to be dying of diphtheria when the above remedy was tried, and she recovered rapidly. This remedy was recommended by Dr. Delthet, of Paris, in a report to the French academy of medicine.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.
A Good Thing.

Dr. ADAM MILLER, Chicago, Ill., says: "I have recommended Horsford's Acid Phosphate to my patients, and have received very favorable reports. It is one of the very few really valuable preparations now offered to the afflicted. In a practice of thirty-five years I have found a few good things, and this is one of them."

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen. $2.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, gripe, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 629, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, gripe, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Freemasonry at a Glance Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich, and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00 per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symholism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each, per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the ChrisTIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

FARM NOTES.

IS YOUR POULTRY HOUSE READY FOR WINTER?

Cleanliness in all the details of the management of poultry is absolutely necessary to success. Unless there be perfect cleanliness the fowls will not only be constantly infested and worried by vermin, but they will be liable to many troublesome and dangerous diseases which check growth, development and productiveness in birds, and even cause death. This should prove, even to the most thoughtless person, that it does not pay to neglect the poultry in the matter of cleanliness.

Now is the best time to make a thorough cleansing of the house, if it has not been done before. If the roosts and the nesting-boxes are movable, as they should be, the work is much easier, and can be done much more thoroughly. Take everything from the house that is movable; burn the old nests, to destroy the lice and mites, and then with a broom sweep down the ceiling and sides or walls; clean the the floor thoroughly, and remove the droppings and other accumulations. Get ready some good stone lime, making a moderately thick whitewash. With a good brush go over the entire inside of the house, working the wash into the cracks and crevices. When the first coat is dry if it is not heavy enough go over a second time; and when this is dry, not before, let the birds occupy the house. Scrub off the roosting poles, and when dry smear them well with kerosene. Whitewash the nesting-boxes inside and out, make new nests of fresh, well-broken straw, and give them a good dusting of Flowers of Sulphur, and place tobacco stems in the bottom of the boxes before making the nests. Scatter sand and air-slacked lime liberally over the floors, and repeat the operation as often as necessary to insure pure air and cleanliness.—American Agriculturist.

TRANSPLANTING TREES IN WINTER.

Trees, fruit or ornamental, can be transplanted in November or December in perfect safety, if done properly; or we may say any time during the winter when there is no frost in the ground, care being taken to hill up the earth from six to ten inches around the stem, so as to turn off the surplus water which might otherwise damage it. Large trees can be transplanted from one place to another with more certainty of growing late in the fall, when the frost will admit of it, than at any other time. In all cases of transplanting—it may not be out of place to mention here—be sure to retain, in digging up trees, whether large or small, the rootlets, and when setting again spread them and all others out as carefully as possible, which will be following their natural position, and shovel among them the finest soil, and then mingle it among the roots with the hands, then firmly press down with the boot when the hole is filled up.—Germantown Telegraph.

RATS.

The country suffers the loss of millions of dollars annually by the ravages of rats, when by keeping one ferret farmers could rout the last one of the pests from their premises. Ferrets are similar to the weasel in habits and size, but they have been domesticated and used for expelling rats in England for centuries. Mine are white, very small in size, and so tame that I can call them to me and handle them as I please. If nurserymen are bothered with rabbits lurking about, gnawing their trees, with a ferret they can catch the last one. No matter where they burrow, the little fellows will start them in no time. If I can find where a rabbit has taken to a hole in the ground I place a sack over the hole, let in the ferret, and in less time than it takes to tell it the rabbit is in the sack.

LIVE STOCK IN NOVEMBER.

There will soon be a daily out-go of fodder, and the problem of winter feeding and the care of live stock is to so govern this expenditure that the best returns may be obtained. All the farm animals should be in good flesh and health upon the opening of winter. If these conditions are continued the stock are well kept, and will not come out "spring poor" at the end of winter. Manure is not to be overlooked in the winter system of farm management. Farmers, more than ever before, must feed for manure, and husband it when obtained. An abundance of wholesome food, plenty of pure water, warm, dry quarters, and sufficient fresh air, are four of the leading essentials in wintering farm stock. It does not follow from this that the animals must be kept in the stable or under the shed at all times. Frequent exercise in the open yard is profitable when the weather is suitable. Keep the work horses busy in the field, preparing for the coming spring, and feed them well with a variety of food. A few chopped apples serve as an appetizer. Colts need to be pushed in their growth with rich food and good care. Cows taken up from grass need a mixture of hay, corn-fodder, and meal—all they will eat up clean, or else the flow of milk will greatly decrease. One third of a cow's allowance is not too much for a calf. Sheep may be the last stock to go into winter quarters. Keep only thrifty sheep through until spring. Fattening pigs should now be growing rapidly. Grain is low and meat is high, therefore convert the former into the latter. There are many things that will add to the comfort and convenience of caring for live stock in winter. Provide ample feeding room for all animals. Place the feed racks, etc, where most convenient. —American Agriculturist.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the Evening Journal, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importence in the reform of individual and social evils.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyence by Freemasons to Fort Niegare, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribee his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look beck through an intervel of fifty-six yeare with a conecious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the greet power and dangerous influencee of "secret societies."

The pemphlot is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this greet journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in Batavia, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the ebic and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—

1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminisences.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur Tuesday last appointed Hon. Walter Q. Gresham to succeed Hon. Thomas Drummond as Judge of the United States Circuit Court for Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indiana, and has appointed Ex-Secretary Hugh McCulloch to succeed Judge Gresham as Secretary of the Treasury.

—In the case against Connelly at Salt Lake City for bigamy, the Judge instructed the jury to find a verdict of not guilty. Prosecuting counsel stated it as his firm belief that some of the witnesses had perjured themselves, in which the Judge concurred, the testimony being entirely different from what was given before the Grand Jury.

—Mr. Wilbur F. Storey, proprietor and editor of the Chicago Daily Times, died last week Monday. For several years past he has been unable to take an active part in the management of the paper, owing to his failing and feeble health. Several years ago he was stricken with paralysis, and from that time dated the gradual break-down of his system.

—George B Swift killed lately at his dressed-beef manufacturing establishment in Chicago 2,200 head of cattle. The value of beef dressed on that day was not far from $110,000. At this rate the dressed beef business of this firm would amount to about $30,000,000 annually.

—Mayor Edson, of New York, Tuesday appointed General Fitz John Porter Police Commissioner.

—Thursday fire destroyed the six-story building owned by C. E. Culver, corner of LaSalle and Michigan street, Chicago. The contents were also totally destroyed. The fire was caused by the explosion of benzine on the first floor, and spread so rapidly that the occupants, about one hundred in number, had barely time to escape with their lives. Twenty-one girls and eighteen men escaped from the fifth story through the coolness and courage of James Carr, who subsequently received fatal injuries by falling from the fifth story. The foreman of a printing establishment was smothered in the building.

—Judge Drummond announces his intention to spend his time on his farm, near Wheaton, Ill. When in the city he will make his headquarters in Judge Harlan's office. He will not practice law.

—Two police lieutenants and two patrolmen have been indicted by the United States Grand Jury at Cincinnati for preventing qualified persons from voting. They kept a number of negroes immured in a station-house from the night of Oct. 13th until the polls were closed the next day.

—Near Huntingdon, Pa., early Monday morning a house occupied by James Holt and George Rodgers and their families took fire. The men threw their wives and children from an upper window, and then jumped themselves. All were badly hurt, and the four children of Holt are believed to be fatally wounded.

—While driving across the track near Ellwood, Iowa, Sunday forenoon, a train struck a wagon containing Carl Whitmore and family. Mrs. Whitmore and two children were killed, and Whitmore was fatally hurt.

—About a dozen cotton-ginning houses have been burned within the past few days in the vicinity of Columbia, S. C., by fires set by incendiaries. Total loss about $100,000.

—At Reading, Pa., Wednesday, a locomotive and two cars jumped the track and fell through a trestle, the engine tumbling upon the Reading Iron Works boiler house, and demolishing it.

—Near Jackson, Miss., Thursday, William Harris shot dead Tom Phillips, a negro, because Phillips addressed him simply as "Harris."

—At a church dedication last Sunday in Parkesville, S. C., negroes, it is said, disturbed the ceremonies by firing pistols. Bad blood was engendered, and when an officer attempted to make arrests Wednesday he was shot dead by negroes, who were barricaded in a house.

—Elijah Henderson snapped what he thought to be an empty revolver in his wife's face in Indian Territory Thursday evening and shot her dead. He surrendered to the United States Marshal, and wants to be hanged.

—While intoxicated Wednesday in Rabon County, Georgia, Eugene Beck shot and killed his wife and her sister, and then threw himself on the floor and was sleeping beside the corpses when arrested. The indications are that he will be lynched.

—William Mitchell, of Chicago, struck a vein of gas north of Wheeling, W. Va., Friday, which will net him between $500,000 and $1,000,000.

—The capsizing of fishing boats lately in the Straits of Mackinaw and round there has resulted in the drowning of seven persons.

—At a crossing in Pittsburg, Pa., Tuesday evening a train struck a two-horse wagon, one of the men on the vehicle being fatally hurt. One of the horses was thrown forty feet.

—In attempting to arrest an incendiary Dane near St. Helena, Neb., Sunday forenoon, John Philips, Postmaster and Deputy Sheriff, was fatally shot and another citizen wounded. A mob went to the house where the Dane had barricaded himself Sunday night, took him out, and hanged him to a tree.

—Two fire-damp explosions occurred Monday evening in a mine near Uniontown, Pa., in a section where twenty-five men were at work. Windows for miles around were shattered, and flames burst from all the openings. The disaster resulted in the death of fourteen men. Seven others are wounded; some of them may not survive.

FOREIGN.

—Official advices from Pekin have reached the Chinese Embassy in London, which state that the Chinese Government is adverse to any mediation between that country and France. Rumors from Shanghai are that a severe type of cholera is spreading through the French squadron under Admiral Courbet, now blockading Formosa.

—At Colima, Manzanillo, and other towns on the western coast of Mexico, yellow fever of a malignant type is claiming many victims.

—Hurricanes, Sept. 29th and Oct. 7th, on the coast of Lower California, were the severest known. The steamer Estado de Sonora was lost, and the fifty-seven persons on board perished. The schooner Doralt was also wrecked, and nine sloops and coasters went to the bottom, but the number of lives lost is not exactly known.

—Parnell and his followers in the House of Commons have resolved to vote against the government on the franchise bill.

—The steamship Maasdam, from Rotterdam, was found burning 700 miles from the coast of Ireland, and deserted by the crew and passengers, of whom no trace was discovered. The vessel was enveloped in smoke and flames, and had evidently been burning for days. The crew and passengers reached New York Friday on the Rhein, which picked them up on the evening of Oct. 24. During a gale the petroleum tank on the Maasdam began leaking, and while a sailor was looking for the fissure his lighted lamp touched the tank, which exploded and caused the burning of the vessel.

—It was rumored last Friday that the rebels had captured an English reconnoitering party, mounted on dromedaries, south of Dongola. The defect in the commissariat is owing to the difficulty in making portages so as to avoid the cataracts. This will cause the postponement of the main advance from Wady-Halfa until the middle or December. It is said that Gen. Gordon has repulsed an attack by El Mahdi's troops. This dispels the uneasiness arising from the recent absence of news.

—The House of Commons, Friday evening, was mainly occupied in the discussion of the merits of fair trade versus free trade. In the discussion it was stated that complaints were made that rents were diminishing everywhere, that capital was leaving England for present investment in "protection" countries, and that the English trade was suffering from foreign countries and protective duties.

—The propaganda at Rome has advices from the province of Canton that many Catholic chapels have been sacked and destroyed, 200 houses belonging to Christians have been pillaged and burned, women outraged, and men tortured for refusing to participate in Chinese religious rites. Two bishops, 30 missionaries and 700 Catholic refugees have arrived at Hong Kong.

It is said that the room used by the Arbitration Congress assembled in Geneva in 1872 is preserved unchanged, with table and chairs as left by the delegates, in commemoration of the first official effort to settle international quarrels without resort to the sword. It is one of the redeeming features of Mr. Blaine's campaign that he has spoken frankly of his international policy, as opposed to future settlement of difficulties by war, and the reference of all such questions to a committee of arbitration.

The report of Commissioner Evans of the Internal Revenue shows the share of the United States government in the whisky business. The receipts have been happily falling off, and may they continue to do so! In 1883 they were $144,500,000; in 1884, $121,500,000 and the estimate for next year is $6,000,000 less still. The production of whisky in 1881 is placed at 118,000,000 gallons; in 1882 at 106,000,000; while during last year less than 75,500,000 were produced and deposited in distillery warehouses. Perhaps prohibition is beginning to prohibit at last.

Secretary of War began well in the case of his Judge Advocate General Swaim. The misdemeanors of which the committee of investigation found him guilty, and on which Secretary Lincoln and President Arthur called a court martial were gross, and the evidence would have been convincing to an ordinary jury. But the case has been hanging off for months. The trial was finally set for the fifteenth of this month. But now comes in General Swaim, and objects to four or five of the officers selected for the court martial, and a further postponement is probable. Does Mr. Lincoln understand how many "Sublime Princes" and other Masons of high degree are concerned in Gen. Swaim's acquittal?

In 1876 General Hawley, as manager, insisted that the Centennial should be closed on the Sabbath. Under his wise control that exposition achieved a marked superiority and success among the great exhibitions of the world. The question of Sabbath opening has already been raised at New Orleans in connection with the "World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition," which opens Tuesday, December 16th. The official bulletin of the fair says that undoubtedly a large majority of people interested would decide in favor of Sabbath opening, and leans to their view. The management, it says, have decided to stop the machinery and business of the exposition, but whether the gates will be closed against visitors, or the Music Hall used for Sunday-concerts has not yet been determined. From the tone of the article it seems probable that Sabbath desecration will be tolerated. A public meeting, under the auspices of the Sunday League, was held last Sabbath in New Orleans, to approve a memorial against Sabbath opening; and similar leagues throughout the country are desired to take similar action. Let the protest of every Christian community be heard upon this important question.

SALMON P. CHASE.

[See 8th page.]

The Iowa Supreme Court having given a favorable decision for good morals on the temperance issue, follows it with another affecting the question of Bible in schools. At Bloomfield a man applied to the court for an injunction to restrain Bible reading and psalm singing in the public schools to which his children were sent. The application was based on the ground that the constitution of the State provided that "No person shall be compelled to attend any place of worship, or pay taxes for the building or repairing places of worship." His injunction was not granted, and the case going to the Supreme Court the decision was sustained, the Court holding that the reading of the Bible in the common schools does not make them places of worship, and therefore not unconstitutional. The decision is most reasonable. The presence of the Bible and occasional reading from it does not make a Masonic lodge a place of Christian worship; but prayers to a false deity, and religious rites and worship paid not to the God of the Bible but some other, do make it a place of pagan worship.

The miserable business which France has undertaken in China yet drags along without decisive action on either side. The fact that France has not declared war but has asked a large indemnity, classes her aggressions with the reprisals of bandits and pirates. The natural effect of the barbarous business upon such a nation as China, has been to arouse a violent passion against foreigners among the Chinese, and news by mail up to the 14th ult. shows that Chinese mobs have been committing fearful outrages in Canton and points in the interior. Twelve villages in the province of Canton have notified all Christians to leave. Fifteen churches in those villages have been already destroyed. At one place a mob and soldiers destroyed all the Catholic, English and Presbyterian churches. In another canton, Mr. Bagnall, colporteur of the American Bible Society, was murdered. In another four Roman Catholic and five Protestant churches have been destroyed and 120 houses of resident Christians looted and the inhabitants driven away. At other places Church of England and Wesleyan chapels have been destroyed. Christians are fleeing into Hong Kong, the Chinese giving them the alternative to sacrifice to the idols or leave. Many women also are caught by the mob and outraged, especially in Catholic institutions. It is impossible not to charge upon France the blame of all this suffering of innocent victims and the serious check to the progress of civilization and Christianity among the uncounted millions of China.

In the face of frequently threatened overthrow Mr. Gladstone has as often wrested a victory from his adversaries. The debate on the franchise bill has proceeded to the second reading and is likely to pass by an overwhelming majority before this week expires; nor is the House of Lords likely to venture again to oppose it. The dispatches report a collapse of the Tory opposition, who have undertaken without courage, without skill, and without concert, to defeat the measure. Their only hope is a failure in the Egyptian expedition which is slowly toiling up the Nile cataracts. The difficulties in the way of Gen. Wolseley may be too great for the powerful government of Great Britain to surmount, but it would seem that the desire to reach Khartoum is not so strong as the hope that Gen. Gordon may extricate himself.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.—II.

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

I wish now to look for that temperance end.

My opponent says, "The chief end and aim of the Temple of Honor is not salvation, but is temperance." It properly devolves upon him to prove that assertion, but as he is pleased to give us only a plain, unsupported assertion, we will ascertain for ourselves if the statement is true. We will take with us the strong electric light of honest investigation and invite Mr. Tait to go with us. Fortunately he has directed us just where to go to find it, and so, of course, we shall have no trouble. He says, temperance "is what it was organized for at the outset of its career." Thus he appeals to the early history of the order. We will go there at once.

We read, "Many of its [Sons of Temperance] early members soon learned that the organization lacked some of the elements of perpetuity that had enabled older benevolent associations to bear up against the assaults of their enemies, and determined to avail themselves of all honorable means in their reach to make this equal to their elder sisters." What these "elements" were is shown in the next sentence to be, not temperance (that had never enabled the "older benevolent associations," Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., to bear up against the assaults of their enemies), but "degrees and signs." Objections to the degrees and signs are on record in these words: "The great prosperity of that order [Sons of Temperance] was owing to its simplicity, and to make it more complex would retard its growth. Those in favor urged that the order was so extremely simple in its construction it would soon fall by its own weight unless it had more strength to support and beauty to adorn it." While the Temple of Honor remained an adjunct of the Sons of Temperance these "degrees and signs" were all there was to it, but when at last a separation took place it became necessary to attach to it an underpinning of temperance. But "degrees and signs," and not temperance, was what the order was organized for at the outset of its career, and degrees and signs are not to make men temperate but to perpetuate the institution, as seen above, and to save their souls, as we shall see by and by. Besides, temperance was already the avowed object of the Sons of Temperance, and how can it be said that its adjunct became such to secure an object already secured! My opponent is at fault, and as he leaves us here, we are left without a guide. But let us not be discouraged. If the object of our search is to be found, we will seek high and low till we find it. Let us go to the Grand Temple.

In the years 1874–75 the order was in its prime in R. I. Here is a copy of the Proceedings of the Grand Temple for those years, covering two terms, and containing reports of all the principal officers, including two reports from the Grand Worthy Templar and two reports from the Sister Grand Worthy Templar. In all the book the only reference to temperance is a negative allusion in the first recorded report of the G. W. Templar in these words:

(P. 5), "There are other virtues besides Temperance and Total Abstinence that our initiation and degree obligations require and exact us to cultivate and practice," and again a little further on: "I pray that you may at all times exercise and have given unto you 'consistency of judgment, one heart and mutual love;' and that you continue in the great work of moral reform, and help to make the name of our Order and Temperance glorious in the world." "Moral reform" means something more than temperance as we shall learn by and by.

The Sister Grand Worthy Templar says in her first report: (p. 28) "Let us then * * * labor during the present term to bring our Social Temple to a higher eminence than it has ever before reached. Let it be the stepping-stone to a life of strict morality, true refinement and Christian culture." These terms do not mean temperance. They do mean something higher. In her second report we find: (p. 53) "It has been my whole aim and constant endeavor to raise our socials to their true position of moral excellence—an institution like ours should be second to no other organization, not excepting God's holy church; as I have said before, Fraternity like ours may clasp hands with the good everywhere, for it is only the True, the Faithful, Loving and Pure that are in sympathy with the angels and God who is over all." Such language does not apply to temperance—it means salvation. The highest plane a Christian can reach while in this mortal frame is to be in sympathy with God and the angels.

But let us look further. The dedication ceremony ought to show the principal work of the order. In that we find these words: "I therefore dedicate this temple to the practice of the cardinal virtues of our order—Truth, Love, Purity and Fidelity." Degrees and signs again but no temperance, and we are told further that "within the hallowed walls of the temple Temperance curbs his appetite, Love inflames his heart, Purity cleanses his mind, and Fidelity guards his soul." In this panorama, temperance is represented as the beginning, as I have ever claimed, while fidelity is the end, and is supposed to possess the ability to "guard his soul."

We turn to the form for instituting a new temple. Nothing is said of temperance here, but it is said: "Worthy brothers, you are now built together in the principles of Truth, of Love, of Purity and of Fidelity."

We will glance at the installation of officers: Nothing of temperance here anywhere, but the closing words are—"May Love inspire your feelings, Purity direct your purposes, Fidelity keep you true unto the objects of our temple."

Let us turn to the initiation ceremony: The candidate is asked—"Are you then with us in. opinion and spirit, and desirous of laboring in the cause to which our temple is dedicated?" I will guarantee that every candidate supposes, when that question is put to him, that the cause referred to is temperance; but we are more enlightened. We have just seen that the temple is dedicated "to the practice of the cardinal virtues of our order, T. L. P. and F." The candidate answers "I am." He means one thing. The order means another. This is a snare. After a somewhat tedious initiation he is told it is all a type of something. Temperance you say. Not a bit of it. "The steps you have taken are a type of the progress of a human soul from the imperfect up to the true and perfect." That is a delusion.

Turning to the closing ceremonies of the temple, we read: "Moved by the spirit which inspires the temperance cause, and bound together by the virtues of our order, Truth, Love, Purity and Fidelity, long may we meet within this temple dedicated to honor." Honor is a short, comprehensive term expressing the four cardinal virtues of the order, and all that is contained therein, including the degree work, the theology of the order, and the salvation of its members. Honor is not temperance.

We have still one more source to look into, the opening ceremony. The Worthy Chaplain says, "May we be pure." That's not temperance. Past Worth Chief Templar: "Be fidelity our aim." That's not temperance. Worthy Chief Templar: "We have been dedicated to truth, to love, to purity and to fidelity. * * * Here let us practice what our precepts teach, respect, forbearance and propriety." That's not temperance. All: "So may we live, so may we die." That's not temperance.

And temperance is nowhere mentioned as the aim, the ultimate object of the Temple of Honor. In pursuing our search we have incidentally received some hints of what the ultimate object is. We will follow out that line in our next.

Providence, R. I.

STRAY LEAVES FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF A SECEDER.—I.

BY S. S. PALMER.

In 1876 the Cynosure contained a statement of my experience in retiring from the Masonic fraternity. From that time to the present there has been one unceasing round of slander, vituperation, and abuse in almost every conceivable form.

If any man wishes to know how to find a foretaste of "Hades" in this world, let him join the Masons, withdraw from them, and openly oppose and expose them. If his experience does not equal that of Carleton's, "Betsy and I are out," where he speaks of something "a thousand times as hot,"—he must lack in his make up for earnestness.

A recent experience is so full of interest to myself that it may possibly attract some of the readers of the Cynosure. Take the last year, and if not sufficient for one recital, we will try and find something more remote. About the first of July, 1883, the church to which I had acted as pastor two years and a half were apprised of my intention to close my labors at the end of three months. In spite of opposition intense and powerful, my pastorate had been very successful.

The church was in the act of transferring its affections and real estate to another denomination when I came to it, all the members save two, it was said, having signed papers to that effect. Through my efforts they were led to reconsider and withdraw their consent to such a step, a fine church was built, also another in an adjoining village; the membership was more than doubled, the attendance greatly increased even after the withdrawal of one swarm to a new hive built by the Methodists; and outwardly, at least, all things were prosperous. The secret society friends had been earnest and persistent in their effort all this time to break down the work and although they had failed they were not discouraged.

Following an extended revival they succeeded in crowding into the church an Odd-fellow and family much against my open protest. This was the entering wedge to my removal. Greatly enraged at their failure to retard or seriously injure the work up to the time of my resignation, they suddenly hit upon a new plan, and what slander had before failed to accomplish, it now secured through the active agency of the secret society church members. It aroused the church to act in opposition to my withdrawal, and failing for want of facts to bring anything to bear against me formally, they secured by insinuation and covert slander an increase of the bitter feeling against me to such an extent that I could count those who dared to show any friendly feeling toward me upon the fingers of one hand.

At the end of the three months I retired and accepted a situation as bookkeeper for a furnace company at a salary of twelve hundred dollars per year for one year. "This, they said," was entirely too good; they would soon get me out of that soft seat. At the end of thirty days they had stolen fifty dollars' worth of property and made me an expense of twenty-five additional; and within ninety days, for other reasons and their influence combined, I gave notice of change as soon as my successor could be secured. Two hundred and seventeen dollars of that hard earned salary is still unpaid and almost entirely through their efforts to prevent payment.

Engaging in active work on my timber land, they slandered me until I could not get a sack of flour without the cash, at a time when there was no money in circulation here scarcely, and they defrauded me out of hundreds of dollars by their combinations against me. A stranger came into the place who appeared very honorable and honest, a lawyer. He collected some accounts for me; but never a penny, as I since learned, from brother Odd-fellows, although he had a number such.

The last one was so manipulated that my eyes were opened as if by magic. He took an account of some $20 on a brother O. F.; called on him; met with refusal; advised me and at once took the case against me for the O. F. Through collusion with the justice, a brother O. F., he broke the case a third time, taking his five dollar fee each time, as he said, from his brother O. F. He made great claims constantly to sincerity and honest intentions on the part of his client and his own as well, and said so much that I suggested arbitration at this juncture. He assented with great show of willingness, said he would draw up an agreement which both of us should sign, and at my suggestion it was agreed and so written that neither party should appear by counsel but personally make their statements to the arbitrators and abide their decision. The first step taken after signing this agreement was to have his partner chosen as his client's arbitrator, an open violation of the written agreement, but finally assented to by me to secure action. It so happened that after the third arbitrator was chosen and the statements made, that the conclusions were all one side on the part of two and the lawyer arbitrator was not one of the two. It took some three or four days and I think a full week passed before the one was willing to submit the findings over his signature. When this was finally secured the paper was passed at once to his partner and he was ready to pay the amount, less offsetts claimed but not allowed before the committee. Two of the arbitrators positively asserted that their was no such intention in the language or intent of their findings, but this availed nothing and the case stood as at the beginning. At this point one of the arbitrators, and not the one who stood alone, said to me that he would buy my claim and pay me the face of it in cash, as he at once did, and immediately notified Mr. Odd-fellow Lawyer he could have eight hours in which to settle or be sued by him. This brought matters to a crisis and the money was at once handed over.

Mr. Odd-fellow Lawyer is now a candidate for prosecuting attorney on the Fusion Greenback ticket of Antrim Co. I would like to remove from the county before he is elected.

THE PRE-EMPTION RIGHT OF CHRISTIANITY.

NOTES OF THE ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT C. A. BLANCHARD, AT MONMOUTH CONVENTION, SEPTEMBER 30, 1884.

At the last in the discussion of all questions men must reach a foundation of right. All talk is vain and all settlements delusion until this rock is reached. The religious question which includes and determines all others exhibits the progress which men must make on all lines of thought. At the beginning heathenism covered the world. After a time Christianity came as a little light in the midst of surrounding blackness. Through all the ages since conflicts and struggles have enabled men to see more clearly where the line of truth run. The world admits now the theory of the New Testament and before long a sleeping church and a wicked, gainsaying world will find that a king had come in righteousness and that the empire of sin is at an end.

THE QUESTION STATED.

Let us keep clearly before our minds the point at issue. It is whether or not Christianity has any special right, is entitled to any particular consideration here in America. There are on the one hand those who affirm that she is not. And, as they logically must, they denounce all laws and customs which are distinctively Christian as impertinent and offensive. Sabbath laws, prison chaplains, untaxed chunches, restrictions on profanity, etc., they declare to be inconsistent with that equality guaranteed to all men by the Constitution. We, on the contrary, hold and teach that the Christian religion is part and parcel of the law. That its customs are entitled to special respect and that all legal enactments which are derived from it have a special claim on the consciences of all good citizens. We believe that instead of modifying the distinctively religious character of our legislation, that character should be intensified and extended so that in all regards the law of God should be the law of the land. A single illustration may suffice. The present divorce system of the United States is an inharmonious, bungling contrivance without authority from the word of God or the reason of man. Along with this fact we find that crimes against the family are so inadequately punished that no jury will convict a man of murder who takes human life to avenge an outrage on wife or child. What a change would be wrought in these particulars by reenacting the regulation given to the Jews, which allowed divorce only on the ground of adultery, or that old sterner law which punished that offence with death. Lax laws and inadequate penalties are direct producers of crime. The fact that divorces are easily obtained, makes people think of and secure divorces; the fact that seduction or adultery are less severely punished than house breaking or stealing, explains the unpunished murders which punish such crimes. But let us return.

HERE ARE TWO OPINIONS, and the truth lies with one or the other, or between the two. Where is it? There are various lines of argument which we might follow to our conclusion. We might ground our opinion on the sovereignty of God, and the duty which men and nations owe of conformity to his will. Or, we might show from the history of the world, and the nature of man, that Christian laws are essential to the well being of the individual and the advance of society. We choose at this time a simpler, but as conclusive a line of thought. We rest our case, for the present, on the proposition that Christianity has a pre-emption claim. She was first on the ground, and cannot lawfully be deposed without cause shown. The Jamestown settlement was commercial, but all other plantations in America were made by religious men for religious purposes, with the possible exception of New Amsterdam. The men who are now declaiming against a puritanic Sabbath, came to this country to secure its material advantages. They wanted to escape service in the army, to own a piece of land, to get higher wages for their labor. The men who made America a desirable place of residence for them, were Christians, many of them of property and social importance in the old world, who left their homes, and sailed three thousand miles of wintry sea to found a Christian commonwealth. They put their religion into their everyday life, and embodied it in the laws under which we now live. They did not do all that we can see that they should, but they did much, and those who come to enjoy the fruits of their labors and sacrifices, do not exhibit good taste, when they sneer at those rugged manful, and tender womanly pilgrims, who opened among savages this asylum for the oppressed from all the world.

But, says some one, do you mean to live always in the seventeenth century? Because the first settlers of this country were good men do you mean never to advance beyond their ideas? No, we admit that there

MAY BE CAUSE FOR CHANGE.

What we insist upon is that changes are not to be assumed; if made they must be argued to the satisfaction of the whole people and until the laws are altered they should be obeyed. Instead of this we find large bodies of citizens who are simply nullifiers. They quietly trample law under foot, and when remonstrated with raise the cry of fanatic and bigot. They seem to think themselves a conquering army of foreigners rather than law-respecting citizens. It is time that the Christian portion of our population should raise an emphatic protest against the talk about the German vote, the Irish vote, etc., etc. If men want to vote as Germans or Irishmen, they should remain in Germany or Ireland. If they desire to vote here, they should be wholly American and always loyal to American law.

If it be possible for them to persuade a majority of the nation that the Puritans were mistaken in their notions of government, it is their undoubted privilege to do so and when our laws are heathen we may live as such; but until then we are bound by the law of manhood as well as that of God to respect existing institutions, one of which is unquestionably a Christian code of law.

It ought also to be said that Christian people are much at fault that they do not secure the enforcement of many of the laws now nominally in force. A company of gentlemen lately called at a police station in Chicago to request the lieutenant in charge to prevent the carrying out of a circus programme advertised for the Lord's Day. He at once agreed to do so, and said: "You gentlemen, would secure more favors from the law officers if you more frequently did as you are now doing. The only men who come here are saloon-keepers and their patrons. And of course we go first where we are called." The fact is that if Christians would forget to quarrel about sectarian nothings, forget their petty ambitions and selfish schemes for personal aggrandizement, and bend themselves to the great work of saving men and making society safe, "the world would be the better for it."

Another thing that we should remember is that we are not to stand on the defensive. This world will never be subdued to Christ until he comes to lead his own hosts to battle. But he has sent us to disciple all nations and in place of being content to have things as they are we should seek to make them what they ought to be. The good laws which we have should be retained, better ones should be enacted; the government should cease breaking the Sabbath and selling whisky, and, above all, the Constitution should be so amended that an honest man could know what manner of men we are. All this may be accomplished if only the disciples of Jesus will follow their Master in faithful work and the work of faith.—Statesman.

Dr. Fairburn, in his lectures on the comparative history of the greater religions at Andover Theological Seminary, reported Max Muller as having said, some months ago, in conversation upon the Brahmanic philosophy, the following: "If the Bible were placed with these books, the contrast would be so great as to be the greatest demonstration of its truth. The extraordinary thing is this; you get almost priceless gems, but they are hidden in perfect mountains of rubbish; and the priceless gem is not the thing, strangely, that the people who possess the book most value, but it is the mountain of rubbish."

It is on precisely this ground that we rest the duty of supporting foreign missions. And those Christian ministers and teachers who select only the "gems" of heathen religions and philosophies for holding up before the people, show, it seems to us, both a lack of breadtn of conception and of honesty, and place dendrances in the way of one of the grandest enterprises of Christian chnrches—the evangelization of the nations of the earth.—Sabbath Recorder.

STRIKE OFF THE CHAIN!

Wake! wake! ye freemen all,
'Tis past the breaking dawn!
Rouse ye at duty's call,
Up with the rising morn!

CHORUS.—Come on, come on amain,
Ye stout hearts and ye free!
From mountain, vale, and plain,
From lake, and stream, and sea!

Redeem, redeem the land;
Break off the Cabal's chain!
Be strong in His right hand,
Whose strength is never vain.

Grasp. grasp with all your might,
Truth's bright and glitt'ring sword.
And let its blade of light
Leap forth at Freedom's word.

Strike! strike with manly blows;
Strike sure and strike it home;
Nor let this stealthy foe,
Up from the grave-dust come.

Shout, shout the victory
Earth's joyous realms around,
'Till the united cry
Back from the skies resound!

Down! down, the banner black,
Polluting freedom's air,
And drive the minions back
Who come to plant it here.

Lift, lift your ensign white
In Heaven's broad anopy,
And spread its fold's of light
Till all the world shall see.

THE RELIGION OF MASONRY.

The principal reason which impels many Christians to oppose Freemasonry is its opposition to the Lord Jesus Christ. The order, it is true, does not profess opposition but simply claims neutrality. There are, however, many thiugs in which neutrality is hostility. Neutrality between truth and error is hostility to truth. Neutrality between God and Satan is hostility against God. Professed neutrality between the religion of Christ and any other system of religion is hostility against Christ himself. "He that is not with me is against me." This dictum of the Holy Spirit cannot be reasoned away.

Any system of religion which has not Jesus Christ for its foundation and center is a false religion. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus." "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," but the name of Jesus. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be anathema maranatha."

Freemasonry constructively denies this fundamental principle of the Christian religion, and, in so doing, denies the whole system. Mackey's Lexicon, page 404, declares, "The religion, then, of Masonry is pure theism." Mackey's Manual, page 216, says Masons are obliged only "to that religion in which all men agree." Again page 40, "A belief in God is the sole creed of a Mason, at least the only creed he is required to profess.

Notwithstanding this exclusion of the name, person, atoning blood, righteousness, Spirit and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ from the lodge, the members are assured that by being "good Masons," or by obeying Masonic requirements only, they shall be saved. Town's System, page 184, "The Divine Being views no moral character in a man with greater complacency than his who, in heart, strictly conforms to Masonic requirements." So the "good Mason," though he be a Jew, Mohammedan, or if any other false religion, is the holiest man on earth. Mackey's Manual, page 203: "We may be received into thine everlasting kingdom, and there enjoy the just reward of a pious and virtuous life." Christians expect to enjoy heaven as the reward of Christ's obedience, sufferings death, and by being fitted by the Holy Spirit for that place. Masons are taught that heaven is no more than a "just reward" for obeying "Masonic requirements." Ahiman Rezon, page 63: "White" (the white apron spread over the stomach of a Mason) "is the emblem of that purity of life and rectitude of conduct by which alone we may, expect to gain admission into the Holy of Holies above."

It is often said by the ignorant that Freemasonry does not claim to be a religious but only a benevolent society. Why, then, its altars, priests, prayers, hymns, benedictions, moral lessons, illuminations, regenerations, and eternal rewards? Masonic authors are probably competent witnesses on this point. Webb's Lexicon, page 357: "The meeting of a Masonic lodge is strictly a religious ceremony." Mackey's Manual, page 41. "Masonry is a religions institution." Town's System, page 170: "In advancing to the fourth degree the Mason is assured of his election and final salvation. Hence opens the fifth degree, where he discovers his election to, and his glorified station in the kingdom of his father."

It makes but little difference how much of this nonsense and impiety Masons really believe. In judging of the order it is sufficient to know that this is what it teaches and what the members profess to believe. With "the deceitfulness of sin," and "the deceivableness of unrighteousness," and "the wiles of the devil" (we beg pardon of the more sensitive brethren of the order), combined against the salvation of the soul, it is not safe to "make believe" in regard to a false system of religion or to trifle with eternal truths.

There is no Saviour of men but the Lord Jesus Christ. There is no heaven but that which he has gone to prepare. There are none admitted into glory but those who have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." There is no eternal bliss but in drinking from the "pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, which proceedeth from the throne of God and of the Lamb."—Rev. J. P. Lytle, in the United Presboterian.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN COLLEGE.

The arguments pro and con for these societies (which usually are known by two Greek letters) may be briefly stated in the following facts:

C. P. was a poor lad who, by working on a farm in summer, earned barely enough money to pay for his board, clothes and tuition in college. He joined on entering a "Fraternity."

Many wealthy members of this society were among the alumni of the college. They had erected a dormitory where "the brothers" occupied comfortable rooms rent free; they had a club house, with library, reading-room, piano and luxurious study-rooms. All these advantages C. P. enjoyed, free of cost.

There was also a sum contributed by the society for the aid of poor members. In the junior year of his course P.'s health failed. His expenses during his senior terms were borne by the Fraternity, with the understanding that whenever he should be able, in his future life, he would repay it into the general treasury of the Fraternity.

P., who made good use of his advantages and was not unwilling to accept aid, has naturally much to say in defence of secret societies.

In another institution in New England most of the students belong to one of four fraternities, each of which has a chapter in the college. A few young men remain from poverty or choice outside of all. They occupy precisely the position of individuals in a city who undertake to struggle against rings or powerful corporations.

They are socially under the ban; there is no chance whatever for them to gain any of the offices or honors given by students to each other, and which are so dear to boys. But this is not all.

Not only is this, but in many other colleges, the tutors, instructors, and even the professors themselves are members of these fraternities, and (being human, like other men), are often influenced by old associations, and loyalty to their society, to be prejudiced in favor of fellow-members among the students and against those who belong to a rival society.

There are said to be colleges in which no member of a certain fraternity, whatever his merit, ever "passes" with honor, and in which the members of its rival find a flowery path before they to success. So flagrant is this evil, that in some colleges no professor or tutor is permitted to continue his connection with a secret society, and in others no chapter of such society can be maintained.

Much is to be said on both sides. But if such secret associations exist, they should be so controlled as not to interfere with justice. The Companion suggests the subject as one worthy the grave, honest consideration of the young men and parents who are its readers.—Youth's Companion

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER IV.

STEPHEN HOWLAND'S FIRST CASE.

A stone's throw from Stephen Howland's office stood one of the few surviving landmarks that told of a time when the city of Jacksonville was a mere nucleus of log huts surrounded by unbroken prairie. Stephen had often employed his superfluous leisure in wondering why it was allowed to stand there; and finally reached the conclusion that the owner must be a miserly, grasping kind of man, who was holding on to this bit of primeval property in hopes of a fabulous rise in real estate—which was about as charitable and as near the truth as most of our conclusions regarding any eccentric or unusual action on the part of our fellow beings—little thinking that through this man he would secure his first client.

As he sits in his rude domicile, like a bear in his den, we will sketch his portrait. He is large and powerfully built, with eyes as blue and keen as an Alpine sky. His hair falls in thick, shaggy locks from an ample head, where a phrenologist would find plenty of those unamiable bumps which characterize the born fighter; especially if he be of the combative, destructive, aggressive Anglo-Saxon race; yet when his mouth, shaded by its bristling, grizzly beard, parts in a smile, it has the winning sweetness of a child. Taken altogether there is something in the general cast of head and face strongly suggestive of the portrait of John Brown. Martin Treworthy had often been told that he looked like the hero of Osawatomie, and no compliment could possibly please him better. In the old stirring days of border warfare he had been one of John Brown's men, and when the curtain fell on the tragedy of Harper's Ferry, the man who had marche dunder his orders, bivouacked with him, and listened to his strong, burning, fateful words, felt the burden of prophecy in his own soul, as if a portion of his beloved leader's spirit had descended upon him.

"It don't matter to me what folks call him, 'crack-brained,' or 'visionary,' or 'fanatic,' or anything else—that's one good thing; and it don't matter any to the captain, that's another. He was the only one that dared to do instead of writing and speechifying. He struck slavery right at its heart, and it will never get over the blow. He don't need me to stand up for him, but every time I read in Revelation I can shut my eyes and see him as plain as day, sitting on a white horse and following the One in the vesture dipped in blood, with the sharp sword going out of his mouth. Now I've pondered a good deal on that passage and similar ones. I tell you the American people have got a cup of trembling to drink before the Lord gets through reckoning with 'em. The time is coming when He shall tread the winepress of the fierceness of his wrath against this nation, and blood shall come out of the winepress, even unto the horses' bridles."

It was not long before the first gun fired on Fort Sumter startled the North from its dream of peace and safety, and Martin Treworthy, as he buckled on his knapsack and shouldered his musket knew that the hour of which he prophesied was casting its shadow on the dial. And when around hundreds of campfires rose the stirring strains of the John Brown song he only saw, plainer than ever, the soul of the old martyr-hero "marching on" after his Celestial Chief, who had waited in divine patience, while the cries of his enslaved children mingled with the prayers of his saints on the golden altar, till now "the day of vengeance was in his heart and the year of his redeemed had come."

He had been through all the hardest-fought battles of the war, Gettysburg, Antietam, James River and the Wilderness. He came out of the army as he had entered it, a private, his only badge of distinction some honorable wounds that disabled him from active labor. But he had his pension and a small sum laid up besides, and on this he lived very comfortably. He was one of the first settlers of Jacksonville, and though the price of the land on which stood his primitive dwelling would have added not a little to his worldly wealth he had steadily refused all offers to sell, though not everybody knew the reason why.

He had come to Jacksonville when its future greatness existed only in the speculator's brain, a middle-aged man, with life's summer just beginning—a summer like that of northern latitudes, without any spring; for he had been eft an orphan in early boyhood, and remembered nothing since but a succession of rough experiences in borderers' cabins, fighting wild Indians, prairie fires and Missouri ruffians; varied, however, we must remark, by one great episode, that reversed the whole current of the reckless backwoodsman's life—his conversion at a Methodist campmeeting, when among other "fruits meet for repentance" he had given up his favorite indulgence of tobacco; an act which had more of the genuine spirit of self-renunciation in it than many a comfortable, easy-going Christian ever dreams of. The pretty "school-ma'am" who had engaged his affections, an orphan likewise, was a woman as fair and good and true as any of the heroines of Scott or Burns. But alas for human hopes! Scarlet fever broke out in the school in which she was teaching; she caught the infection, and in one short week from the day set for their marriage he laid her to rest under the prairie roses, and tried to keep his heart from breaking by reading the fourteenth chapter of John, and thinking of those many mansions of which the Lamb is the light forever.

"Somehow all this happiness I've been looking forward to don't seem to be for me," he said, when he came out of that first trance of misery which succeeds every stunning sorrow, and realized with a kind of wonder that he could still live on when the desire of his eyes had been taken from him at a stroke. "But I won't murmur at God's dealings. They are all right and for the best. 'The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord.'"

But while he bowed himself thus meekly to that mysterious decree which condemned him to loneliness and solitude for the rest of his mortal pilgrimage, he clung to the home that was to have been hers with a tenacity perfectly unintelligible to any one who did not know the story of his frustrated hopes. He had driven every nail with his own hands, exulting in the fact that it was the only frame house in the settlement. He had wrought into its fabric all the dreams and hopes which, in a nature like his, can have but one earthly blooming time; and now that she had gone for whose pleasure and delight he had planned and labored, it still seemed too much a part of her for him to feel contented anywhere else. For, while he had not a particle of superstition in his nature, and denounced unsparingly the rappings, table-tippings, and coarse materializings of so-called "spiritualism" as a fraud and humbug, directly inspired by the father-of-lies himself, he implicitly believed in a world of spiritual intelligences above and around him; nor would he have been startled at any time if soundless footsteps had crossed his threshold, and, looking up, he had beheld once more the blue eyes and brown hair, all transfigured with that tender, immortal light which only rests on the foreheads of the redeemed.

So much for Martin Treworthy, a real old Ironside, "born out of due season;" a prophet without honor save among a few who liked his rugged utterances, or as they would have expressed it, "his way of putting things." He now sits in his leathern arm-chair, engaged in earnest talk with a young man whose shop-apron and sleeves rolled up to the armpits, proclaim him a genuine son of labor; his shrewd, kindly face indignant and thoughtful by turns.

"So you mean to appeal to the law," said Treworthy, heartily. "All right. If you come short, call on me. I've got a little cash laid by—what I used to spend for tobacco. See here—" and Martin Treworthy took down a tin box from a shelf over his head, and opening it displayed a goodly store of shining silver coin—"so much for the Lord that used to go to the devil, and I say, take it to fight the devil. There's twenty dollars if there is a cent in good solid specie. Come, now."

But the young man shook his head in decided, though grateful refusal.

"No, Mr. Treworthy; your sympathy and advice is all the help I need. The evidence against Snyder is so strong that prosecuting the case cannot be very expensive. But poor Tom is pretty bad to-day. It seems they kept him drinking till he had taken enough whisky to kill an ox; and then in that condition he was arrested and put into a cold cell with only a little straw, and not a blanket to cover him—and it was one of the frostiest nights of the season. To-day he seems a little out of his head. It is an outrageous affair, and I'm bound to see what can be done about it. The first thing, of course, is to get a good lawyer to conduct the case—if I only knew what one."

"How many 'good lawyers' do you reckon on here in Jacksonville?" asked his counsellor, somewhat dryly. "Count 'em up on your fingers and see."

"There's Greggson. Folks call him smart."

"So is the devil, but I wouldn't want either of 'em to plead a case for me."

"Then what do you say to Simonds?"

But Mr. Treworthy looked no better satisfied.

"I say he is a high Mason, and a poor workingman like you had better keep clear of Sublime Princes and Knights Elect and all such fellows. What are big fish for except to swallow little ones?"

"O, if you come to that," said the other, as he uneasily shifted his left foot over his right," "every lawyer in Jacksonville, unless may be this young Howland that has just come into the place, is a Mason; and all our business men, to say nothing of the ministers, belong to that or some other secret order. If it is an evil I don't see but we shall have to put up with it or else go out of the world. I know you think all secret societies are bad things, and I am willing to admit that there are evils connected with Freemasonry, but whether they are a part of the institution or mere abuses that have crept into it, is a question that I must confess I am undecided about. I believe the trades unions and temperance lodges are doing a good work."

"Why are not labor troubles stopped and the saloons put down then?" queried Martin Treworthy, with blunt and most inconvenient appositeness.

"Oh, well;" replied the other, "intemperance is such a giant evil that no single man nor association of men seem powerful enough to grapple with it. And as for labor unions—where capitalists are growing more reckless of the laboring-man's rights every year—combination is the only weapon left. To tell the truth, I joined the Knights of Labor a short time ago, and as yet I have seen only good in the organization. The president and many of the members are Masons or Odd-fellows, and appear to be worthy and honorable men as far as I can judge—at least, most of them. Now, I really can't see where the practical difference comes in between a lawyer who is a Mason and one that isn't. Neither want to lose their cases."

Martin Treworthy's eyes flashed, and he brought his hand down on the table with considerable vehemence as he said—

"Nelson Newhall! I am older than you, and I have seen the workings of this vile leaven as I hope you will never have a chance to. Difference? It can make all the difference between sin and righteousness, truth and falsehood, justice and oppression, heaven and hell. I have seen rogues get clear that ought to have been hung, and far honester men sent to jail in their places; and right here in this very county I know of two murderers at large for no other reason than because Masonic sheriffs would not arrest and Masonic juries would not convict. Wasn't I in the war, from the time the first gun was fired till Lee's surrender? and don't I know a thing or two you young civilians who never smelled powder no more dream of than the babe unborn? I could tell some queer stories if I set out to. As for your Good Templars and Grand Army posts and farmers' granges and Knights of Labor, they are just so many wires to be pulled by Masonic politicians that want office, and Masonic sharpers that want to line their own pockets with the earnings of honest farmers and laborers. And if a Masonic murderer, or thief, or saloon-keeper wants to go clear of punishment, hasn't he got just as much right to pull 'em as the politicians? Then some innocent man has to bear the blame, for, as a general thing, if the law can't get hold of the right one it must have a scapegoat. These secret lodges, if they are let alone, will bring the country into such a pass as the prophet Joel tells of—we're dreadful nigh it now—'That which the palmer-worm hath left hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left hath the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten.' That's my mind."

Now, Martin Treworthy was a man who did his own thinking. He did not even, as is the case with the average American citizen, let the newspapers do it for him. Thus it followed that to be favored with "a piece of his mind" after it was once made up was a rather formidable thing, there being none of that malleable quality about it characteristic of minds that are formed of the odds and ends of what other people think and say, and then duly pressed and stamped into shape by that roller which we call "public opinion." So it was no wonder that Nelson Newhall winced under this speech, for he was really as honest in his way as Martin Treworthy, and had only joined a secret labor union for the same good and substantial reason that makes one sheep follow another down a precipice.

So he sat for a moment in uneasy silence, and wondered—for he was a simple, honest fellow, with large capacities for righteous wrath, but without a particle of guile or duplicity—how so many ministers and good men could uphold the system if it was really anything so very bad. For the large majority of mankind who are neither seers nor philosophers are apt to assume the existence of any popular evil as the ground of its right to exist. Nelson Newhall was only like thousands of others. He saw the lodge in power. It was no abstraction, but a tangible, unquestionable, undeniable fact. It was palpable and material as the Scarlet Woman seated on her seven-headed beast. How came it there? popular, powerful—entrenched behind such a bulwark of custom, prejudice and fear. Had not wise men, good men, and great men, lent it their silent influence, bowed before it in slavish homage, seen no evil in it, and furthermore, refused to see any? And could such men be wrong, and a handful of fanatics like Martin Treworthy right? This is a style of reasoning which may not be strictly logical, but all reformers from Paul to Luther, and from Luther to Garrison, will testify that it is very common.

Martin Treworthy, having had his say, was content to let the subject pass, and return to the immediate theme in hand. So he remarked after a moment's silence,—

"Why not try this young Howland? You've got a good case, as plain and straight ahead as the Ten Commandments, and I wouldn't be afraid to trust him with it. Melroy, you know Moses Melroy that lives over in Fairfield, used to be aquainted with the Howlands before he came away from New Hampshire. Real nice folks, he says they were—folks that wouldn't lie nor cheat for their right hand. Such families will throw out crooked shoots sometimes just as a tree will, but it ain't the rule for 'em to as long as the main stock holds good."

Nelson Newhall fingered his hat for a moment with his eye on the modest sign, "S. Howland," just visible down the street. "I'll try him," he said decidedly, and took his departure. But like many of our human decisions, the factor which really determined him was one of which he was himself hardly conscious. The fact was he was born in the old Granite State within sight of those snow-capped hills which he remembered dimly as in a dream of some former life, and the flat, rolling Western prairies, with all their material abundance, had never been able to blot out the vision, or make him forget his early home with its stern, rocky soil, its piney odors borne on every passing wind, its streams of crystal clearness fit to be a type of the river of the waters of life.

American Politics.

Election Notes.—St. John's total vote is believed to be about 200,000. In New York it was over 17,000; in Massachusetts 10,000 to 600 four years ago; in Connecticut 2,256 to nothing four years ago. In 1876 the prohition vote was 9,757; in 1880, 10,305. The American vote both these years was from 2,000 to 3,000. Their union seems to have been a kind of chemical combination which has multiplied by twenty the size and influence of the former vote.

HOW TO HARMONIZE THEM.

Bro. Springstein says he cannot harmonize those Scriptures that declare the headship of the man over the woman, and the enjoined silence and subjection of the woman with the equality of woman in government, as set forth by the advocates of female suffrage. It may be I shall not be able to do it to his satisfaction, but as he desires me to do it, I will try, with your permission, to do it through your columns, that others may have the benefit of the explanation.

As to Gen. 3: 16, Dr. Conant, in a foot-note of his translation, says:

"Unto thy husband shall be thy desire; an expression of subordination and dependence. He shall rule over thee expresses, not indeed what should be, but what would be so generally the effect of the apostacy on woman's relation in the married state. The stronger party in this relation, instead of being the natural guardian and protector of the weaker, would use his superior power to oppress and debase her. Such has always been the case, except so far as the influence of revelation has counteracted the evils of the fall."

Says the old Comprehensive Commentary:

"The woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not out of his head to top him, not out of his feet to be trampled on by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved."

Paul says 1 Cor. 11: 3: "The head of the woman is the man." Now if we compare this with Eph. 5: 22, we see that the head of the wife is the husband—her husband, and not some other woman's husband;—that the husband is the head of the wife—his wife, and not some other man's wife. So the husband is to love his own wife as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it. There is always trouble when a man, married or otherwise, falls in love with another man's wife, for it is a violation of the express command of God. Ex. 5: 21. Paul not only enjoins submission of the wife to the husband, but sets over against it the requirement of such ove and gentleness towards the wife as utterly forbids the exercise of tyranny and oppression, and constitutes the model husband and wife a "mutual admiration society"—and co operative aid and mutual relief association.

But I presume that Bro. S. would cheerfully admit that while a woman is required to be in subjection to her husband in the sense of this Scripture, it is her right, beyond all question, to choose for herself the man she will accept as her "liege lord." It would be set down as insufferable tyranny for a man to compel a woman to marry him simply because he wanted her, or because her father or his mother, or both, wanted her to have him. If marriages are made in heaven, they are surely not in violation of the free will of the parties, and the man must have the consent of the woman before he can assume the place and the authority of a husband, whatever that authority may be.

But to whom shall the hundreds of thousands of intelligent unmarried women and widows, freeholders and taxpayers too, many of them, be subject? Some one will say, "To the powers that be, which are ordained of God." The founders of our Republic declared that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." Are not the women of the land among the governed? Why do they pay taxes? and why are they punished if convicted of crime? What constitutes inconsistency? Surely, to profess one thing and to practice another and directly opposite thing. The women of the land, with few exceptions, have never been asked nor permitted to vote for the rulers under whose sway they wished or were willing to live? Now if a man cannot rule over one woman, even with tenderest affection, without first obtaining her consent, and that publicly avowed, what right have we to ask, or even to allow, if it were possible to prevent, any man or men to be set up to make laws for the government of thousands of women without their consent, and against their most earnest protestations? The golden rule itself would answer, None!

But some one will say that if the ballot were given to the women, many of them would be sure to vote in opposition to the wishes and votes of their husbands. But what right would a husband have to tyrannize over his wife in this matter any more than he has to oppose her entertaining any particular religious belief, or uniting with the church of her choice? Would not his refusal to allow her full religious liberty be a tyranny that ought to be "punished by the judges," and in utter violation of the golden rule? First give her the right to vote with her husband if she choose, and then say if she shall have no right to vote for good men and just laws, simply because she is the wife of a drunkard or saloon-keeper, who votes for free rum and wants no penal enactments against crime. And surely no one could justly complain if the unmarried and widows should vote for the magistrate they desire, or against those they do not approve.

The rule of men over the women has been exercised so long, and generally so poorly understood, that many good and conscientious men are afraid God will be displeased if women shall be allowed to vote. Otherwise they would be so glad to have their aid in accomplishing great and needed reforms. Let such remember that God has founded three institutions on earth to which men and women may properly belong: the family, the church, and the state. The man is the head of the family—his own and not another man's family—and over his own he must not tyrannize. And if he would like to vote, he should be willing that his wife should vote, for to vote is a privilege belonging to membership in the state for the general weal, and not to membership in the family as such. In the family, a man should be satisfied with the kind and degree of authority God has given him there, and not make it an excuse to deprive the purest and best half of our citizens of the privilege of the franchise in the state, which the Bible nowhere denies, but plainly, by the golden rule, enjoins and approves. With reference to the injunction of silence upon women in the churches, I will, with your permission, speak at another time. W. W. Ames.

HOW FINCH TAKES CARE OF IOWA.

West Branch, Iowa, 11-4-'84.

Dear Cynosure :—Last evening, less then twenty-four hours before the polls were opened, our village was flooded with numerous sheets, purporting to be North-Western News supplements. The last page contained a dozen or so of ballots headed St. John and Daniel, and a request that every one receiving said ballot should take them to the polls and see that they are all voted. The mysterious part of it was that no one seemed to know just where they came from, and the Electors and State officers were changed throughout from those nominated at the conventions held at Washington and Marshalltown.

This morning the mystery was partially solved by a gentleman who had just returned from the lecture field in Indiana, who said that the names were furnished the editor of the North-Western News of Davenport, Iowa, by the chairman of the National Prohibition Committee. It can readily be imagined what confusion would result from two Prohibition tickets being in the field, having different Electors.

Can it be that John B. Finch was ignorant of the Marshalltown proceedings, or was it an attempt to ignore the American element in the Iowa Prohibition ranks? If upon investagation it be found that such is the case, the National Prohibition party should select men that will not jeopardize the influence of a State ballot, for the sake of ignoring our party's vote upon prohibition, or we should keep clear of any alliance with it in the future.

Yours for the right,

A. C. Staples.

PRAY FOR RULERS.

A secretary of a department at Washington once said to us, "Good men ought to come here and talk to us. Their presence is needed. The devil is here all the time." Every man intimate with public life at Washington knows that corruption and robbery, selfishness and malice have their representatives at the capital constantly, watching for and diligently and with consummate skill improving their opportunities. The President is in need of our prayers, ought to have them, and will have them whether he be a Democrat or a Republican.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE CAMPAIGN OVER.

The late quadrennial dispensation of noise, show, splutter, and mountebankism, that usually attends a Presidential campaign, has passed away and has left its impress behind it. Show and sham, pretense and policy, are a little deeper impressed upon the mind of the average citizen as the desirable weapons of political warfare; and the burning disgrace of America, that money and influence are allowed to override everything else, is more firmly fixed upon us.

The thousands of dollars that have been spent in torches, and dresses that make the wearers look like clowns or harlequins, might have been better appropriated, and the necessities of our fellow beings might have been supplied therewith, while the gross appeals to sense rather than reason, to excitement rather than principle, could well have been spared.

We, as a people, are shammy and showy enough; we are sufficiently superficial and shallow; we are pretentious enough, and ready enough to substitute sight and sound for truth and principle, without making each Presidential campaign a special occasion for instruction in these things. We may have some confidence in the propositions of reform that interspace these elections, when the elections themselves are conducted upon better principles.

We would heartily recommend to our mouthy reformers whose schemes of revenue and education are of pretentious import and proportions, that charity begins at home, and that before they undertake to regulate the entire continent they institute a commission to ascertain campaign expenses, and make enactments that shall direct these monies to sensible and worthy purposes. Further, it would do some preachers good, and they might do their people good, by preaching against this abuse of manhood, occasion and money, instead of lending their hands to assist in these ill-fitting absurdities.—Free Methodist.

TOO MUCH OF IT.

Everybody must have been convinced long before this that the Presidential campaigns in this country are unnecessarily long. The disturbance has now been in progress, taking in the election of delegates to the national conventions, about six months, and election day is yet ten days distant. So far as the average voter is concerned the polls might have closed two months ago, without inconvenience to him.

The idea of extending a Presidential canvass over a greater part of a year evidently originated in the days when there were no railroads and telegraphs, and when it took several weeks to convey an item of news from one State to another. In these days a nomination and an election might easily be had in a month. Two months, at the outside, are all that anybody need ask. After the national conventions are held the telegraph and the railroad convey information to all parts of the country with such rapidity that if it was desired a vote might be taken a week later with a moral certainty that everybody entitled to a vote would be prepared to exercise the right of suffrage intelligently. As it is we put a premium upon all manner of tricks, slander, bribery and bargaining by giving the active workers an abundance of time to cook up their schemes.

The doing away with preliminary elections would exert a great influence in favor of the purification of elections, but the shortening of the campaigns would be better still. The time would be too short to admit of much dirty work. The people would vote as they pleased. The barbaric splendors of the marching clubs would disappear. Business would have a chance. Everybody would be better off. Nominations made in September would be plenty early enough. With these oft-recurring elections made less dreadful in this respect they would be shorn of half their terrors.—Daily Herald.

BIBLE LESSONS.

VIII.—Nov. 23, 1884.—Proverbs of Solomon. Prov. 1.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Prov. 1:7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The true end of knowledge. Vs. 1–9. The first six verses are a preface unfolding the general design of the book of Proverbs. One of its important uses is "to give subtlety to the simple." We are commanded to be "wise as serpents," in order that we may successfully combat the wiles of the great serpent, yet a large class of mankind are as simple as the foolish fly caught in the web of the cunning spider. It is in the simplicity, or, in common language, the greenness of their victims, that the saloon-keeper and the gambler rely; and while many unprincipled men enter the lodge because of the shelter it affords to crime, the great majority of Masons, Odd-fellows and other secret society men are "simple ones"—so very simple that they are willing to degrade their manhood by being led blindfold through the puerile catechising and silly ceremonies of a secret lodge; and then to insult their Maker by taking solemn oaths, of whose nature they are not allowed to know anything beforehand. "To the young man, knowledge and discretion," is another very important use of Solomon's proverbs. God's Word never palliates or excuses sin in young or old, but it tells us expressly that what a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Though the young cannot have the ripe experience of the aged, God's divine gift of wisdom is for all who seek it without respect of persons, as illustrated in the case of Solomon himself, who was but a youth when he made his famous choice. "A wise man will hear and will increase learning" This is in accordance with our Saviour's words, "To him that hath shall be given." Our Golden Text teaches us that many who lay claims to great wisdom are ignorant of even its beginning. The fear of the Lord is to be taught by family instruction. Sunday-schools are but the supplement. Nor can one parent leave the responsibility to the other. Verse 8 teaches the equality of woman with man as queen of the home to guide, rule and protect against the liquor traffic, and every other enemy that threatens its purity and peace.

2. Warning against the enticements of evil men. Vs. 10–16. The desire to make unrighteous gain at the expense of others is the root of the trade in strong drink. The rumseller swallows his victims "alive as the grave," and "fills his house with spoil" taken from their starving wives and children. "Come with us," he says to the young, the inexperienced, the unwary. Perhaps he baits his trap with a so-called "temperance drink," and step by step the fair-haired youth, some mother's darling, is decoyed into the great army of drunkards. To-day the liquor power has the audacity to say to American voters: "Cast in thy lot among us." And every man who does not vote directly against the saloon, virtually does this. The Masonic lodge is the chief patron and friend of the dram-shop, and its arguments are quite similar. "Let us all have one purse," it says to its dupes; but it is a purse made up of stolen gains—stolen from its own members. "Walk not thou in the way with them." Their murderous oaths, kept so well in the case of Morgan and others, their close affinity to the Ku Klux, the Invincibles, and similar orders, prove that "their feet run to evil and make haste to shed blood."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

State some instances of wisdom in the young? 1 Sam. 3; Ps. 71: 5, 17; Luke 2: 52. What was the law of family instruction among the Jews? Deut. 6: 7; 11: 19.

"The Proverbs of Solomon." A proverb is a pithy sentence, concisely expressing some well-established truth susceptible of various illustrations and applications. The word is applied, as in the present case, to sententious sayings or pointed apothegms where these, as usual, are composed in parallelisms or couplets.—Stuart.

"Wisdom." Wisdom usually means here not mere sagacity, but a considerate and discriminating state of mind in regard to the whole circle of duty—moral, religious and prudential.—Stuart. "The best use of the best means for the best ends." Hence, "true piety," in which sense the word is usually employed in this book.—Peloubet.

"Shall attain unto wise counsels." Literally, the power to steer his course rightly on the dangerous seas of life. This "steersmanship," it may be noted, is a word almost peculiar to Proverbs (11: 14; 12: 5; 24: 6). In Job 37: 12 it is applied to the guidance, the steering, with which God directs the movement of the clouds of heaven.—Cook.

"Dark sayings." Enigmas. Sayings hard to understand, but mines of gold when we once understand them. "That man is always happy who is in the presence of something he cannot know to the full, which he is always going on to know. This is the necessary condition of a finite creature with divinely rooted and divinely directed intelligence; this, therefore, its happy state; but observe a state not of triumph or joy in what it knows, but of joy rather in the continual discovery of new ignorance, continual self-abasement, continual astonishment."—Ruskin.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." The fear of the Lord is that reverence of Jehovah as God which leads us to worship and obey him. The beginning of wisdom is not found in keen insight, nor wide experience, nor the learning of the schools, but in the temper of reverence and awe. The fear of the finite in the presence of the Infinite, of the sinful in the presence of the Holy, self-abhorring, adoring, as in Job's confession (42: 5, 6), this for the Israelite was the starting-point of all true wisdom. What the precept "Know thyself" was to the sage of Greece, that this law was for him. This fear is not the slave's dread of punishment. It has no "torment," and is compatible with childlike love. But this and not love is the "beginning of wisdom." Through successive stages and by the discipline of life, love blends with it and makes it perfect.—Cook. The fear of the Lord is further characterized in Ps. 19: 9; Prov. 8: 13; 10: 27; 14: 26, 27; 19: 23; 22: 4; Isa. 11: 3; 33: 6; Acts 9: 31.—Peloubet.

"But fools." The stupid and indifferent to God's character and government, hence, the wicked.—Pocket Com. From Jer. 5: 21; Ps. 14: 1; 92: 6; Prov. 10: 21; 12: 15; 14: 9; 16: 22; 18: 2; 24: 7, collect materials for the fool's portrait gallery. (1) They have eyes and see not; (2) they are atheistic; (3) brutish; (4) conceited; (5) disobedient to parents; (6) persistent in folly; (7) hating wisdom; (8) losing influence.—Briggs.

"My son." The relation of the teacher to the taught is essentially fatherly.—Cook. This is the natural address of a teacher to a learner, and is common throughout the East. The term "son" is merely indicative of affection, not of descent.—Stuart.

"Chains about thy neck." To the Israelite's mind no signs or badges of joy or glory were higher in worth than the garland round the head, the gold chain round the neck, worn by kings and the favorites of kings (Gen. 41: 12; Dan. 5: 29). The meaning of the whole is plain. "Obedience to paternal precepts will be to thy character and reputation what diadems and necklaces of honor are to the person." In other words, it will render thee conspicuous and admired for thy virtues.—Stuart.

"My son, if sinners entice thee." The first great danger which besets the simple and the young is that of evil companionship. The only safety is to be found in the power of saying "No" to all such invitations, however enticing they may be.—Cook. The defense prescribed is, "Consent thou not." It is a blunt, peremptory command. Your method of defense must be different from the adversary's mode of attack. His strength lies in making gradual approaches; yours in a resistance, sudden, resolute, total.—Arnot.

"For the innocent without cause." Now, though Solomon specifies only the temptation to rob on the highway . . . . he intends hereby to warn us against all other evils sinners entice men to. Such are the ways of the drunkard and unclean. They are indulging themselves in those pleasures which tend to their ruin, both here and forever; therefore consent not to them.—Comprehensive Com.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

An unique case was tried to-day before Mr. Justice Galt at Whitby, a small village twenty miles east of this city. Richard Kinver, a chairmaker, brought suit against the Phœnix Lodge of Odd-fellows, of Whitby, for injuries received at the hands of the members of the lodge while he was being initiated into the mysteries of the order. The case is the first of the kind ever brought before a court of justice in this country, and has excited a great deal of interest. The court-room to-day was crowded with members of the Phœnix Lodge and curious outsiders, anxious to learn something of the secrets of the brotherhood. The plaintiff appeared in court leaning on crutches. He was badly bruised about the face and body, and appeared to be suffering severe pain. On the witness stand he told the story of events on the night of his initiation. He was met, he said, by a committee of the Odd-fellows' lodge, who first blindfolded him by drawing a black cap down over his face, so that he could not see the slightest thing, and then led him into the lodge-room. His entry was the signal for shouts of derision from the members present. He had hardly got inside the room when he was forcibly seized from either side and whirled around till he had become so dizzy that he had lost all idea of his surroundings. Then a chain was fastened about his body and he was dragged roughly about the room, the cap being still down over his head. When the brethren had tired of yanking him about at the end of the chain he was brought up standing, while a mysterious jargon was gone through with. Suddenly the candidate received a rough push from some one behind, which threw him over something, and he fell headlong on the floor, striking in falling upon a stool, which cut a deep gash in his head. He was partly stunned by the fall. He was just conscious enough to hear some one ask in a deep voice, "Brethren, shall we have mercy?" and some one else replied, "Have mercy." Then he was lifted up off the floor by the chain, and was led about the room for awhile, with the cap still on, until he had somewhat recovered from the effects of the fall. His initiation was not concluded, owing to his inability to endure more. Since then the witness testified that he had been sick, so that he had been unable to support his family by working at his trade. Physicians whom he had consulted said that his injuries would trouble him for several years, and that he might never get over them. The defendant Odd-fellows admit the truth of Kinver's testimony regarding his experience of the lodge-room. They said it was the custom of the lodge to lead candidates for initiation around with a view of bewildering or befogging them, so that when the cap is removed, they cannot find the door by which they entered the room. There is no intention of harming the candidate, and the initiation is not rougher than a healthy man could stand. The constitution of the order requires that candidates shall be of sound health. Plaintiff knew this, and procured his initiation by fraudulent representations and concealments regarding his health. Medical men testified that Kinver had received internal injuries from which he might die. The case was adjourned to a high court at Toronto.

—The Grand Lodge fight over Masonic spoils in the Canadian province of Quebec is developing all the beautifully benevolent spirit of Masonry. The action of the Grand Lodge of England in invading the territory of Quebec and attempting to grant charters and maintain lodges in the district controlled by the Grand Lodge of Quebec is likely to lead to a severance of affiliation between the two bodies. The Grand Lodge of Quebec will forbid all Masons under their jurisdiction from communicating with or recognizing the members of the English lodges. It is stated that lodges have been organized in the territory of Quebec, by authority of the Grand Lodge of England, and without a charter from the Quebec authorities. The Grand Lodge of Quebec has determined to rebuke this infringement upon their rights and privileges. In 1874 the Grand Lodge of Canada undertook to grant charters and establish lodges within the then recognized jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, and in consequence of this the Grand Lodge of Illinois, and all other grand lodges in the United States, severed all Masonic communication with the Grand Lodge of Canada. The Grand Lodge of Scotland also attempted at one time to invade the territory of Quebec. There seems to be no doubt that the Grand Lodge of Quebec will be strongly sustained by the United States bodies.

—The Odd-fellows of the State of Iowa have just had one of their big spreads. The so-called grand lodge of the State has been in convocation, and the newspapers in sympathy have given space ad nauseam to the silly tittle-tattle and trite platitudes that necessarily constitute the substance of a report of their proceedings. With the cunning characteristic of the secret orders generally, they spread forth in their report the wealth of the order; in real estate, some $409,695.48, with receipts for the year, $120,671.71; but cunningly hide the year's disbursements in relief; by aggregating the amounts paid in reliefs since the introduction of the order into the State they present this grand total. This, of course, looks a big thing—$409,695.48; but the year's relief account compared with the receipts would look very meagre; hence the ruse resorted to. If men want life and health insurance why don't they procure it of respectable insurance companies, and not spend so large a percentage upon false-faces, sashes, collars, etc., etc.? Barnum had it about right when he said, "The American people love to be humbugged."—Free Methodist.

—The quarrel between the two Supreme Councils of 33 degree Masons is raging in California. Dr. C. E. Pinknam, who has been attacking the Southern Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, addresses a letter to the San Francisco Chronicle, the pith of it being as follows: "The Supreme Council for the United States of America is a legitimate body. It was regularly organized, performed legitimate work and established subordinate bodies. It was the first to be recognized in this and foreign countries, and presents an unbroken record of descent from 1807 to 1866. Its commanders were: Joseph Cerneau, 1807–21; John W. Mulligan, 1822–23; DeWitt Clinton, 1823–28; Elias Hicks, 1828–46; H. C. Atwood, 1846–51; Jeremy S. Cross, 1851–52; H. C. Atwood, 1852–59; Edmund B. Hayes, 1859–65; S. W. Robinson, 1865–66."

—The National convention of Good Samaritans closed at Pittsburgh, Pa., lately. The final session was taken up with a discussion on the union of lodges. Heretofore the sexes have had lodges of their own, entirely separate and distinct, although the male and female lodges visited each other. For a long time the spirits in the order thought that a union of the two would be better for all, and the work of governing would be less complicated. The project has been talked of but full discussion of it has not been had until now. After three hours' discussion it was resolved to have a union of lodges, male and female, hereafter to work.

—Last Spring the higher degrees of Masonry were planted in Dakota by a General John B. Dennis, representing the Supreme Grand Council of the A. and A. Scottish rite of the thirty-third degree of Masons, who seems to have gone to Sioux Falls as a lodge missionary. He conferred the orders of the thirty-second degree upon twenty-one Masons, and steps were taken for organizing the following bodies: Khuran Lodge of Perfection, Albert Pike Chapter of Rose Croix, and Cœur de Lion Council of Kadosh.

—Past Grand Bourlet gives the total revenues of Odd fellowship for the past half century as $92,000,000; total relief, $34,000,000. Thus it costs an Odd-fellow $9.20 to carry $3.40 to a distressed brother—in his immediate neighborhood. The American Board expends a dollar to relieve distress in the remotest parts of the earth for about one dollar and six cents.

THE SENSE OF SMELL.—"Been to a political meeting, eh? Did it meet in your lodge-room?" indignantly asked a waiting wife at 2 A. M.

"Lodge-room! No; what in the old Harry put that in your head?" growled the late-comer.

"Oh! I noticed your breath smelled the same as when you go to your lodge."—Brooklyn Times.

—The annual session of the Illinois Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance was held lately in the Temperance Hall at Englewood. Eighty delegates, representing thirty-six divisions in the State, were present.

—Total revenue of the Odd-fellows of America for 1883 was $5,330,041.47; total relief, $2,015,832.32. Thus it costs an Odd-fellow $5.33 to give for charity $2.01½.

—Governor Frederick Robie, of Maine, is Master of the Grange of that State, which has kept up an existence evidently upon political favors.

—Last spring the following notice was sent to Freemasons in Minneapolis from St. Vincent de Paul chapter of Rose Croix:

"Maunday-Thursday, 10th April, 1884, V. E., in accordance with ancient custom, 'the lights will be put out,' and there will be darkness from the ninth hour in St. Vincent de Paul Chapter Rose Croix, No. 2.

"You are invited to be present at the Mystic Banquet.

"The Knights will assemble at the chapter-room at 2 P. M., and at 3 proceed to the Nicollet House.

"Inform the Venerable Secretary by inclosed postal if you will partake of the Lamb with us, that proper provision be made for the festival."

With such blasphemous ceremonies do the Scotch rite Masons mock at Christianity!

—In his address at the laying of the corner-stone of the court-house at Kalamazoo, Mich., last July 4th, Grand Master of Masons Clark said that Sir Christopher Wren, the architect of St. Paul's, London, was the most distinguished workman since Hiram, king of Tyre! Will this learned and intelligent Grand Master please tell us what structures were planned or erected by the king of Tyre? According to Rob. Morris, even the tomb of Hiram is only huge stones rudely set up, which the veracious Rob. had to supply with Masonic marks cut into the stones—a mark of honor (!) which was forgotten three thousand years ago.

—"O thou infinite and eternal God whom men call by many names. . . . O! thou only Creative Cause of All, Great Architect of the Universe! . . . Regard the whole world, unite all men by the subtle, sublime and unbreakable fellowship of Masonic love, and may we, when all earthly separations are closed forever, meet in the eternal brotherhood of the Celestial Lodge above."—From the prayer of Rev. W. W. Brewer at Masonic Centennial at St. John's, New Brunswick.

—The United Order of the Golden Cross was founded in Tennessee at Knoxville, by Dr. Morgan, May 9th, 1876. It has various lodges in Massachusetts, Tennessee, New Hampshire, Indiana, District of Columbia, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Maine, Kentucky, Texas, South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi. The Golden Cross is a beneficiary order, to furnish an insurance fund; also a fund for relief.

—The Grand Lodge of Illinois, Knights and Ladies of Honor met in biennial session at Litchfield, Ill., Oct. 21st. The Grand Chaplain is a Mrs. C. J. Davis, of Chicago. The Grand Lodge was organized in Chicago, Aug 10, 1881. At that time there were thirty lodges, with an aggregate membership of 900. The order now has 120 lodges, and nearly 6,000 members.

—The National Union order has been introduced into Michigan, at Detroit, where the first lodge or "council" was formed from the clerks in the Michigan Central railroad offices. Each council is formed from a single line of business, trade or profession.

—The Illinois Masonic Grand Lodge which met this year in Farwell Hall, elected John R. Thomas, of Metropolis, Grand Master. The Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor, John C. Smith, was elected Senior Grand Warden, and Rev. George Scowthon, Murphysboro, Grand Chaplain.

—The twenty-ninth semi-annual session of Van Rensellaer Grand Lodge of Perfection (Masonic) was held in Chicago, last month, and forty-eight candidates were put through to the thirty-second degree. There were about four hundred in attendance upon the last day's exercises. Much remark is made respecting the social features of this lodge work. What social features are there away from the bar?

—The St. Bernard Knight Templar Masons of Chicago have a charter from the State for their drill corps. It began two years ago with thirty-seven members and has now sixty-seven. It drills four nights in a month; in a time of peace preparing for—what?

—A daily paper announces on Saturday: "The members of Everts Commandery, No. 28, Rock Island, will hold religious services in Masonic Temple to-morrow afternoon." And yet Masonry is not a religious society!

—The Ancient Order of United Workmen claims 14,569 members in Illinois. Oct. 28th the Grand Legion of Select Knights of this order met at Peoria, and indulged in street parade and prize drill.

—It is said that nearly all the members of the National Union lodges are also members of the Royal Arcanum; no rivalry existing between the two, but one supplementing and aiding the other instead.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar.

A Wonderful Woman,

A Wonderful Life,

AND

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

Her book is neither fiction nor founded on fiction, but is an interesting narration of facts of a most thrilling character, as every one will find and testify who will get and read her book, now on sale at the Cynosure office, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. Price, cloth, $1,75; half Russia, $2.25.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1884.

ELECTION TEACHINGS.

Before the official count, the Albany Argus and the Inter Ocean, the one Democrat and the other Republican were screwing their parties up to fighting mood, if either party should attampt to seize the Presidency by fraud, and thousands of bullies were ready to respond to their call to wipe out rascality by blood. Thus "the wars of the Roses" drenched England in fraternal blood, and thus the old republics, and modern French and Spanish republics perished. False lodge-legends and religious inventions filling the popular minds and crowding out truth, and oaths without authority or sanctity, carried far enough will so heathenize any people, that society will crumble and break down with its own weight. No government but that of absolute force can survive universal distrust and loss of confidence among a people. When the people of Rome came to despise their puerile religions, so that one augur or priest could not look another in the face without laughing at the cheat, then "Jupiter forsook the skies, and virtue left the Roman Senate and people."

St. John has been burnt in effigy in several places in Kansas and Iowa, beginning at Topeka, where Jan. 9th, last year, every organized county, and some unorganized, sent representations to endorse his administration, then closed, and to do him honor. The great Opera House was crowded, galleries and all. "Hozannah" and "Crucify" with scarce a night between! But in this case, not by the same crowd. Churches and Sabbath schools sent delegates to the convention: blacklegs and ex-saloonists to the burnings. Hon. Thaddeus Stevens was burnt in effigy by the same sort. But each of those "Auto de fes" will yield him ten thousand votes in 1888, if he keeps his integrity and lives to see that year.

THEOLOGICAL BONFIRE.

"Fire! Fire! Fire!" The Interior and the Advance are kindling a theological bonfire and the crowd begin to gather around it, and throw on sticks, barrel-staves and shavings. Satan has more to fear from these two papers, and the minds that guide them and read them, than from any other two denominational papers in the country. In 1831 the great synod of Cincinnati appointed a fast against slavery, and the country was awakening to that evil. Dr. George Junkin started a theological fire, "the Albert Barnes case;" formed two parties, "Old School" and "New;" kept each bidding for the few slave-holders votes, and spiked the mighty Presbyterian press. Other denominations followed suit in its silence; and slavery fell by a war which sunk public morals half a century.

Are we to have this thing repeated? God is calling and the heavens and earth show signs of a reform and discussion to avert God's wrath from this nation for its false worships; and two men, W. C. Gray, and Robert West are kindling another theological bonfire. They are both good men of great abilities. Let us cry "Fire;" and get out the engines.

God willing, the Cynosure will explain this fire to its readers next week. But God only can quench it.

BLAINE BEATEN BY THE LODGE.

As predicted in these columns last week an official count will be needed to determine who is to be our next President, and even then the decision may go into the courts. The confidence of party managers the morning after election is a proverbial deception. Last Wednesday the claim that Illinois was Democratic by 10,000 votes and New York 60,000 gave a momentary joy to the Cleveland faction, but Illinois is Republican as usual; and, the whole Southern vote having gone Democratic with Connecticut, New Jersey and Indiana, Cleveland has thus 183 votes in the Electoral College. Blaine has the vote of all the other Northern States but New York, a total of 172 electors. But New York with her thirty-six votes decides the contest, and for the whole week the public expectation has been harrowed up with disappointing driblets of news, the telegraph playing with the trembling hopes of parties as magnetism with needle of a compass. The Associated press report conceded the State to Cleveland on Saturday by some 1,400 votes; but, among the million votes and more in New York, already errors are being discovered that give the Republicans hope that a few hundred will be left over for them at last. Both parties engaged or sent out lawyers all over the State to be present at the official count Tuesday and a prolonged contest in the courts is highly probable.

But generally accepting the verdict as against them the Republican party are showing very much of the old Southern mob spirit in their treatment of those who voted for St. John. In Kansas especially it seems to be understood that St. John had no right to run for the Presidency, as had Blaine or Cleveland; and the tone of the press and the threats of the mob are a disgrace to the party and the State.

But these gentlemen forget that the lodge is responsible for Blaine's defeat. Early in the campaign the Cynosure called attention to the demand of the printer's lodges in New York that the Tribune of that city be put under their control. They even went so far in their insolence as to send a committee to Blaine threatening that unless they were accommodated they would vote against him. Mr. Blaine indeed mentioned the matter to Whitelaw Reid, but the lodge was barred out of the Tribune office. Three thousand printers, therefore, bound by their lodge oath changed their vote from Blaine to Cleveland and that vote broke up the twenty-four years of Republican rule and put the Democratic party into power.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE.

Stars are God's emblems from the beginning of the Bible to the end. Those seen in the dream of the young Joseph, and in their visions by prophets, and those which beam and darken, blaze and go out, in the Apocalypse, all mean God's mirrors reflecting light on men.

SALMON PORTLAND CHASE was a star of the first magnitude in the constellation which God brought into conjunction in our zenith during our great national agony. Lincoln, Chase, Seward, Stevens, Stanton, Sumner and Adams, with a host of others shining in the American horizon, were all believers in the true God and haters of the demon-worships of the lodge. Not an infidel or a Mason, known as such, appears above the horizon from the beginning of the war to its close. Lincoln asked his neighbors to pray for him, wished the nation to "be on the Lord's side," and called it to fasting and prayer. Seward was a diligent church-member and worshiper of God. Chase complained, in his diary, of "coldness in prayer," and once, at least, refrained from communion, from a sense of unworthiness. Stevens wrote, "Probably we are all of us somewhat deficient in our relations to our Creator, I know I am deplorably so;" and his groans and agonies in his private chamber, were like those of Cromwell's when calling upon God. Of Stanton, Sumner and Adams, in their private lives, the writer knows less. But they all loathed the lodge-worships of Satan. These stars led the nation to its Bethlehem.

Mr. Chase was a New Hampshire boy, a student dependent on friends, a graduate of Dartmouth, a law student of William Wirt and citizen of Washington, D. C., a lawyer in Cincinnati, Governor of Ohio, U. S. Senator, member of Lincoln's Cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury, and Chief Justice of the United States.

The Chicago Inter Ocean (Nov. 6, 1884) utters the verdict of the entire nation in the words: "Salmon P. Chase was one of the greatest men that America has produced. The old weather-beaten sign of Chase and Ball, Attorneys at Law, has hung before the eyes of old residents of Cincinnati for upwards of forty-eight years. It is a relic which should sacredly be preserved."

The young readers of the Cynosure are interested to know the secret of this man's greatness. He had neither the grasp and might of Webster, or the brilliant oratory of Clay, yet his achievements eclipse them both. Wherein lay the hiding of his power? This brief sketch hopes to show.

It has been said, "It is the cause which makes the hero." And surely Mr. Chase did not want for a resplendent cause.

In 1826 Salmon Chase was only 18 years of age. The popular storm which arose in that year, when the secret lodge revealed itself as the daring foe of popular government, and of all government and religion but its own, was quelled in 1832 by the rise of the stormier slave-question. Chase wished Wirt elected, but took little interest in the Anti-masonic tempest. His father had been a Mason, and he was an Episcopalian and vestryman for a time. He was younger than Seward, Granger, Fillmore, Stevens, Gov. Ritner, and others whom that popular movement brought before the nation. But he shunned and resisted every temptation to join the lodge. Nor did he join the Know-Nothings, though that ephemeral lodge-spawn sent him to the Senate years after.

His love and admiration for Wirt, but more still, his inherent, life-long integrity and open frankness, would doubtless have made him an Anti-mason if he had been ready to take part in politics. But he was a young lawyer. His first client gave him half a dollar for drawing a deed. His second got his services, borrowed half a dollar of him, and never returned it. Mr. Chase was 23 years old when these entries are made of his legal practice; Wirt was nominated that same year. Here is another entry in his diary at this time:

"I made this resolution to-day: I will try to excel in all things; yet, if I am excelled without fault of mine, I will not be mortified. I will not withhold from any one the praise which I think his due, nor will I allow myself to envy another's praise, or to feel jealousy when I hear him praised. May God help me to keep it."

His biographer says: "It appears to me that prayer was answered." This, at least, is one explanation of his greatness. But he studied incessantly. He wrote an essay for the North American Review on the "Effects of Machinery;" and four or five years later, when the writer of this sketch first made his acquaintance, Mr. Chase had edited, written, and published several large volumes on the laws of Ohio and the North-west Territory, which, with success at the bar, gave him the reputation of the first jurist west of the Allegany mountains.

It is a remark of Hon. B. C. Cook, now Solicitor General of the C. & N. W. railroad: "Men do not govern this world." The fall of the Northern lodges in the free States was followed by revivals of religion such as the world had seldom seen since Pentecost. These stupendous conversions to God of whole towns and cities was inaugurated in New York, where the lodge first fell before popular indignation, and under the evangelist Finney, who seceded from the lodge. The Spirit of God entered and saved those minds which had been filled and enslaved by the legends and falsehoods of Masonry. Scarcely a lawyer or public man in the city of Rochester was left unconverted.

The lodge became a Southern institution and organized the rebellion in its secret halls; and the stupendous attempt was made to wipe out free government, free labor, and free mind from the earth. Mexico was despoiled of her provinces to multiply slave pens, plantations and cotton, and fix forever a slave majority in Congress. Thus Satan sought to avenge the fall of the lodge, and re-establish his fallen worship in the North on the ruins of our Union and of free government. He has but partially succeeded. Mr. Chase met this attempt to nationalize slavery by self-consecration.

His sister, Mrs. Dr. Colby, was mobbed, and her house sacked for holding anti-slavery meetings. Mr. Chase prosecuted the mob. He defended slaves brought or sent into Ohio by their masters on the ground that slavery was local, and fell off when the slave set foot, with his master's consent, beyond the slave line. He defended Hon. James G. Birney, who was prosecuted, on the ground that the slave whom Birney harbored did not escape from one of the first thirteen States, and that the fugitive clause of the Constitution did not apply to the new States.

He addressed us Abolitionists in a pork house, where we sat on boards, and Mr. Chase's head was among the bacon and hams which hung over us.

Seven miles out of Cincinnati he addressed a few of us in Horace Bushnell's church. He said: "Think you, when freedom shall win and our country be delivered, think you it will irk us to have had some part, however small, in effecting this grand and glorious revolution for our country and mankind?"

He went down with Hon. Samuel Lewis to Cleves, near General Harrison's home, where we met and were repulsed by a savage mob from Kentucky, across the Ohio, led by Scott Harrison and men equally savage on the Ohio side. But all the while, "God was marching on;" and Mr. Chase became one of the most popular men in Ohio and the Union.

He was radical on temperance, and after awhile, as a councilman of Cincinnati, refused to vote to license saloons. While he re-organized the militia of the State, little thinking what service those regiments would be called to in the slavery war.

The military men held a convention at Columbus to re-organize and procure legislation. There were few temperance men, many Democrats and opposers of Governor Chase among them. They called to pay their respects to the Governor. A large pitcher of lemonade sat there for each to help himself. They recognized the pitcher by the pictures which had circulated through the State. Many respected the Governor's temperance principles, but a few refused to drink out of the pitcher, and quietly cursed it as they left. This is another secret of his greatness. Only think of a Governor who had gone from the city council to the U. S. Senate, a politician not indifferent to popularity, fifty years ago refusing to vote license in the city of Cincinnati, and setting a huge pitcher of cold-water lemonade before military drinking men in the city of Columbus—men distributed throughout the State, and whose votes he wanted.

Mr. Chase had had little personal experience of money, but when called into office he studied finance, both in Ohio and at Washington. He dismissed a defaulting State treasurer, who was his personal and political friend, because he had concealed his defalcation. The same man did good service in command of a regiment in the war. The U. S. Treasury was terribly over-drawn, and our troops were almost mutinous; and Collamer, Fessenden, and Lovejoy opposed the act which issued legal-tender greenbacks. A rumor started that Chase was either opposed to the bill or dared not risk himself upon it before the country. Chase wrote a letter to Congress, and that letter carried the bill against such formidable opposition. The greenbacks were issued, the soldiers paid, and the war borne to a triumphant close.

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

—Longfellow.

A THIRD PARTY MAN.

Mr. Chase had co-operated with the Liberty party from 1841 to 1847. Judge King, one of the most popular Whigs in the State, in a vote of 250,000 received only 5,000 votes for Governor; and Samuel Lewis, another able and popular man, six years later received only 11,000 votes for the same. Mr. Chase, stating these facts to John P. Hale, added:

"I see no prospect of greater future progress, but rather of less. As fast as we can bring public sentiment right, the other parties will approach our ground and keep sufficiently close to us to prevent any great accession to our numbers. So the Liberty party will only expound principles which others are to reduce to practice. Now it seems to me we can do better work than this.

"There are just now more abolitionists in the Whig party than in the Democratic party. But if we can get the Democratic party in motion for the overthrow of slavery, I would have no fear at all but it would be accomplished."

He then counseled to post-pone the abolition issue for slavery-restriction. This changed the base. The slave-holders came out against any restriction. They would have the whole country, and Toombs said he "would call the roll of his slaves at the foot of Bunker Hill." This gave every voter in the United States a personal interest in the issue. Chase wrote the Buffalo platform in 1848 on this new base; and slavery fell, by organizing a third party and voting with it.

To say, therefore, that slavery was not overthrown, under God, by Abolitionists, is to say that Judge Birney, Owen Lovejoy, S. P. Chase, Tom Morris, John Jolife, Dr. Bailey, etc., with whom the writer has often met mobs and slept in the hay in a stable-loft in Ohio, while the Tappans, Myron Holley, Leavitt, Phelps, Gerrit Smith, and others in the East, were founding and starting the Republican party, is to say that these men were not Abolitionists. Such vain assertions are weak and sinful and stupid.

CONCLUSION.

Judge Chase has no biography fit or worthy of him. The best of both of them is what is written by himself. Disgusted with his own (Episcopal) and other churches which stood aloof from the slave-question when God had brought it up and called for its discussion, Mr. Chase joined the M. E. church from political motives; and himself and family suffered in their piety. John Rogers wrote, "Few rare and worthy men continue such to the end, therefore let no man trust in men." But the majesty, integrity and greatness of his character and achievements entitle his life to our nation's gratitude and his memory to a national monument. While in the Senate, in reply to Butler of South Carolina, he said:

"No, I never proposed the resolution. I never would propose or vote for such a resolution. I hold no doctrine of mental reservation. Every man, in my judgment, should say precisely what he means—keeping nothing back here or elsewhere."

And in a single paragraph in a letter in August, 1849, he gives the key to the grandeur of his life:

"I am sure I had no idea that I was so bad a man as I have discovered myself to be since I was elected to the Senate. I always tried to pursue a straight forwrad. frank course; conciliating alwaysw here conciliation did not involve a sacrifice of principle; but always ready to avow and maintain whatever principles I really held, and to abide them, no matter how small the minority."

This is a true summing up of a sublime life.

—W. B. Stoddard, New York State agent, spoke nearly every night during the last week in October to good audiences. He was at Ridge Road the night before election.

—John C. Smith, elected last week lieutenant governor of Illinois by Republican votes, is a 33-degree Mason and holds, among numerous other offices in the Masonic and Odd-fellow bodies, that of "Deputy and Commander-in-Chief of the Illinois Council of Deliberation."

—The Christian, of Boston, the leading paper of its kind in America, has given, of late, some fine illustrations of the versatile genius of its editor, H. L. Hastings, the author and evangelist. Last month the story of the drink and tobacco curse was powerfully told by the picture of a pyramid, the lowest and largest tier of stone representing the drink bill, the next tobacco; then toward the apex the sums paid for bread, clothing, education, and last for religion. On each row of stones were pictured representations of the different subjects. The design was forcible and striking, and the illustration would have been exact if the drink traffic was really as fundamental as a pyramid's base must be. In the November number the amounts spent in Great Britain for rum, bread, etc., are represented by obelisks.

—The Wisconsin friends are agitating the subject of a State convention. The time and place will soon be announced.

—There are several items worth marking in our "Secret Empire" column, but especially the first, which should be credited to the Toronto Mail, opens the door of the lodge to the public eye and reveals iniquities that should be suppressed by law.

ANTI-MASONRY AND TEMPERANCE IN LOUISIANA.

MINDEN, Webster Parish, La.

I bought a large lot of Anti-maosnic literature when I first found out where it was for sale, and have bought other small lots since, and placed them where I thought they would do the most good. But this action has stirred up the Masons against me, and they have made it hard for me to make more than a bare living; and had it "not been the Lord who was on our side then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us." They have done what they could, but the Lord sends me sure supplies, often from unexpected sources. Nearly all my old customers have been lied away from me, and the front of my house is scarred with the marks of buck-shot, but I have searched out the midnight perpetrators of the outrage and exposed them to the public. The leader was the sheriff.

Am sorry you did not send ——— your paper, as I have more hope of his conversion than of any other. I gave him "Finney on Masonry" long ago, and he seems to be rather ashamed of his connection with the (dis)order, and tells his wife's father that he does not meet with them. He is our Presiding Elder this year, and was last year also. But you and the good friends have already been very liberal, for which I send many thanks again, and it is through your kindness that the gloomy thought of being alone in my warfare has been dispelled, and the hope has sprung up in my heart (though I am nearly seventy years old) that I may yet see the salvation of the Lord even in this place.

I have been working for years in the cause of temperance also, and not long since the fire broke out suddenly, and we had a vote on "local option" and came within a very few votes of gaining it, and would have gained it had it not been for the whisky and lies of those who "make merchandise of men's souls." The vote was taken too soon, but we will try it again next year, by God's grace, and will be better organized, and feel confident of success then. We voted only in the ward, but shall vote the parish next time. There are but five wards, and two have already voted prohibition—one almost unanimously.

Yours Respectfully, EDWARD ETTER.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The President has issued the following proclamation: "The season is nigh when it is the yearly wont of this people to observe a day appointed for this purpose by the President as the especial occasion for thanksgiving unto God. Now, therefore, in recognition of this hallowed custom, I, Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, do hereby designate as such day of general thanksgiving, Thursday, the 27th of this present November; and I do recommend that throughout the land the people, ceasing from their accustomed occupations, do then keep holiday at their several homes and their several places of worship, and with heart and voice pay reverent acknowledgment to the Giver of all Good for the countless blessings wherewith he has visited this nation."

—Miss Hor King Eng, daughter of a prominent Christian Chinaman at Foo Chow, whose family was the second one in the empire to embrace Christianity, has been lately admited to the Ohio Wesleyan College. She is 17, and intends to study mecicine and practice in China.

Miss Faithfull is special commissioner for Great Britain on woman's work at the World's Industrial Exposition at New Orleans, thus associated with Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, of Boston; Mrs. Julia Holmes Smith, M. WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Yesterday it was my privilege to visit and listen to this highest judicial authority in the United States.

At 12 M. we entered the old Senate Chamber, where Webster, Clay, Calhoun and Sumner displayed their wonderful powers of oratory, and where the latter was stricken down by the assassin. Coming from the larger audience-rooms of the Capitol the chamber seems small, but is most commodious and highly ornate.

The form is that of a semi-circle. The base is occupied by the seats of the judges, the opposite semi-circular wall is nearly filled with marble busts of the previous Chief Justices. The main door opens directly in front, and a semi-circular bar encloses the space formerly the Senate, but occupied by attorneys, clerks and reporters. Outside the bar are elegant sofas for visitors.

At 12:10 the clerk announced "the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices." All present rose and remained standing while the judges, clad in their official robes, filed in at a side door, and took their seats, the Chief Justice in the center.

The crier immediately proclaimed, "Oh yez! Oh yez! All ye that have business with the Supreme Court of the United States, draw near and present your claims." At once, one of the justices commenced reading a decision which the court had directed him to make. At its conclusion he read a second and then Justice Gray read a third, which was quite elaborate and on a matter of general interest.

It was the case of John Elk, an Indian, who had abandoned his tribal relation and for two years been a resident of Omaha, Neb. He claimed that as being subject to the laws of that State he was a citizen, and asked to be enrolled as a voter. This was denied and suit was brought to compel registration.

The court held that having been born under the tribal relation, and never been naturalized, he was not by virtue of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution a citizen, and had no right under the Fifteenth Amendment as a voter. This decision was sustained by elaborate argument.

Justice Harlan read the dissenting opinion of himself and Justice Woods. They held that an Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States is not a foreigner, and needs no naturalization or special enactment to make him a citizen. Whenever he became subject to the laws of any State or Territory and adopted the habits of civilized life, he was, de facto, a citizen, and entitled to vote in any State or National election.

Without professing skill in constitution law, it seemed to me deplorable that any impediment should be put in the way of Indian citizenship. It is absurd to regard Indian tribes as foreign governments. To make treaties with them as independent nations, and then habitually violate them, is a burlesque on diplomacy. There can be, strictly, no government within a government. The Indians are the wards of the nation. When these children of nature come to the station and manhood of civilized life, they are, or ought to be citizens. The sooner race distinctions are forgotten, and Europeans, Americans, Africans and Asiatics, are absorbed in the one great nation, the happier will it be for us as a people.

It struck me as strange that there should be no recognition of the Great Judge, nor invocation of Divine wisdom by the Supreme Court. Surely they need it, and it were well to publicly acknowledge their need.

THE REPORT OF GEN. JOHN NEWTON,

Chief of Engineers, makes a strong recommendation for an elaborate system of coast defence. Fortifications of the most extensive as well as expensive character, torpedoes and steel cannon are among the devices for depleting the overflowing treasury and keeping up the spirit of war. The latter is a far greater end that the former. The military spirit and war preparations make hostile collisions with foreign powers an imminent danger. Without such preparation we are not in danger of war. The man who carries pistols is usually most likely to get into difficulty and is really in greatest danger. The great multitude of unarmed citizens travel in safety.

Precisely so is the case of nations. A glance at European history for the last fifty years will show, beyond all question, that it is just those nations that have had the most ample and formidable preparations for war, that have suffered most from its consequences. As a friend of peace I earnestly hope that Gen. Newton's recommendations will be discarded.

THE HOME.

THE DEADENED TREE.

BY J. W. MOSS.

Behold that deadened tree,
That now puts forth its leaves so green and fair,
And seems so full of life, while yet we see
Death's girdle there!

Alas, that noble tree!
The woodman's axe hath girdled it, and now
To death so soon, though glorious still to see,
It needs must bow.

Cut off from all supply
Of life-bestowing sap, yet still alive;
Now on self only having to rely,
Not long 'twill thrive.

Wounded to death, but still
Unconscious of its doom, it smiles abroad,
Like guilty sinner dreaming not of ill,
Or wrath of God.

Not that its wound's so great,
But that it is incurable, I sigh
To see it, for though now so all elate
It must—must die.

How like to man that tree
With some incurable disease attacked,
Still left a little while apparently
In health to act.

Or like some church, perhaps,
With doctrine and with ordinances right,
With little to the eye to speak its lapse
From spiritual might.

THE HEART OF A STRANGER.

"There's some sort of a furrin body at the door wantin' ye, ma'am," said an Irish girl to her mistress.

There had been already half a dozen "furrin" and other sort of "bodies" asking favors that day; and the little lady of the house was weary, and had lain down on a lounge in her own room with a new book in her hand. "Tell her I am lying down, and bring up her message," she said, without taking her eyes from her book.

The girl returned, saying, "It's work she's wantin', like the rest uv 'em, ma'am; but I can't repate half the gibberish she tould me to."

"Tell her I have no work, and know of none elsewhere," was the answer.

The door closed heavily under the hand of the heartless girl; and the lady felt that she had done wrong, and almost heard the words, "For ye yourself know the heart of a stranger." And the days came back to her with strange power, when she, a young and beautiful orphan, had crossed the sea from England to gain her bread by her accomplishments; and she remembered how, after only one year of toil and loneliness, when a kind word was as a jewel to her, she became mistress of this beautiful home, and the mother of the lonely little ones who had been her pupils before. She wished she had seen this "furrin sort of a body" and listened to her story, if nothing more, and cheered "the heart of a stranger."

As the poor applicant descended the steps, after receiving the cool message, made cooler by the servant's heartless tone, she looked up the street and then down, as if not knowing which way to go; and then moved off in an aimless sort of way, and was soon lost to sight.

She went up one street and down another, occasionally ringing at a bell, only to be told that the lady was out, or that she could not be seen. She was a stranger in the city, and soon got confused in her wanderings; but she knew the street and number of her temporary home. She was weary at last with her ringing and inquiring, and asked a boy the way to H—— street. He directed her, and she turned her face thither, when she was seized with a sudden impulse to ring one more bell.

Ascending the long flight of stone steps before her, she did so, and was not a little surprised to see the same stern, cold woman, who repulsed her an hour ago—miles away as she thought.

Before she could frame a question, she was saluted with "What! are ye back again, after the lady tellin' ye to be gone, that she had neither work nor charity for ye! And I tell ye——"

"Catherine," called the lady, who had heard the heartless words, "I want to see that woman in my room. Send her up."

"She's the very same furriner ye sent away an hour ago, ma'am; she's just persistin' on yer helpin' her whether ye will or not," said the woman.

"Send her up, Catherine," was the soft reply.

The lady was surprised to see, in place of the rough creature she had pictured to herself, a well-developed girl of twenty years, with cheeks like roses, teeth like pearls, and with a flood of golden hair which the proudest belle might envy—a buxom, rustic beauty.

"Well, my girl, what can I do for you?" asked the lady, kindly.

"You gives me vork; I does it good for small moneys. I valk, valk, all days, four veek, and ask much lady vill she give me vork. But no vork yet! When passage is paid, I has twelve dollars, and I pays Ludvig Anderson vife two dollars veek, and vash and irons and sews for my home till I has vork. Now six veek gone, money gone, sleep gone; Ludvig sick, and must work hard for his childs and vife, and I can no more eat his bread for no pay. I talks some very good Anglish, cause I know girl in Sveden who had been five year in 'Merica; and more I learn on ship, and of 'Merican family in home vith Ludvig Anderson; so ladies have no trouble vith my Svede talk."

"What can you do?" asked the lady.

"All things. I spins and veaves this gown and shawl and all my clothes. I can sew for queens; I can knit stockings, vash good, makes breads, cooks dinner, all, all things for few moneys. I good to little childs and alvays smiles! I do all the cry in nights, when 'lone;" and here her voice broke, as if she were breaking this rule for once.

"But why do you ever cry, my good girl?"

"Oh, lady, Sveden so far away; my vun brother so long gone to sea; my mother so sick, and so hopes I vill send her money and some days bring her to me. But I gets no vork, and moneys all gone. My mother pray, pray to God, and myself pray all the time; but no vork, and no friend only Ludvig from my place, and he sick and poor. Svede minister home, and Svede minister here, give me good paper for honest, God-loving girl."

And she handed her recommendations from a clean envelope, wrapped in a snowy handkerchief.

"You may come to me to-morrow and stay for a week, and if you are a good seamstress I will get you all the work you can do," replied the lady kindly, after reading the "good paper."

Selma dropped a low courtsey, kissing the lady's hand, and said, solemnly: "God, he thank you; my sick mother, she thank you; and myself thank you."

"How strange," thought the lady, after Selma had gone to tell her joy to Ludvig's wife, "that no one engaged her before I saw her. Who could withstand her innocence and beauty?"

There was good reason why no one had lightened the poor girl's burden before. No lady had seen her! All had been left to the judgment of weary or thoughtless servants to decide whom they should see, and whom they should not!

When Selma had been a week in this house she was found to be a necessity there. No one could sew and darn like her; no one could so gently and tenderly wash and dress the poor little invalid boy of the house; no one could charm away a headache or sing a baby to sleep as she could. Another helper had not been dreamt of in the house; but once Selma was there, life took on new charms for the whole family. Home grew brighter for the father, because he saw more of his wife; she was relieved of much care, and had time to read and make herself interesting; and the children were entertained, and instructed, and loved by the girl who served them so faithfully.

When she had been two months in the house her friend Ludwig appeared one day with a letter from her mother in Sweden.

And after laughing and crying over it, and kissing it tenderly many times, Selma gave this English version of it to her mistress:

"When you go away from me, child beloved, my heart was dark like night-time. You on the great sea, and many days the sky black, and wind loud; and me lone and with pain. Neighbors come and talk kind, but I went only to God then. When you got to land I say in my heart, My child no home, no money, maybe Ludwig dead, and she be with bad strangers. Many day, many week, I cry and pray, and then come letter—you safe with Ludwig, but hard times and no work. I want wings to fly over the sea to my child, but I have no wings, so I must sit still. My heart near breaks. All days I think and all nights I dream of only Selma, Selma. My heart be a great load, and my tears a fountain like King David, and I know not how I will live cut in two from you, my child beloved!

"One day I sit, knit, knit, knit, for my bread, and sudden fell on my soul a great peace from God about you. I hear no voice. I sees no light; but only God's peace! Then I know it is well with you; that you have friends, and work, and his smile on you shine. All care go to the winds, and I have now wings for fly up to God's home, and thank him, for he has hide my Selma, beloved, under his wing. That the blessed day of all days. Its sun never set, and all time I am happy for my child."

Here Selma paused, and, looking at her mistress, said: "Perhaps that day I come two times to your door, and God said to you, 'Take her in.'"

"No matter whether it was that very day or not, Selma. He sent you here, and I thank him for it. That was my work to comfort the heart of a stranger, and yours to relieve me of a load of care and of work which I could not lay off on common hands. Be hopeful and faithful, and before long we will bring the dear mother over the sea; and she can trust and pray, and knit, knit, knit, here as well as there."

Let us be careful how we send the stranger, or any applicant for honest work, from our door. We may thus thrust away both the work and the blessing which God designs for us.—Mrs. J. D. Chaplin.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

NOTHING IS LOST.

Nothing is lost; the drop of dew
Which trembles on the leaf or flower
Is but exhaled to fall anew
In Summer's thunder-shower;
Perchance to shine within the bow
That fronts the sun at fall of day;
Perchance to sparkle in the flow
Of fountain far away.

Nothing is lost; the tiniest seed
By wild birds borne or breezes blown
Finds something suited to its need
Wherein 'tis sown and grown.
The language of some household song,
The perfume of some cherished flower,
Though gone from outward sense, belong
To memory's after-hour.

So with our words; or harsh or kind,
Uttered, they are all forgot;
They have their influence on the mind,
Pass on, but perish not.
So with our deeds: for good or ill,
They have their power scarce understood;
Then let us use our better will
To make them rife with good!

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

MRS. MARY MOFFAT, MISSIONARY FROM ENGLAND TO AFRICA.

Miss Mary Smith, afterward Mrs. Moffat, wife of Robert Moffat, the missionary to South Africa, was the eldest of four children of Scotch parents who had settled in Yorkshire, England. They were intelligent, reputable people. Mary was born at New Windsor, near Manchester, May 24, 1795. Her younger brother, John, was a successful missionary in India, and he owed his conversion to the fact of her devotion to the work of missions. Miss Smith was educated at the Moravian School at Fairfield, near Manchester, and had every prospect of wealth and position, as well as comfort and enjoyment, by remaining at home. But she met young Mr. Moffat, and when he decided to go out as a foreign missionary, Miss Smith not only encouraged him in that purpose, but after a few months of intimate acquaintance consented, with no reluctance, to go with him. It was no mere sentiment that moved her to that step. In the Moravian School at Fairfield it was the custom to read among the pupils accounts of the work of Moravian missionaries, and there she became deeply interested in the work.

The young couple were not married at once. Mr. Moffat was commissioned by the London Missionary Society in 1816, and went to Africa in October of that year. The work was new and the difficulties so great that it was better that he should first survey the field and secure a footing before she went out, and so well did he succeed during the first three years of his missionary work that one of the most desperate of the native chiefs was converted, and a good beginning in missionary work was made. In 1819 Miss Smith went out to Cape Town to meet Mr. Moffat. He had come down from his field, bringing with him the Africaner who had been such a terror to the country. At Cape Town Mr. Moffat and Miss Smith were married, and proceeded inland in January, 1820. They first went to Kuruman, but returned to Griqua Town and worked there some months. In May, 1821, they returned to Kuruman and settled there. It was not a most delightful thing to be a missionary in Africa, and even a missionary's wife was compelled to "endure hardness" no less than her husband. Do women in Christian lands understand what it is to be a missionary's wife among the more degraded peoples of the earth? Notice some of the things endured by this refined, intelligent Christian young English woman among the natives at Kuruman. She must be her own cook, for none of the natives knew how to cook. If they did they would not help her for any consideration. She must do her own washing, for none of the natives ever heard of such an absurd thing as cleanliness, and they were far too lazy to even learn how to wash. And her domestic work must be done with few conveniences or none, in a wattled hut with an earth floor, with not even the dream of a "kitchen." Into this hut came one, two, or twenty native women, filling the space, prying into everything, nearly or quite naked, and leaving a daub of red or yellow ochre wherever their skin happened to hit anything. The Christian woman regarded as a curiosity to be laughed at, abused, or robbed, as it pleased them. When her back was turned they all with one accord seized any article they could lay their hands on, and made off with it. If she remonstrated, a stick of wood or a stone was thrown at her head. Whenever the hut was left alone they would steal all the food and whatever else they wanted. A few silver spoons taken out with them were quickly stolen as well as some of the plated ones that were substituted, until the natives found that the plated ones would not melt so readily into usable silver. Often the kitchen utensils were taken along to the place of public meeting to save them from being stolen. When the baby came to add to the care, there was no one to care for it but its mother. Sometimes a native girl could be persuaded to cover her red ochre self with a cotton gown and hold the child for a little while; but it was not altogether safe if she became offended, and more than once the future wife of David Livingstone was thrown at her mother's head across the hut by some angry native girl, who would run off, cotton gown and all, leaving behind nothing but streaks of red paint and insolent words. What a place and what surroundings for rearing children! And yet in such surroundings nine children were reared in this home of the Moffats, and well reared, too.

Often the wife was left quite alone while her husband went on a tour away from the station, preaching to the natives. Once while Mr. Moffat was away news came that hostile natives were near the station, and later word that they had turned in a different direction brought no relief to Mrs. Moffat, for their new course was directly toward her husband. For three weeks she neither saw nor heard of him, and had almost given up all hope of ever seeing him again, when he returned in safety.

Not the least difficult was the task of persuading these people to wear decent clothing. They laughed at the idea at first, and not until they were touched by Gospel truth, could many of them be made to see the need of clothing. Mrs. Moffat was not only an example, but a teacher of even the first principles in all these matters. Even the use of a needle must be taught to them, and the first real garments attempted were made by the native men, as the women had never thought of doing such work; their business was to build huts and care for the fields.

But all these hardships were borne in patience and cheerfulness, and at length the results of their work began to appear. The natives grew to respect the missionaries, and as one and another was converted there was a little circle of Christians who not only loved and honored them, but helped them in their work for others. And in all the successes as well as the trials Mrs. Moffat shared. After a few years she became the object of respect and kindness from the natives, and when left alone at the station was not only not molested, but was regarded as the adviser of the people no less than her husband when he was there. And she did a full share of difficult and dangerous work. Sometimes she went with her husband on his tours to the interior. Sometimes she went alone. More than once she went alone across the country to visit her daughter Mary, the wife of Dr. Livingstone; and more than once, before that, she went alone to Cape Town to make arrangements about the education of her children. Of the nine, two died in infancy; Mary, the eldest, became Mrs. Dr. Livingstone; Ann, the second, married Mr. Fredoux, a French missionary; Robert died from over-exertion; John took up his father's work among the Bechuanas; Elizabeth married Rev. Roger Price, a missionary. There are two other daughters.

In 1870 Dr. and Mrs. Moffat, worn out by over fifty years of hard work, returned to England with great sorrow, both to themselves and to the natives; and on the 10th of January, 1871, Mrs. Moffat died, overcome by the effects of the English climate upon a constitution enfeebled by a long life in Africa.—Gospel in All Lands.

THREE GOOD LESSONS.

"One of my first lessons," said Mr. Sturgis, the eminent merchant, "was in 1813, when I was eleven years old. My grandfather had a fine flock of sheep, which were carefully tended during the war of those times. I was the shepherd boy, and my business was to watch the sheep in the fields. A boy who was more fond of his book than the sheep was sent with me, but left the work to me, while he lay under the trees and read. I did not like that, and finally went to my grandfather and complained of it. I shall never forget the kind smile of the old gentleman as he said: 'Never mind, Jonathan, my boy; if you watch the sheep you will have the sheep.

"What does grandfather mean by that? I said to myself. I don't expect to have a sheep. I could not exactly make out in my mind what it was, but I had great confidence in him, for he was a judge, and had been in Congress in Washington's time; so I concluded it was all right, and went back contentedly to the sheep. After I got into the field I could not keep his words out of my head. Then I thought of Sunday's lesson: 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things.' I began to see through it: 'Never you mind who neglects his duty; be you faithful and you will have your reward.'

"I received a second lesson soon after I came to New York as a clerk to the late Lyman Reed. A merchant from Ohio who knew me came to buy goods and said, 'Make yourself so useful that they cannot do without you.' I took his meaning quicker than I did that of my grandfather,

"Well, I worked upon these two ideas until Mr. Reed offered me a partnership in the business. The first morning after the partnership was made known Mr. James Geery, the old tea-merchant, called in to congratulate me, and said: 'You're all right now. I have only one word of advice to give you: Be careful whom you walk the streets with.' That was lesson number three."

And what valuable lessons they are: Fidelity in all things; do your best for your employers; carefulness about your associates.

Let every boy take these lessons home and study them well. They are the foundation-stones of character and honorable success.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

LEGAL PROHIBITION.

Necessary legal prohibition is also just. Society has the right to protect itself. Druggists who compound and dispose of poisons under the name of healing remedies, may be punished. Society has an unquestionable right to remove beyond the city limits, any business which endangers the public health. It has the right to protect the mail bags from becoming vehicles for the transmission of obscene literature. It has the right to destroy my home if it has reasonable grounds for believing that by so doing it can stay the conflagration. The dies of the counterfeiter may be destroyed, and his business ruined, even though his family is beggared. Has society, then, no right to interdict the sale of intoxicants as beverages, even though by so doing it may destroy that which has money value, may lessen the rental of certain kinds of real estate and may diminish the loaf on the saloon-keeper's table? Is it just that the boy who steals a bushel of potatoes from my cellar, to save himself and his mother from starvation, should be imprisoned, whilst the man who made his father a drunkard and his mother a beggar, should be walking on tapestry carpet, and holding a seat in the legislature? Manifestly there can be no injustice in attempting the legal suppression of an evil which is extorting money from over-burdened tax-payers, manufacturing objects for the gifts of the liberal, increasing every form of crime, forcing an unnecessary amount of business upon the courts and dragging some professed Christians from the communion table into the gutter.

But it is said legal prohibition does not prohibit. Of course the mere presence of a law upon the statute book will do little good. Until temperate people become inspired with courage sufficient to insist upon the enforcement of a prohibitory law, it can accomplish but little good. The law is impotent unless its penalties are inflicted. It makes provision for the punishment of the guilty, and if this result is secured, prohibition ensues. But it may as well be admitted that Americans, and especially saloon-keepers, cannot be frightened by laws that have no existence except on the statute book.

The question whether prohibition laws, where they have been enacted, lessen the evils of intemperance, I make no attempt to answer; merely remarking that if they tend to render the business disreputable, if they remove the sale from beneath the public eye, if they force drinkers to hunt after their beverages in secret rooms or up dark alleys, if they educate public opinion, if they render just a little less likely that our sons will be invited by their equals or by their superiors to step into an elegant room and take a drink, something is gained, indeed, very much. Besides, without a law it is nearly impossible to create a healthy public sentiment condemnatory of any crime. Little is permanently gained till sentiment has become crystalized into law.

We hazard the assertion that legal prohibition is Scriptural. Law is designed of heaven to be "a Minister of God for good." "If thou do that which is evil be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain." "He is a minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." Is it not manifest, then, that we have a Biblical authority for the enactment of a law which shall inspire fear in every den of drunkenness? Certainly, Christians enjoy the rights of citizenship. Unquestionably the church has the privilege of recommending measures which are adapted to improve public morals. Ministers are serving God quite as effectually by striving to remove temptation from the unwary as in praying for their deliverance from sin. Indeed, it may be fairly questioned whether they are not guilty of irreverence in asking God to do for them what they are too cowardly or too indolent to do for themselves.—N. Y. Observer.

INSURANCE RISKS IN INEBRIETY.

The well-known fact that life insurance companies find excessive mortality in their risks in certain sections of the South and Southwest has been the subject of some interest lately. Several of the Hartford companies who have examined the facts have found that this mortality came directly from inebriety, and was due to the liberal interpretation of the agents, who did not realize that any risk of inebriety was perilous unless the insured had suffered from delirium tremens many times. No use of alcohol, either moderate or occasionally immoderate, was thought to be dangerous.

The agents and examiners had no clear conception of the danger of alcohol, and treated the companies' views as extreme. The result was that special examiners were sent from the home office to cancel all the risks of ten thousand and upward where the insured were found using alcohol to any excess. Finally some of the companies withdrew their agents altogether, and do not solicit business in certain sections. In one case twenty-eight deaths were all traced to the excessive use of alcohol, and were all paid, simply because it was cheaper to settle than to contest. At a recent meeting of the Tennessee State Board of Health, the secretary reported that a Hartford life insurance company had ordered its agents not to issue any policies in six counties of the State, owing to the excessive mortality of the policy holders. The question came up of the cause of this mortality; as no reports indicated any special disease in this section, a letter was addressed to the secretary of the company to know the reason.

The answer was that from the amount of insured lives in these counties, the average loss to the company should be about sixty-eight thousand dollars, when in fact it was over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars—more than double the loss of any other section, and that without any special cause of epidemic disease.

The real explanation was the want of care in taking risks and the number of inebriates who had been taken as proper cases. It is the same old blunder of supposing inebriety to be a mere vice at the control of the victim, and in no way periling life unless used to great extremes. —Jour. of Inebriety.

—A minister who had lately occupied the pulpit of a brother, was dining with the family of the absent minister, when the conversation turned upon the subject of teetotalism. The lady who presided at the table said, "Ah! I do not like your doctrines; you go too far in refusing the good creatures of God." No notice was taken of the remark for some time; the minister kept on with his dinner, but at last he said, "Pray, madam, can you tell me who made this?" pointing to a glass of water that stood beside him. The lady replied, "Why, God, I suppose." "Then," said the minister, "madam, I think you do us an injustice when you accuse us of refusing the good creatures of God." Silence again reigned. By and by he said, "Madam, can you tell me who made yours?" pointing to the glass of beer that the lady preferred. "I can't exactly say I can." "Then, madam," replied he, "allow me to say there is some apparent inconsistency in your first remark. You prefer taking a thing that man has made to that which God has bountifully provided, and yet you accuse me of rejecting God's creatures, because I prefer water to beer. Madam, I leave the matter to your more serious consideration."

—The eleventh annual report of the London Temperance Hospital is just issued, and though the management are not bound by any rigid rule to reject alcohol, yet the second instance only of its administration since the establishment in 1884, occurred this year, followed, as was the first, with death of the patient. A confirmed judgment in favor of entire disuse of alcoholics in practice, is very rapidly extending through Great Britain, opposed by few physicians who are not addicted to its personal use as a beverage.—Evangelist.

—It is gratifying to see how well the temperance agitation is being kept up in England. It is stated that there were 6,126 petitions with more than half a million signatures sent up to Parliament this year in favor of the Sunday Closing bill, and there was not a single petition against the bill. It will be remembered that Scotland secured a Sunday closing law many years ago, so that, if the English bill is passed, Sunday drinking will be largely put a stop to, throughout Great Britain.

—The Chief of Police, in obedience to the orders of the trustees of White Plains, N. Y., undertook to enforce the Sunday law in that village; and the result was a perfectly quiet Sabbath. The grog-shops were closed, and all business suspended, as required by law. This was just as it should be in every village and city of the State.

Many a smoker throws away the stump of his cigar because he does not like the flavor of it. He does not know why the flavor is unpleasant to him, but it is caused by nicotine, the active principle of tobacco, and a violent poison. This accumulates in the base of the cigar with every draft of the smoke, and the man, noticing the unpleasant flavor throws the stump away. This reservoir of nicotine finds its way into the cigarette, and the person who smokes it, gets in a condensed form the poison which so often works mischief on the brains of habitual smokers. —Exchange.

There never was a stricter temperance pledge than that of Solomon. We think it sufficient to say, Drink not; but he said, "Look not on the wine." The color, the sparkle, the very sight of the intoxicating draught is enough to awaken the appetite in some men, so that it becomes necessary for them to make a covenant even with their eyes.—Ex.

THE CHURCHES.

—Dr. J. E. Rankin, formerly of the Congregational church, Washington city, which was lately opened to the Freemasons "Lodge of Sorrow," has just returned from Europe, and will be installed over the church in Orange Valley, N. J.

—The Illinois conference, Free Methodist church, meeting in Sycamore last month, took up a collection amounting to $209 30, to assist in starting the new African mission which has been undertaken by Bro. Robert Shemeld and his wife.

—The fifth annual convention of the American Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance met in Princeton, N. J., Oct. 24-26, and was the largest and most interesting yet held. In the evenings and on Sunday addresses were given by G. R. Crooks, D D., of Drew Seminary; Wm. G. Moorehead, D.D., of Xenia, Ohio; Arthur Mitchell, D.D , of New York; T. H. Pattison, D.D., of Rochester, N. Y., and Wm. J. Tucker, D.D., of Andover. The chief effect of the meeting, says the Advance correspondent, is to make missionaries. Every paper and address led up to the question, "Will you go?" At a consecration meeting, at which there were over fifty present, nearly forty rose with the simple statement that they had decided to go to the foreign field, and naming the field they had chosen.

—Professor James McGranahan, the singing evangelist, has recently returned from London and sang Sunday morning and evening at the Chicago Avenue Church in this city. Major D. W. Whittle preached at the same service.

—Mr. Moody began a convention for Christian workers Thursday at Montreal.

—A gentleman acting for Mr. Moody states that he is arranging to spend his time this winter in holding Christian conventions in different cities. The following are the meetings already arranged for, and in which it is hoped that Mr. Sankey may be able to be present; Albany and Troy, November 6-9; Utica, 10, 11; Rome, 12, 13; Syracuse, 14-16; Rochester, 17, 18; Buffalo, 19, 20; Detroit, 21-23; Elmira, 25.

—According to the recent issue of the Missionary Review, the evangelical churches in the United States support 2,236 missionaries in the foreign field, exclusive of the native helpers. Of these the Presbyterian church contains 445, the American Board 432, the Methodist Episcopal church North 279, the American Baptist Union 190, and the Moravians 284. The income of all the societies reporting is $3,420,613, while the entire expenses for the management cost $233,595.92.

—The report in the Wesleyan of the Wisconsin Wesleyan conference includes a long and very able report on Christian reforms, in which the vices of Sabbath desecration, polygamy, intemperance and lodgery are ably considered; especially the latter.

—One of the topics for discussion at the Protestant Episcopal Congress at Detroit was "The Confessional." A paper was read by the Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of Williamsport, Pa., in favor of the practice. It was, he thought, the abuse and not the use of the confessional that was objectionable, and he favored absolution on voluntary confession as a power divinely conferred upon the "priest." This view was endorsed by Rev. Edward W. Osborne, of Boston, Revs. C. G. Currie, of Philadelphia, and Leighton Parks, of Boston; but George C. Foley, of Williamsport, Pa., spoke on the other side. Mr. Foley said: "Priestly intrusion into the holy of holies of a man's individuality is a stupid outrage. No such thing is possible as keeping the conscience of another."

—Mrs. Augusta M. Huntington, formerly Mrs. Shumway, of Cincinnati, leaves $300,000 in trust to Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, directing that $100,000 be applied to the erection of Shumway Hall, on the Shattuck school-grounds, at Faribault, Minn., and $50,000 for the endowment of the school, which is for the education of boys. Another $100,000 is to be devoted to the building of Johnston Hall, at Seabury, in memory of her father; while the remaining $50,000 is given to the Divinity School at Seabury, for the purpose of aiding needy students.

—One effect of the French raids on China is seen in the following from a letter from a missionary: "Two days ago news reached us from Kucheng, a city about 100 miles north west from here, that placards of unutterable foulness had been posted up there against Christianity. The copy which was sent us shows them to be of such a character that I dare not tell you of their contents by letter. It would pollute the paper to write them. The arch-fend himself could imagine nothing more vile and malignant."

—What is the difference between the religion of the idolatrous pagan and that of the Mexican Romanist? A recent writer travelling in Mexico, says that he saw a long procession each person with a lighted candle. At the head of the column was to be seen something in the form of a man with long streaming hair falling loosley over the back and shoulders, with a crown. Could you guess what it was? It was the "Rain Jesus" of Mexico, being carried through to the fields and plains with hundreds of Mexican men and women following and praying for this Jesus to have the heavens open and rain to come.

—The most advanced and hopeful tribe of Indians in North America dwelt on the River Skeena in British Columbia. They sustained their own churches and schools, and some of them went as missionaries to convert other tribes, one or two of whom did good service in Alaska. This tribe's chief village was called Metlakahla, and all was peace, harmony and prosperity with them till a ritualistic bishop was placed over the Anglican Church of that province, who deemed it his duty to command all the Protestant Indians to attend his meetings and schools. He attempted to force them to do so, and tried to shut up their own, where the missionary ministered who had led them out of darkness into light. This oppression the great majority of the Indians resisted, but there were, as in all similar cases, two parties; and harmony and progress was at an end. Even civilization suffered. These Indians who were the admiration of all who heard about them, have now, so far as can be learned from brief telegraphic reports, become the terror of the Anglicans and of the miners near them. They have nailed up the door of Bishop Ridley's mission-house, and are joining for defence with the Blood Indians, a wing of the Piegan tribe, whoser eserve is in Montana.—N. Y. Witness.

WILLIAM TAYLOR, the well known founder of Independent missions, lately appointed Bishop of Africa by the Methodist General Conference, writes, in answer to the query whether he will now be paid a salary from the missionary treasury:

"Without the slightest reflection on the grand missionaries who are providentially supported by missionary money, I have only to say, that, according to my convictions of the responsibility God has laid upon me to found and develop self-supporting missions, I cannot receive a cent from any missionary treasury, nor in any way compromise the principles I represent, nor cease to care for my missions in India and South America, nor allow any mandatory authority to operate between the General Conference and my Divine leader, whom I am bound to follow and obey. No such interference has been intimated, and the General Conference carefully guarded my solemn commission against any such embarrassments.

"As to salary, I had none from any source for twenty-seven years, but supported myself and family by my authorship, and preached gratuitously. Of late God has made some provision for my family, and given me a private partner in the missionary business, who supplies my shortage. I am depending on God to touch the hearts of thousands of my friends who will feel it a privilege and pleasure to pour their sympathies, prayers, faith, and funds into this movement.

"Persons wishing to contribute to my 'Transit and Building Fund' may put it into the hands of any one of the following official receivers: Rev. Wm. McDonald, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.; Rev. Geo. Hughes, 64 Bible House, New York; Rev. T. T. Tasker, 921 Arch St., Philadelphia."

MISSIONARY WORK IN THE FIJI ISLANDS.

The following compilation of interesting statistics is from the "Australian Hand-book" for last year:

It has been said that the late history of Fiji may be almost considered identical with the record of missionary enterprise. In no place has missionary effort been more successful, or its fruits been more apparent. It is only forty-seven years ago (1835) that the first missionaries, the Rev. William Cross and David Cargill, M. A., landed at Lakemba. They found the Fijians at nearly the lowest depths of degradation—blood-thirsty, and addicted to cannibalism and all manner of vice. To-day finds the whole of them professing Christians; cannibalism has ceased since 1878, polygamy is abolished, and the idol worship of past ages has given place to the worship of the true God, and generally there is peace. Many of the converts are said to maintain a consistent walk, and in all a great revolution, in outward morals at least, has taken place, even if there has not been a real change of heart. These remarks scarcely apply, however, to the tribes of the interior of the Viti Levu, who are estimated at from 7,000 to 20,000. and who for some time held out against any advance of civilization into their territory. They have, however, been punished on more than one occasion, and there is every reason to expect that, with the establishment of British rule in Fiji, they will find it to their interest to keep on good terms with those surrounding them. The following are the returns of the Wesleyan church in the Fiji District, which includes the island of Rotumah (now annexed to the colony), for the year 1881: Churches, 776; other preaching places, 432; missionaries, 8; native ministers, 47; catechists, 21; teachers, 1,029; Sabbath-school teachers, 2,351; local preachers, 1,527; class leaders, 2,681; English church members, 36; native church members, 24,109; on trial for membership, 5,250; communicants, 19; Sabbath-schools, 1,391; Sabbath scholars, 40,728; day schools, 1,760; day scholars, 40,323; attendants on public worship, 102,639; deaths, 755. These results are due to Wesleyan enterprise alone, no other Protestant denomination having been present until within the last few years, when the Rev. W Floyd, D. D., a Church of England clergyman, was located at Levuka; Mr. Pool was appointed Assistant Reader in 1879. It is proposed to establish a Bishopric in Fiji in connection with the Church of England. The Roman Catholics have for some time had a mission in the islands. It is under the name of Prefecture Apostolique, and is governed by an Apostolic Prefect, under the French dependence of Rome. Their influence, and the body itself, is small, compared to that of the Wesleyans. The number of church members (Catholic) is stated at 8,000. Sir Arthur Gordon, the late Governor of the colony, speaking at Exeter Hall, in May 1878, said, "Out of a population of something like 120,000 more than 102,000 are regular attendants at Wesleyan churches, and the remaining 18,000 are not heathen, but for the most part members of other Christian churches. The people of Fiji are now a Christian people. Not to mention smaller and inferior places of worship, about 800 churches have been built. Out of sixty-two ordained ministers now employed in those islands, over fifty are natives, and nearly all the lesser teachers, such, for instance, as school-teachers, numbering over 3,000, are natives also.

FIJI, PAST AND PRESENT.

Think, says Gordon Cumming, of the sick buried alive; the array of widows who are deliberately strangled on the death of any great man; the living victims who were buried beside every post of a chief's new house, and must needs stand clasping it while the earth was gradually heaped over their devoted heads; or those who were bound hand and foot, and laid on the ground to act as rollers when a chief launched a new canoe, and thus doomed to a death of excrutiating agony; a time when there was not the security for life or property, and no man knew how quickly his own hour of doom might come, when whole villages were depopulated simply to supply their neighbors with fresh meat! Just think of all this and of the change that has been wrought, and then just imagine white men who can sneer at missionary work as they do. Now you pass from isle to isle, certain everywhere to find the same cordial reception by kindly men and women. Every village on the eighty inhabited isles has built for itself a tidy church, and a good house for its teacher or native minister, for whom the village also provides food and clothing. Can you realize that there are nine hundred Wesleyan churches in Fiji, at every one of which the frequent services are crowded by devout congregations; that the schools are well attended; and that the first sound that greets your ear at dawn, and the last at night, is that of hymn-singing and the most fervent worship rising from each dwelling at the hour of family prayer.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE ROMANIST COUNCIL AT BALTIMORE.

A dispatch from Baltimore dated Nov. 9th says: It is doubtful if in the history of the Roman Catholic Church in America there has ever been religious ceremonies as grand and impressive as those attending the opening of the third Plenary Council at the Cathedral in this city today—certainly not since 1866, when the last Plenary Council was held in the same edifice. The ceremonies consisted of a solemn procession of the clergy, pontifical high mass and the formal opening of the Council. The streets in the vicinity of the Cathedral, long before the hour appointed for the procession, were densely crowded with people of all denominations. Ten thousand would be a fair estimate of the number.

At 10:30 a. m. the procession left St. Alphonsus Hall and proceeded to the Arch-Episcopal residence to receive the most reverend and right reverend prelates. The procession, numbering in all about 1,000, then left that point and moved toward the cathedral by way of Charles street, Mulberry and Cathedral streets, in the following order: Cross-bearer carrying the processional cross; seminarians of St. Sulpice; regular clergy; secular clergy; chanters; theologians of the council; officials of the council; superiors of religious orders; rectors of theological seminaries; very reverend and right reverend monsignori; right reverend mitred abbots; right reverend Bishops; most reverend Archbishops; censer bearer; Arch-Episcopal cross-bearer between two acolytes; assistant priest of the most Reverend apostolic delegate; Most Rev erend Apostolic Delegate (Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore), between his deacons of honor, insignia bearers of the Most Rev. Apostolic Delegate.

During the procession the hymns Veni Creator Spiritus and Ave Maria Stella were sung by the clergy. The Most Rev. Apostolic Delegate on reaching the altar sang the prayer to the Holy Ghost and to the Blessed Virgin. Pontifical high mass was then celebrated by Archbishop Kenrick, of St. Louis, the most Rev. Apostolic Delegate occupying the throne at the gospel side of the sanctuary. At the end of the mass Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, ascended the pulpit and preached the opening sermon, his subject being: "The Church in Her Councils."

During the three weeks of the council public services will be held on each Thursday and Sunday. The council is composed of 256 members, including archbishops, bishops, theologians, etc. The public will not be admitted to any of the business sessions of the council, so that all the proceedings will be as a sealed book until after their transmission to Rome at the close of the council and approval of the Pope. Then the decrees will be promulgated and copies of the same will be sent to each member of the council.

—It is claimed that there are about 100,000 colored Roman Catholics in the United States. Statistics are given as follows by a recent writer: "At least two thirds reside in the States of Maryland, Kentucky and Louisiana. In Richmond (which has sometimes been instanced as one of the cities where the Catholic missions have been most successful) there are only between fifty and sixty colored Catholics of all ages; in Norfolk, between 250 and 300; in Washington, about 5,000; in Charleston, about 1,000; in Louisville, about 3,000; in Baltimore, about 7,000. In Philadelphia the number of colored communicants has decreased since the war, but whether from migrations or secessions is not known here. There is no colored Catholic church in Philadelphia. In New York Father Burke knows of 500 colored Catholics, and there are probably not more than twice that number in the city."

A GREAT NEWSPAPER.

The Pall Mall Gazette, of London, England, did not overstate the case when it said the New York Independent is "one of the ablest weeklies in existence." It is as overwhelming as a monthly or quarterly magazine, with all the matter in its many departments. Any monthly might indeed be proud if it could show as distinguished a list of contributors as the Independent. In a single department—its story department—there are, among Englishmen, such contributors as Sir Samuel W. Baker, the celebrated Egyptian explorer; Thomas Hardy, W. E. Norris, James Payn, F. W. Robinson and Henry W. Lucy; while among Americans are the names of Edward Everett Hale, Frank R. Stockton, H. H. Boyesen, Sarah O. Jewett, J. S , of Dale, Rebecca Harding Davis and Harriet Prescott Spofford. The Independent printed also, recently, the last story from the pen of the late Ivan Tourgeneff, having secured the only translation from the Russian into English. This department is but a sample of the others. It would seem that the Independent offers not only "fifty-two dividends during the year," but, in addition, a stock dividend with each department. A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

'The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

'A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

Fifty-two Dividends!

THE INDEPENDENT

of New York, is acknowledged to be what the Pall Mall Gazette, of London, says it is, "one of the ablest weeklies in existence." It occupies two fields—religious and literary.

It publishes each week from TWENTY-FIVE TO THIRTY-THREE per cent. more reading matter than any of its contemporaries. With the exception of its column of "Selections" every line in every issue is NEW, ORIGINAL MATTER, WRITTEN EXPRESSLY FOR IT. It pays more each week for literary matter than any three of its contemporaries put together. It has the LARGEST and BEST corps of contributors of any periodical in the world. It is undenominational in religion, and unsurpassed in literary ability. Its reviews of books are unexcelled in journalism. Its Editorials are fearless. Its departments of Science and Biblical Research give valuable information unobtainable elsewhere. Its Market and Financial Reports and Commercial Articles are eagerly sought for by those wanting correct information upon those subjects. Its department for "Old and Young," is filled with stories and articles in prose and poetry.

THE INDEPENDENT

has twenty-two distinct departments, edited by twenty-two specialists, which include Biblical Research, Sanitary, Fine Arts, Music Science, Pebbles, Personalities, Ministerial Register, Hymn Notes, School and College Literature, Religious Intelligence, Missions, Sunday-School, News of the Week, Finance, Commerce' Insurance, Stories, Puzzles, Selections and Agriculture. Thirty-two pages in all.

HOME HINTS.

POISONOUS SOLDER IN CANNED GOODS.

Dr. John G. Johnson, having had six cases of poisoning from the eating of canned tomatoes, read an excellent paper on the subject before the New York Medico-Legal Society, which is published in the Sanitarian for June. He concludes after a careful review of the subject that:.

1. These were not cases of sickness from spoiled tomatoes.

2. They were cases of corrosive poisoning from muriate of zinc and muriate of tin.

3. This poisonous amalgam must be abandoned.

4. Exemplary damages, "at the discretion of the jury," will be sustained by the courts for this reckless tampering with human life in using a dangerous means when a safe one could be used.

5. The canners have only themselves to thank for the present panic in their business, for they have persisted in the use of this dangerous amalgam, knowing it was dangerous.

6. Every cap should be examined, and if two holes are found in it, send it at once to the health board, with the contents and the name of the grocer who sold it.

7. Reject every article of canned food that does not show the line of resin around the edge of the solder on the cap, the same as is seen on the seam at side of the can.

8. "Standard" or first class goods have not only the name of the factory, but also that of the wholesale house which sells them, on the label. "Seconds," or doubtful or "reprocessed" goods, have a "stock label" of some mythical canning house, but do not have the name of any wholesale grocer on them. Reject all goods that do not have the name of some wholesale firm on the label.

9. A "swell" or decomposing can of goods can always be detected by pressing in the bottom of the can. A sound can, pressed, will give a solid feel. When gas from the decomposition of the food is inside the can, the tin will rattle by pressing up the bottom as you displace the gas in the can.

10. Reject every can that shows any rust around the cap on the inside of the head of the can.—International Review of Med. and Surg. Technics, Oct. 1884.

INGROWING NAIL.

In a note to the Union Medicale, M. Monod states that during the last twenty years he has treated ingrowing nail by a very simple and effectual method, which does not involve the removal of the nail. He makes a free application of nitrate of silver at the commencement of the affection, without isolating the nail. If the cauterization is carried deeply into the diseased furrow, the patient has usually, even by the next day, derived considerable relief, and is able, even thus early, to walk in moderation with an easy shoe. Extirpation of the nail should be reserved for quite exceptional cases.

CAN'T YOU SLEEP?

Many persons find themselves troubled by wakefulness. Some resort to the Hydrate of Chloral and other drugs to produce sleep. Such drugs, if their use is once begun, have to be continued, and in increasing doses, and every effort should be made to induce sleep in some other way. Among the methods that have been suggested, is the stopping of all study or serious reading, half an hour before bed-time, and to take sufficient exercise with dumb-bells or Indian clubs to produce a warm glow of the body, and then jump into bed. In winter sleep in a flannel night-gown, and between blankets instead of cold sheets. The attempt, when in bed, to read some amusing novel may be made, in order to divert the mind from the wakefulness. A second method is, instead of reading, to repeat a poem with which one is familiar. Another plan is, to draw in a long, slow breath by the mouth, and force the breath out through the nose, imagining that the two currents can be distinctly seen. The mind is to be kept fixed upon the operation of breathing, and the endeavor to see the currents as they are expelled. One of our editorial associates finds relief by wetting a cloth with cold water and placing this across the forehead, and binding it in place by means of a towel It is worth while to give either of these methods a thorough trial rather than to resort to drugs of any kind.—American Agriculturalist.

Nothing can be worse for a child than to be frightened. The effect of the scare it is slow to recover from. It remains sometimes until maturity, as is shown by morbid sensitiveness and excessive nervousness. Not unfrequently, fear is employed as a means of discipline. Children are controlled by being made to believe that something terrible will happen to them, and punished by being shut up in dark rooms, or by being put in dark places they stand in dread of. No one, without vivid memory of his own childhood, can comprehend how entirely cruel such things are. We have often heard grown persons tell the sufferings they have endured, as children, under like circumstances, and irreparable injury which they are sure they then received. No parent, no nurse, capable of alarming the young, is fitted for the position. Children, as near as possible, should be trained not to know the sense of fear, which, above everything else, is to be feared in their education, early and late.

"SCRIP and STAFF."

BY H. M. HUGUNIN.

This new and attractive volume is now ready. It is composed of thirty-nine chapters on nearly as many topics. Neatly bound in cloth with gilt stamp. Price 60 cents.

The Chicago Evening Journal of May 3, says:

The author of this little volume, for many years a working editor of the EVENING JOURNAL, has here presented us with a variety of topics of a religious character. Among the number we note "The Evils of the Sunday Newspaper," "The Divine Sanction of Church Organizations," "The Good Work and Government of Sunday-Schools," "The Bible in our Public Schools," "Fallacies of the 'Evolution Theory,'" "Chronology—The Age of the World," and "Labor and Laborers." Mr. Hugunin writes as an independent thinker, untrammeled by denominational alignments. His style, however, is marked by the vigor of earnestness and sincerity, and with these characteristics, and with a close adherence to Bible Christianity, his book becomes a suggestive aid to evangelical workers. In discussing the topics above named, as in others, he deals consistently with questions of public interest and great importance in the reform of individual and social evils.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

It is said that one of the highest of the high Episcopal churches in New York compels its women members who confess having sinned to wear next the skin a heavy brass plate, on which is a crucifix.

A grave was opened at the Bethlehem Cemetery, Albany, N. Y., last Friday, and the corpse, which had been buried twenty-nine years, was found in a perfect state of prescrvation, even hair and eyes.

The Government has offered its property at Harper's Ferry for sale. Here was once the greatest armory of the United States. But a curse has hung ovex it since John Brown's raid. The rebellion broke out soon afterwards, and Harper's Ferry never had a day's rest or quiet during the war. It was eternally raided and riddled, first by one side, then the other. What was left of it never recuperated, and now the Government finally abandons it, and offers to sell for a song what cost it many millions of dollars. Slavery, that hanged John Brown, strangled itself by the same act, and a blight has settled upon the spot where the tragedy opened.

Works like the Alpine tunnels and the Brooklyn bridge bring up singular economical questions. There the works stand, an undoubted good to humanity, but incapable of paying any interest on the capital buried in them. Now a man desires to rent the Brooklyn bridge for a sum which will not do more than keep it in repair. He wants a lease of twenty years. It is no more costly to build a bridge for $16,000,000 which will barely keep itself intact after it is built than it is to drink $16,000,000 worth of champaigne; and it is a fine thing to be able to get to Brooklyn from New York, or vice versa, when the ice is so bad that a ferry-boat cannot make the passage.—The Current.

A correspondent writes us, mentioning circumstances and witnesses, of the freezing over of Seneca Lake two successive years on May 5, 1860–61, with a thin sheet of ice like window glass. Appleton's Cyclopædia also mentions its having frozen over March 22, 1856, although, aside from these instances, it has never been known to freeze over even in the coldest winters. The lake is situated in the western part of New York State, is 37 miles long, and two to four miles broad, 630 feet deep, its surface about 200 feet above Lake Ontario, and 450 feet above the Atlantic.—Scientific American.

THE NEW CUNARD STEAMSHIP UMBRIA.

This new ship is expected to reach New York about Nov 6. On her recent trial trip the vessel steamed a distance of thirty miles at a speed of twenty-one nautical miles an hour. A marked increase of speed may be looked for when her machinery is in thorough working order. The Umbria is the largest vessel afloat, with the exception of the Great Eastern. She is 520 feet long, 57 feet 3 inches breadth of beam, and 41 feet depth of hold, and measures over 8,000 tons. The vessel was built in the Fairfield yard at Govan, where a majority of the fast steamers of late years have been constructed. Her great breadth affords room for a wide saloon, which is 76 feet long, 9 feet high, and lighted by a lofty cupola skylight. The whole of the saloon is paneled with oak, slightly carved. The electric light is used. The Umbria will carry 720 first class passengers, and has no steerage accommodations. The engines of this magnificent work of marine architecture are the most powerful in the world. The center high pressure cylinder is 71 inches in diameter, and the two low pressure are each 105 inches, with a 6-foot stroke. The screw is made of manganese bronze, cast in the Fairfield yard. The qualities of manganese bronze, combined with the development in practice of the true proportions of the screw propeller, are computed to add upward of a knot an hour to the performance of the old fashioned cast iron blades. The vessel is fitted for the Admiralty service, and can carry coal for 16 days when moving continually at a speed of eighteen knots an hour.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen, $2 00

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill. Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 35c. per doz. $3 25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Freemasonry at a Glance Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00. per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each, per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the ChrisTIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the RePUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc. and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret SOCIETIES. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen $2 00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M S Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 304 pages; cloth, $1.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

—The best information obtainable last evening is that the Legislature of Illinois will be a tie on joint ballot, with the chances favoring the Republicans for a majority of two.

—Official returns from fifty-nine out of sixty-seven counties in Pennsylvania, and estimates of the remaining eight counties, give Blaine a plurality in the State of 78,493.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 9.—The vote of the county of Albany was carefully revised last night, and the plurality was to be 650 instead of 640. The plurality in the State, according to official figures received by Chairman Manning from county clerks, is 1,234.

—Butler was buried out of sight, and has declared himself for the Republican party.

COUNTRY.

—The seventh annual American Fat Stock Show, which opens in the Exposition building, Chicago, Tuesday, Nov. 11, and continues to Nov. 20, promises to be the most successful of any previous year. There are 210 entries for competition in the cattle rings—more than ever before. The sheep and swine departments are fully equal to previous years. There are fewer sale cattle, the horse exhibit occupying the stalls. On the opening evening Governor Hamilton, Governor Oglesby and Mayor Harrison will speak. There will be show rings every evening during the show. The week of the show there will be a number of meetings of stockmen.

—A boiler explosion in Mead's sugar-house at New Orleans caused the death of nine persons, while six were wounded, some of them dangerously.

—Three bridges on the Straitsville branch of the Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo road were burned Thursday morning. The loss is about $10,000. The bridges are all in the same neighborhood, between Straitsville and Nelsonville. Before the firing of the bridges a party of unknown men appeared in Murray City and threw bombs from the hillsides, which were exploded.

—Silver Plume, a small mining town in Colorado, was almost wiped out by fire Thursday morning. Several persons are reported to have perished in the flames.

—A mob prevented the ex-priest, Father Chiniquy, from lecturing Wednesday night at Montreal. They broke the windows of the hall and demolished the lamps and furniture. Aided by the police, Chiniquy and a few friends escaped in carriages.

—MURRAY CITY, Ohio, was attacked by miners Thursday night, the band discharging tins filled with dynamite and giant powder. The Sheriff and railway officials have asked Governor Hoadly to send militia because of the burning of bridges in Hocking County.

—A shocking accident occurred at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Friday night. Professor Wolf, superintendent of city schools, a gentleman friend and five ladies, entered a small skiff upon an artificial pond just at the edge of the town for a boat ride. The boat was only large enough for three or four and soon overturned and sunk with the load, and Superintendent Wolf and Miss Ella Carpenter, a teacher in the public school, and Etta Teter and Edith Branah, students at the college, were drowned. The other three barely escaped. Professor Wolf leaves a wife, who is nearly crazed by the shock. All the victims stood high in social circles, and the sorrow at their untimely death is universal.

—The dynamite works three-quarters of a mile from Strouchsburg, Pa., blew up Thursday afternoon, shaking up the country for a distance of twenty miles. The works consisted of five frame buildings, the timbers of which were sent flying in all directions, nothing remaining but the foundation. All the men in the buildings were killed, so the cause of the explosion will never be known. Windows were broken in many houses in Strouchsburg, people were knocked off their feet, and mirrors and pictures shaken from the walls. The church and several houses were unroofed. The three victims were literally blown to atoms. At Robesonia, ten miles from Strouchsburg, a number of Masons were working at the bottom of Ferguson & Company's furnace-stack, relining it with fire-brick. the stack was probably 100 feet high, and the work was nearly completed. Ten, some say fifteen men, were in the stack, some at the bottom and others on the scaffolding above. Just as the shock of the explosion was felt, the stack quivered. There was a rumbling noise followed immediately by a great deluge of bricks, completely burying six men in the bottom of the stack. If they were not instantly killed they will be burned to death, as the scaffolding is burning and they can not be reached. Four or five others were wounded.

FOREIGN.

—The snowstorm which set in Wednesday at Quebec continued until six or seven inches had fallen. The storm destroyed eighteen houses at St. Anne des Monte and Notre du Portage, Quebec, demolished fishingboats, and leveled miles of fencing. Several families lost their winter provisions, which had been stored in cellars.

—The damage by the high tide at Quebec Wednesday night is placed at $250,000. Towns along the St. Lawrence have suffered severely, docks have been carried away and boats and other vessels wrecked, the losses mounting into thousands. In some places the people are suffering from cold and hunger.

—Several cases and one death from alleged Asiatic cholera were reported in Paris on Thursday. During the same time there were five fresh cases and one death at Nantes. On Sunday there were 22 deaths in Paris.

—According to native reports the rebels are concentrating their forces on all the routes leading to Khartoum. Native spies allege that the Mahdi has sent guns and ammunition to Osman Digna to enable him to resume operations on the Red Sea littoral.

—It is stated Bismark has entered into a secret agreement with France to propose to the forthcoming Congo conference to recognize the African Association as a sovereign State of the Congo, and that under this agreement Germany will share with France the right to purchase territory of the association, if that organization should be desolved. It is reported Earl Granville, the British Foreigh Secretary, has demanded an explanation of this matter.

—The gravest fears are entertained that Paris is to pass through a terrible visitation from the cholera. So far its virulence is inferior to that of the cholera in the south of France, as seen in the disproportion in the number of cases and deaths, which is at present in the ratio of five to one. In Marseilles it was three to one, and in the worst stages one death to every two cases. Thirty deaths from cholera took place in Paris Saturday and nearly 100 cases are reported.

—The Liberte of Paris says: Premier Ferry will announce to the Tonquin Committee to day that the Cabinet Council Saturday agreed to forego the demand for indemnity from China, and that preliminary peace negotiations with China have been almost concluded.

—Stauch, agent of the International African Association, has succeeded in his mission to Paris in settling the boundaries of the association's possessions and French territory on the Congo. It is reported when the Congo conference establishes the Free State of Congo, a loan will be issued through a Paris syndicate, on the security of the State's possessions, to buy the rights of the International African Association, and pay the monies advanced by the king of the Belgians.

CHRISTIAN NATION.

A Journal of Enlightened Statesmanship, Sound Public Morals, Choice Literature, and General Information.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY IN
New York City.

It aims to promote every Christian Reform Measure on the following
PLATFORM:

God, who is the source of all authority, has appointed our Lord Jesus Christ the Ruler of Nations. The Bible, God's revealed Will, contains law for Nations, and is the Standard by which all Moral Issues in Political Life are to be decided. National acknowledgement of this authority, and obedience to the law, constitute a truly Christian Nation.

SOME TESTIMONIES.

The Christian Nation has an able corps of writers and contributors.—Sacramento Daily Record-Union.

EXTRACTS FROM PRIVATE LETTERS.

"I congratulate you most heartily upon the success which has thus far attended your enterprise. It already holds its place among our best religious journals, and has put itself abreast of the advanced movements in journalism."

"I like it well. It is growing better every week, and has the true radical ring."

"I like this issue of paper very much, and think it is growing better and better."

"I am more than satisfied with the paper."

"Allow me to congratulate you on the make-up of your paper; the matter is very good, and, in fact, the whole is far beyond what I expected. It is par excellence."

"I received the sample copies of the Christian Nation, and I am well pleased. You can enter my name as a regular subscriber."

"The paper should be in every house in the land."

"I received a sample copy of your paper from a friend, and finding it to be entirely satisfactory in every respect, I wish to place my name on your list of subscribers."

"It is bright, warm, cheerful, and I have publicly commended the enterprise as one sincere in spirit seeking to occupy vacant room, devised by a successful man, a safe and profitable investment for all interested in reforms."

Justice Blandford of the Georgia Supreme Court lately decided a case of dealing in "futures," or grain gambling. Since he warmly condemned the evil and gave the sentence of his court against it, we may pardon the rhetorical flourishes with which he put forth a warning against the practice: "Faro, brag and poker are tame, gentle, submissive animals compared to this monster, future speculation, which is a ferocious beast allowed to stalk about in open mid-day with gilded signs and flaming advertisements, to allure unhappy victims to its embrace of death and destruction."

The numerous meetings of stock breeders is a remarkable feature of the Fat Stock show now exhibiting in this city. Associations representing the different breeds of cattle, sheep, hogs and horses have been meeting by the score, and well represent the vast financial interests involved in the business. Chicago business men, also, recognizing the worth of this show to the city, are giving it a liberal patronage. The school children appreciate their day in the Exposition building and 60,000 of them trooped about among the stalls last Saturday. A national meeting of cattle men is held at St. Louis this week, and it is expected a thousand delegates will attend. This meeting will rather represent the interests of stock raisers than breeders. The conjunction of the two in the leading cities of the West marks the importance of the stock trade as an American industry.

The Thanksgiving proclamation of Governor Hoadly of Ohio suggests the changes that have taken place in the political character of that State during the last twenty-gve or thirty years. Soon after Salmon P. Chase was elected governor of Ohio he issued a Thanksgiving proclamation, and suitably expressed his own devotion by appropriate passages from the Bible, so familiar to himself that he presumed they must be to all others, and he therefore omitted all marks of quotation. A Democratic editor pounced upon the document, declaring he had read it before—couldn't say where—but he denounced it as downright plagiarism from first to last. His attack was noted as a joke, but the story was not complete until next day an editor friendly to the governor came out in his defense, declaring the charge libelous and challenging mankind to point out a line of the proclamation that ever appeared in print before. The ignorance of the political editors has ripened into infidelity in Judge Hoadly, who makes no mention, even of the name of God, or recognition of his power, in his proclamation. Gov. Hoadly has been too long trained in the philosophical paganism of the lodge to care for the God of the Bible more than for the greegree of a Zulu.

An important commission, voted by Congress and appointed some time ago by President Arthur started last week from Chicago for Mexico and South America. It consists of Gen. G. H. Sharpe, ex-Governor T. C. Reynolds of Missouri, and Judge Solon O. Thacher of Kansas, with a secretary. They will visit in course Mexico and the Central and South American States to obtain information as to the best means of promoting the commercial relations of the United States with those countries. After attending the installation of President Diaz in Mexico, Dec. 1, they will return to New Orleans for a final consultation with President Arthur. Their mission will probably occupy two years and may result in great mutual benefit to the American republics.

The papal council opened its doors on the Sabbath and the papers overflow with the description of pompous rites, impressive to the sense but gairish and hollow to the spirit, fitter for the corresponding pomp and ceremony of royalty than for republican America. Unless this nation had become so bewitched with the mock-solemn finery of the lodge the agents of the pope would gain little sympathy from their open council. But this is not so direct an attack on American principles as the pope's permission to the daughter of President Tyler to marry a Protestant in a Catholic church with a bishop to perform the ceremony. This violation of the strict rule of Rome is allowed, because, by Romish construction, Miss Tyler as a daughter of a President, comes within the privileges allowed persons of royal blood and distinction in Europe. This odious decision is an attack upon fundamental American principles.

Bismarck has a battle with the lodge like that fought by Gladstone with the Invincibles of Ireland. A plot to blow up the German national monument at Nederwald last fall by the Anarchists was discovered and a number of the conspirators arrested. An immense mass of evidence has been collected by the government, which hopes to lay bare the whole organization of the Anarchists. Evidence has been lately procured which proves that the conspiracy not only included the vandalism of destroying a national monument, but also contemplated a wholesale assassination, of which the Emperor William, the Crown Prince, Chancellor Bismarck, and other dignitaries were to be the victims. Bismarck is terribly enraged and his nature is not to deal leniently with so desperate a gang; neither will he be hampered by the political considerations that made Gladstone circumspect in his management of the Irish secret assassins.

The burning and hanging St. John in effigy, which seems to be a favorite practice with Northern Republicans, begins to look like intimidation and terrorism. Already the Southern press calls upon the people of the North to cast out the St. John mote before they hunt any longer for beams in Southern eyes. The fact is that any one of a number of circumstances accounts for the Republican defeat as much as the St. John vote. Attention has been already called to the printers' lodges in New York city with their 3,000 votes for Cleveland. The lodge has another claim upon the Democrats. Frank Hatton, Post Master General, lost his party 1,600 votes by keeping the New York post-office employees busy all election day. Mr. Blaine, if his two sons may speak for him, attributes his loss to either one of two things: Dr. Burchard's speech at the Blaine reception, calling the Democratic the party of "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion;" and the other, the great dinner given to Blaine at Delmonico's which was attended and paid for by Gould and other speculators and monopolists. To this dinner Mr. Blaine was dragged against his will by Whitelaw Reid of the Tribune and Congressman Phelps. Roscoe Conkling's influence, which seems not to have been hostile to Cleveland, might have changed 1,100 votes; so might a word from President Arthur. It is needless to look farther. But why do not the Republicans in the "back districts' raise a cry against Hatton, or Conkling, or Arthur, or Reid; they are as much to be blamed as St. John? There can be but one answer: because of the natural hatred of the human heart to the truth and those who stand for it.

The Republican bitterness tastes of money. The army of office-holders must curse somebody and they meet St. John first. But the civil service reform rules are as likely to be respected by Cleveland as they have been by Arthur. In this connection the views of the Civil Service Reform Commission are hopeful. Judge Thoman believes that many will be undisturbed in their offices, and that a thorough administrative reform will cause the removal of many officials whose places need not be filled, and if the business of the government is to be conducted on business principles, the biennial register in two years from now will contain several thousand less names than it does to-day. Dorman B. Eaton, chairman of the Commission, believes the old policy of removal will prevail with the higher officials and other employes who spend their time in political striking instead of serving the government. Beyond this there will not be sweeping changes. Governor Cleveland has positively ordered his secretaries to destroy, without showing to him, all letters applying for office.

CHURCH-BOUND, SALARY-BOUND, SOUL-BOUND.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

"I knew a man about fourteen (days) ago, whether in the body or out of the body . . . God knoweth . . . Such an one" was interviewed by letter from a pulpit committee of a certain parish in the State of Michigan, and promptly responded by letter to the writer defining his whereabouts on certain moral issues, the lodge question especially. The good brother, who himself is all right on this issue, replied to your humble correspondent that the pulpit committee would not approve of discussing the lodge question in the pulpit.

Now, that man, who is still in the body, and needs, as other mortals do, to keep the frail tenement in motion—who could not preach on Lord's day and go up to heaven to spend the week, and so save his board, but needs bread, as do most mortals—he had no fancy to be church, salary, and soul-bound, and replied accordingly. He concluded that he could not "live on bread alone," but can live in a better and higher sense, even though he starve to death (of which he feels no fear) and obey God, who says "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather REPROVE them." Lodge policy is "secrecy and silence." If Masonry can secure both in the clergy it is the better suited, but if not, then silence will do. But that man—stubborn fellow—would not pledge, and we presume loses his prospective parish, on that, or perhaps on some other account. Well, from what we know of the man he is not candidating for a church, and so don't feel much disappointed.

If that man were capable of binding his soul, on any living moral issue, by a pledge not to rebuke sin in the pulpit and out of it, with love and long-suffering, we should take the liberty to despise him, and, as we have the prerogative to do, to depose him forever from the ministry. Would we not serve him right, in so doing? Said an old minister, who was at one time valiant in the conflict against the lodge, "I cannot afford to throw away my bread and butter in my old age by fighting Masonry." He has long been on his oars, as all such men ought to be. When a man becomes too old to face sin in society, in the world, and in the church, let him go into the invalid corps, or on the superannuated list.

There are three grand musts to be regarded. The church must have a preacher, the preacher must have his salary, and in order to the latter he must please. Ah! there follow many more results and must nots, too. The preacher must be very flexible with a very elastic conscience, be very genial with the man-pleasing spirit uppermost, etc. Then he must not rebuke sin, especially social, popular sins. Thus combining all these musts, coming before his charge with musty manuscript, which dodges all present living issues, we get a musty clergyman whom the musty brethren laud in the religious organ of the sect as "the right man in the right place." This perhaps may be lamentably true in the light of the old maxim, "Like priest like people." Yours for men in church and state who don't know how to dodge.

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.—III.

BY ALBERT M. PAULL.

In the two preceding papers we have discovered, first that, admitting the end of the Temple of Honor to be temperance, the order failed most signally to fulfil that end, as shown on the Rhode Island block; second, that the end of the temple of honor is nowhere said to be temperance. In this paper we shall endeavor to discover what the ultimate object of this curious order might be.

We have learned that the bare statement of any templar, however high in office, amounts to little or nothing. Officers frequently misapprehend the institution they serve. As an illustration, W. F. Tait says, "The chief end and aim of the Temple of Honor is not salvation." Representative Nixon, of the Rhode Island Grand Temple, said in grand session, "The templar who lives up to the solemn obligations taken at that altar is as sure of reaching heaven as any Christian." One says, No salvation; the other, Salvation as sure as the Christian's. Such opposite statements cannot be authoritative.

I shall go at once to the highest authority, the sacred books of the order emanating from the Supreme Council, from which there is no appeal. Right here I wish to dispel an illusion prevailing in some minds that the Bible is the sacred book of this or any other order. The sacred books of any religion are those which contain the principles of that religion, the tenets of its faith. These books in the Temple of Honor are its degree books and manual, made up partly, it is true, of selections from the Bible, as well as other books, but consisting mainly of original matter and doctrines opposed to the religion of Christ.

Turning to page 9 of the Manual we find these words addressed to the new initiate: "Truth must be the polar star by which you are to navigate the sea of life and gain the port of bliss securely." Again, page 10: "The pure in heart shall see God." Let this truth penetrate your inmost hearts and adorn your lives."

On page 51 these words are addressed to votaries of purity: "Your mind must become a reservoir of saving knowledge. Science may lift you to those heights which angels tread bewilderingly and open to you fields where the imagination may soar till her her wings droop weary in the flight. * * * Let your spirit be purged from all that defiles. Your upward flight will then be sublime. * * * Purity will sustain you * * * when the soul shall tire in its upward flight, it may fold its pinions upon the bosom of its God and find the repose of the pure in heart."

On page 72 these words are addressed to votaries of fidelity: "Then, when life and its toils shall be over, and death shall overthrow these pillars and level with the dust this spacious dome, the hand divine will re-erect them in the land of bliss, prepare for us each a seat in the Temple on high and eternal, into which, as the darkness of the grave passes from our eyes, and the sceptre of death is broken forever, God and his holy angels shall bid us welcome."

On page 212, addressed to members of Social Temple: "To you in times of trial or repose, defeat or victory, may visions of angels and the homes of the redeemed, the residence of the faithful, appear as your reward."

I will add but one more from page 134, addressed to Select Templars: "This is but a type of that Upper Temple, whose dome rises in the heaven of heavens, that haven of eternal rest, security and happiness, which God has built for the holy and the pure. There, when the conflict is over and the victory gained, each faithful templar shall lay aside his armor and his lance, and, in the midst of his toil-worn but successful companions, receive the crown of immortality and reign with him whose presence makes heaven and whose smile constitutes the bliss of the redeemed."

And in perfect keeping with the above, in the funeral service of a Select Templar, no matter what his life or profession may be outside of his Temple obligations, be he deist, or infidel, or a skeptic, it is said of him: "Our companion has been called from his labors here to partake of his eternal rest;" and in the prayer addressed to the deity of the order, it is said: "Thou hast seen fit in thy providence to call our companion from his labors here into thine eternal rest." These last two quotations are from memory, as I have not that service at hand. They are essentially correct.

Can any one say after reading this paper that the ultimate object of the Temple of Honor is not salvation? Can any one say it bears the same relation to temperance work that the church of Christ bears to the salvation of men's souls? It bears the same relation to temperance that the church does to repentance; to "honor" that the church does to "Christ;" to salvation that the church does to salvation, as see the following scheme:

THE TEMPLE OF HONOR.
Its beginning, Temperance.	Its dedication, To Honor.	Its end, Salvation.
THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.
Its beginning, Repentance.	Its dedication, To Christ.	Its end, Salvation.

The relation which the dedication of the Temple of Honor bears to its beginning and its end is properly discussed under the head of its theology, which I will reserve for a final paper in this series.

RUM AS A LAWYER.

BY REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

However bleared the Rumfiend's eye
His optics never fail to spy
Through temperance laws an open door
For driving in his "coach and four."
It seems men cannot frame a law
But he will find some fatal flaw
In form or phrase or double sense
Where, setting up a "test defense,"
With judge and jury "fixed" to suit,
He proves the law, beyond dispute,
Unconstitutional and void;
And so the statute is destroyed.
His red eyes saw a fatal flaw
Quite lately in Ohio's law.
The "Buckeyes" pay a handsome sum
To that fine lawyer, blear-eyed Rum,
And thus some reparation make
For taxes levied by mistake.

THE HOME AND MORMONISM.

A few words in reference to the position of woman among the Mormons and the nature of the marriage contract will be necessary to a clear understanding of the question. They claim that womankind in general is resting under an "original" curse, entailed upon the sex by our first mother Eve. This curse, according to Mormon expounding of scripture, is that woman should be completely subject to man, under his foot, that he should rule over her. But the curse is not eternal, the doctrine of celestial marriage provides the means of redemption, and nothing short of implicit obedience to this gospel which was revealed to Joseph Smith will redeem woman from the curse primevally entailed. This is a point of doctrine which is rigidly taught, and exerts great influence in swelling the list of polygamic alliances.

According to their "Doctrines and Covenants," Mormon marriages are of three kinds—some for time only, some for eternity only, and some for both. The duties and responsibilities attached to each state are not very clearly defined, although it is claimed that each are distinct and separate. A man may marry a woman for a time, support her and her children by him and yet reject her in eternity; he may have several women "sealed" to him to enhance his glory in the celestial kingdom and feel under no obligation to be a husband to them in this world; yet, when pushed to the wall, the Mormons will admit that under each form of marriage the husband may and does generally claim all the rights and privileges generally conceded to belong to the marriage relation in general. The advantages to the sterner sex are obvious in these arrangements, for when a man tires of a woman, or does not desire to contribute to her maintenance any longer, he can turn her off with the plea that he "married her only for eternity," and she has no wifely rights in the world. * * *

The principal object set forth by the Mormons in maintaining their peculiar doctrine is to raise up a numerous posterity, here and in the world to come. Consequently, instead of marriage being the symbol of a spiritual bond between two souls, the majority of the people consider it simply a compact between one man and an indefinite number of women, made for the sole purpose of bringing children into the world to build up the man's kingdom on earth, so that he may be a monarch and ruler in the celestial world, and for the additional purpose of extending the Mormon Theocracy. It is also taught that polygamy extends into the future life, and their theology admits the legitimacy of marriage between parties of the nearest relationship.

In accepting these points of doctrine, and believing the one object of marriage to be simply for increase of offspring, without the slightest reference to the proper rearing or education of children, without any regard or consideration to the physical, mental or moral welfare of either mother or child, it is obvious that there is no foundation whatever upon which to build a home. In the first place, Mormonism crushes manhood by denying the right of the individual to be a free thinker upon any subject, or to follow his own conscientious sense of right or wrong. A good Mormon has no individuality, simply because the creed to which he is a slave does not permit it. As a further consequence polygamy, instead of developing the individual home, and drawing around its sacred precincts the sanctifying influences of individual love, united parentage, unlimited faith and trust, it fosters the plural household, destroys the home circle by banishing individual affection and confidence, divides paternal control and influence, and introduces mistrust, discord and hatred. The duties and responsibilities incumbent upon a Mormon father may be summed up in a true quotation from the prophet, Brigham Young: "Does the bull care for his calves?" He was very fond of lecturing the women upon their duties as submissive wives and faithful mothers, and he made the above remark because he had been informed that some of the women were complaining of the indifference manifested by their husbands to them and their children. Upon another occasion, in the public tabernacle, he told the women that they must not expect constant love and attention from thetr husbands, "it was enough honor for them to be allowed to bear children to a saint." Specimens of these exhortations are preserved in their own papers of those times, reported by their own church stenographers, and it cannot be successfully claimed that they are inventions of the wicked gentiles. * * *

It is an impossibility to write of Mormon polygamy and not shock the moral sensibilities, because every phase of the subject is so repugnant to a refined nature. The whole tendency of the system is to brutalize all who have anything to do with it. No modest pen can adequately describe its demoralizing effect upon the young, nor set forth the lack of morality on the part of the vast majority of the young people brought up in connection with it. The policy of the Mormon church in helping the masses of the people in abject poverty completes the degradation of of polygamous households. In the settlements, as the small towns and villages are termed, there is no pretence of decency, let alone comfort or refinement, in the abodes of polygamous families. Two or three wives, as the case may be, with their numerous offspring, huddled together like animals in a small house of two or three rooms, or perhaps in a single apartment. Can it be wondered at that polygamy, as practiced in Utah, destroys both the moral and intellectual nature, and develops only the animal? And the effects of the system are about the same in all classes of society. As people ascend in the social scale, their outside surroundings are less repulsive, but we do not know that the principles of morality are less outraged. Vice is better concealed than by those who are less favored by circumstances, but the heart-burnings, the jealousies, the absence of respect and honor for womanhood, the civilization which protects the family, the lack of those sweet courtesies which lend a charm to the lowliest existence, are everywhere the same.

Only a few days ago I asked an old lady, who had been a Mormon for over twenty-five years, the question: "Have you ever known one really happy home, one really loving and united family, one really happy and contented woman, in polygamy?" The answer was emphatic: "No, never; not one." I have known a few men who embraced the doctrine through religious convictions, and who tried to deal justly with all their families; I have known many good conscientious women whose lives were a perpetual martyrdom in endeavoring to bear the trials which polygamy imposes, in doing what they thought was the Lord's will in crucifying the earthly selfishness which induces a Gentile wife to claim the undivided love and attention of her husband; I have seen the effect of perpetually "kissing the Lord's rod," in the fading eyes, blanching tresses and eventually broken hearts, but I have never seen one happy woman among the hundreds I have known intimately. I have known families where the neglect of both mother and children has solidified and intensified their mutual love for each other, while on the other hand this bond of union has been strengthened by mutual hatred of husband and father. I have known other women who have been driven, under fear of death, and under threat of starvation for themselves and their children, to consent to their husbands going into polygamy, who have then gone crazy, or become drunkards, or engaged in the occupation of becoming revenged on the husband and his favorite of the hour by introducing another and another into the harem. I have never known a woman in polygamy that was not either broken spirited and broken-hearted, or whose womanly instincts were not wholly destroyed. —Jennie Anderson Froiseth in Home Science.

AMONG HIRAMITES.

A man once fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment, and hurt him badly, leaving him half dead. Others have fallen among Hiramites.

In April, 1881, as I passed through Kasson, Minnesota, a blacksmith of that place came into the car in which I was, and took a seat facing me. He gave me the throat-cutting sign of the first degree of Masonry, and in a long talk said to me that a violator of Masonic obligations should pay the penalty, and that they are not murderers who inflict it, the right to inflict being given in taking the obligation; and that a man has a right to swear away his life, and that he would take the life of a traitor to the order. In Kasson lodge he had been educated to the murder point, and in heart was already guilty of that crime. Yet I think it was no more improper for him than it is for some professedly Christian ministers I well know to wear the lamb-skin apron in token of innocence.

A few weeks ago I came to where I now am, and as usual, I let the light concerning Masonry shine on the people, that they, having knowledge thereof might govern themselves accordingly. Masons asked whether I had been a Mason, to which I would reply that when they acknowledge that Masonry is not a secret, and when the lodge no longer defrauds men by selling it as a secret, then they may properly ask the man who talks it, and explains it to all, whether he has been a Mason, and he may not reasoaably refuse to answer.

A preacher in charge, unacquainted with me, asked me to join his church until I got a chance to join my own. He said he would do so if away from his people and with mine. But it so came about that in less than an hour I asked him, in the presence of several of his "converts," whether he had worn the cable-tow. He replied that he had "not yet said abont that," and started for the kitchen, saying something about perjury as he went. His reply revealed more than he intended. From that hour a portion of his energy has been devoted to exciting against me the deadly spirit of the lodge. Used in one way, the cable-tow has power to bind together, but used in another way it grandly separates that from this.

Dr. H., an able and educated local preacher and Mason, said he "would like to get hold of" me. I next saw him in the "revival," and heard his forcible exhortation. After dismissal he denied that he wanted to see me, said he did not know me, etc. But I waited, and he soon began by stating that he had heard that I had been a Mason, and was telling all about it. In answer to my questions, he said a man should always do as he swears he will, and that Herod did not do wrong in beheading John the Baptist, his oath requiring it. But when I asked whether the forty men should have killed Paul that they might again eat and drink, and not die, he refused to answer. He said the lodge did not swear a man to anything wrong, and I offered to tell the company there listening what it did swear a man to, that each might decide for himself; but starting for the door, he said he didn't want a word of it, nor any more talk with me, and that I should be ashamed of myself. Truly they that do evil hate the light.

By this time the threats of violence were coming in so fast, and my danger was so great, that I was obliged to reveal that I had not been a Mason. But in threatening me as a traitor, the lodge has very nicely confirmed my testimony, and exposed itself. Non-Masons, even children, notice this, and the fruits of that three week's doings will not soon disappear. (Is there any one with sufficient intelligence to properly keep a house, or manage a shop, who cannot see that a society that tries to maintain its life by threats and force may not suitably exist in, and be chartered by a government like ours? What a blessing it would be to us if Great Britain could, and would, call home her two children, Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship!)

When Masonry was first exposed in Albion, Iowa, an apparently devout preacher in charge (and once my preacher in charge) being pressed by his wife, said to her that in being made a Mason he was not divested of his clothing, neither hoodwinked nor cable-towed. She repeated it to me, fully believing that her husband told the truth. The same man once said to my father that he had helped make many Masons, but had never known any candidate to be so "duly and truly prepared," nor to take such obligations with death penalties as reported by seceders. He had sworn that he would "ever conceal the hidden mysteries," and according to Dr. H. he ought to do it, so he followed the "notable" example of "fortitude," not only of "our Grand Master, Hiram Abiff," but of other preachers who "conceal" by telling something not the truth when cornered to it. I have sometimes told genteel Masons of that man, and have asked their opinion of his religion, and all say he didn't have religion. But no one denies that he was a good Mason. God has said that "all liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone," no allowance being made for lodge obligations. To make it better for themselves, the preachers are now doubting whether there will be fire of any kind in hell.

In one of the Masonic lodges of Lawrence, Kansas, not many years ago, this transpired: A "wicked" and powerful man was taking the "sublime degree of Master Mason." "Jubelum" incautiously gave him such a blow with his setting maul as "raised" his temper. He sprang out of the canvas, tore the hoodwink from his eyes, and declared most violently that he would go no further. Four strong men took hold of him. The excitement at once became terrible. Some of the brethren forgot their "brotherly love" and were ready to be Jubelums in earnest. Finally the fellow listened to an exposition of Masonic law, and then, to avert serious results, he again put on the hood-wink, and got into the canvas. My informant witnessed the whole affair, and fully believes that if the rebel had not relented, he would have been "disposed of" right there. This informant professes to be a Christian, and he admitted that the laws of Masonry required the taking of human life, and he believes that he witnessed almost a lodge murder, and he knows that he could not, like a good citizen, have solved to the people of Lawrence, nor to the widow, the mysterious fate of the man without risking his own life as a traitor to the lodge; yet for the sake of earth he cannot renounce Masonry; and for the sake of heaven, he holds to the church! (With all this on a man would he want to be in the company of Abel, Jesus, Stephen, and many other murdered and martyred ones who are in heaven?) In such case a man is in fire on earth, and will there be no fire in hell? And it is in just such dilemma and fire that many of the "good men" stand to whom some refer us, saying that masonry must be good, or their preachers would not be Masons. Surely "Solomon" must have called up all his cunning when he devised this way of ensnaring men and ruining souls. My informant belongs to that church well known to all as having gone as a harlot after the lodge. It can truly be said of that church and the world that they were twain, but now are one flesh. The members of that church are individually accessory to the dark crimes of the lodge —with their names and money they sustain the church that sustains the lodge that cuts throats "across," and when the lodge is being exposed, they feel that they are being exposed, and their anger testifies of the guilt they feel. And we cannot illustrate the character of the lodge by publishing a few sample incidents for such as are willing to learn, without bringing upon us a cyclone of wrath from the guilty ones who do not especially "desire light."

I will give a sample of the sweet pleasures of the lodge. The lodge has much about it besides its "unpleasant duties." In the same Lawrence lodge an elderly man was taking the same sublime degree. When he kneeled to pray for himself, before starting on the "rough and rugged path beset with ruffians, if not murderers," he prayed most fervently fearing that he would not get through alive. He believed that what the worshipful master had just said to him was true. He sent farewell messages to his family and friends, and there was great joy in that lodge. Being hoodwinked, he did not discern the point. The master informed him that it would be well to confess any sins which he might have committed, and he made confession. The brethren enjoyed it greatly. Some crowded handkerchiefs into their mouths, and some nearly bursting with internal delight, held their hands on their aching sides.

And so it goes in the devil-pagan worship of the the lodge.—James G. Ball. in the Free Methodist.

THE APPOINTED SEASON.

The history of the church proves that just in proportion to the multiplication of stated religious seasons has regard for the sacredness and scriptural observance of the Sabbath diminished. And this is just what might be expected. The Sabbath is a holy day, these seasons are holy time, but the enlightened conscience of the church, while acquiescing in their observance, protests against keeping them by "a holy resting from such worldly employments and recreations as are lawful on other days." A part of the day is given to divine worship, but the greater part is given to "worldly employments or recreations." Observing in this way the holy seasons of human appointment, men naturally glide into the habit of keeping the Sabbath in the same manner. They seem to reason that as they have given a part of the time which belongs to them to God's service, they may appropriate a part of the time which belongs to him to their own employment.

It may be well for a congregation sometimes to spend a week, or even a month, in special religious services; or a church may find in her condition, or in the state of society a call to fasting and prayer; but there is nothing in the history of the church, or in the word of God, authorizing any body of Christians, or any other authority, civil or ecclesiastical, to designate a stated time other than that appointed by the Head ot the Church, to be observed year after year in public religious services.

The tendency seems to be to degrade all religious days and holy festivals from their original intent to seasons for idleness, dissipation, merry-making and frolic. Christmas, the great religious festival of the church of Rome in honor of the Savior's birth, is now largely given up to exercises more honoring to Bacchus than Jesus. Thanksgiving day is chiefly devoted to social enjoyment, feasting and amusement, while public worship and thanksgiving to God is a hurried and formal service, sustained by the few who have a lingering sense of the claims of decency and the suggestions of gratitude to the divine Giver.

How long will it be, at the rate the social and religious world is moving toward a debasing animalism, until the week of prayer, so-called, shall lose, if it has not already lost, its more spiritual features?—Evangelical Repository.

RITUALISM.

There is no more mistaken notion than that the religion of the Mosaic covenant was a ritualistic religion. It has a ritual certainly, brimful of Messianic symbol, but its whole core was spiritual. The love of God and of one's neighbor was the inward principle which formed its heart. To compare such a religion with the mere outward rites of Paganism and Romanism is to compare light with darkness. God is a holy God, and he will have his people holy; and if they substitute a ceremonial for holiness, his holy wrath will certainly fall upon them; and in this blow, not only those will fall who, like Eli's sons commit gross wrongs, but those also like Eli who through indulgence or apathy, fail to rebuke and resist the evil.

Let us take this lesson to ourselves to-day. The church of God is to-day courting the world. Its members are trying to bring it down to the level of the ungodly. The ball, the theatre, nude and lewd art, social luxuries with all their loose moralities, are making inroads into the sacred inclosure of the church, and as a satisfaction for all this worldliness, Christians are making a great deal of Lent, and Easter, and Good Friday, and church ornamentation. It is the old trick of Satan. The Jewish church struck on that rock. The Romish church was wrecked on the same. And the Protestant church is fast reaching the same doom.—Howard Crosby.

I see it publicly stated by men who call themselves Christians that it would be advisable for Christians to frequent the theatre, that the character of the drama might be raised. The suggestion is about as sensible as if we were bidden to pour a bottle of lavender water into the great sewer to improve its aroma. If the church is to imitate the world in order to raise its tone, things have strangely altered since the day when our Lord said, "Come ye out from among them, and touch not the unclean thing." Is heaven to descend to the infernal lake to raise its tone? Such has been the moral condition of the theatre for many a year that it has become too bad for mending; and even if it were mended it would corrupt again. Pass by it with averted gaze; the house of the strange woman is there. It has not been my lot ever to enter a theatre during the performance of a play, but I have seen enough when I have come home from distant journeys at night, while riding past the play-houses, to make me pray that our sons and daughters may never go within the doors. It must be a strange school of virtue which attracts the harlot and the debauchee. It is no place for a Christian, for it is best appreciated by the irreligious and worldly. If our church members fall into the habit of frequenting the theatre, we shall soon have them going much further in the direction of vice, and they will lose all relish for the ways of God. Theatre going, if it become general among professing Christians, will soon prove the death of piety.—C. H. Spurgeon.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS:

OR

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

BY E. E. FLAGG, AUTHOR OF "HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

But just here we will avail ourselves of an author's privilege to stop and comment on this curious fact:—that Stephen Howland's first case in court, one that was entirely to his mind, that stirred up all the chivalry of his nature, and fired his heart with that generous indignation which has been, ever since the world began, the God-ordained force that has set those morning stars of humanity, the souls of heroes, prophets and martyrs swaying in their orbits, did not come through any interest curried for him by the lodge, but in that direct human method which lies at the foundation of all true social economy. It is astonishing when one comes to inquire closely into the matter, how little real aid to success in their worldly business has ever been afforded to honest and self-reliant members by Masonry, Odd-fellowship or any other secret clique whose huge pretentions pass current to-day for no other reason than because it is less trouble to believe a lie than to combat it, and more easy to accept an assertion without questioning than to bring that assertion to mathematical proof. Honest, self-respecting Americans, true to the old Pilgrim and republican traditions bequeathed to them by Puritan and Revolutionary sires, will prefer to gain the favors of their-fellow men in the legitimate method, by probity and strict attention to business, though at the same time they may be paying away a large part of their earnings to keep in running order a machine which they have not the least idea how to work. That those who do know how to work it; who understand the use of every wire, and just how it connects with the lobby or the caucus, the court or the market, must have a larger reserve stock to draw upon, the larger the number of these ignorant and simple-mindedmembers, is certainly as easy of demonstration as that two and two make four.

But, as we intend that all this, with other facts equally curious and instructive shall be duly illustrated in the further unfolding of our story, we will drop moralizing and go back fifteen or twenty years to the rocky hill-country farm—now one of the many deserted homesteads for which that region is famed—which its owner, Silas Newhall, in an evil hour left behind him to seek with his wife and children a new home towards the sun-setting. Silas was not a very active or intelligent farmer. He planted and sowed and reaped with little regard to any of the "new lights" in agriculture, and when the soil in consequence paid him but scanty returns, he grew discontented and was in just the mood of mind to listen to an enterprising land speculator who tried to make him believe, and with very fair success, that Western farms brought forth spontaneously all that was "good for food and pleasant to the eyes," and no more needed to be tilled by the sweat of the brow than did the original Eden.

To his meek little wife it was a sore trial to leave old friends and neighbors, but after the first protest she had no more to say either in the way of remonstrance or complaint; and so one bright morning saw their few effects packed, and they themselves en route for the land of abundance, to find at their journey's end only a tumble-down shanty waiting to receive them instead of the snug, green blinded cottage their New England ideas led them to expect. But this was only the beginning of disappointments, for the new railroad which the enterprising speculator had enlarged upon as sure to open up a ready market for their produce, was not yet built nor likely to be for an indefinite period; and Silas Newhall found, too late that big crops, with no prospect of converting them into enough ready money to buy a pair of shoes, only made their owner poorer instead of richer. He finally sold his farm and settled on government lands in a region farther west, only to repeat the old story of discouragement and failure. He grew despondent and took to drinking, while the truehearted wife who had followed his fortunes with never a murmur, with the weakness of a mortal disease upon her, bore a weight of suffering to which the martyr's brief, fiery trial is as nothing.

Nelson Newhall was fourteen, Tommy ten, and Dora, the youngest, a pretty child of six, when the inevitable breaking up came. The father while intoxicated fell from a scaffolding in the barn and broke his neck in the fall. The mother lived through the following summer nursed by kind neighborly hands, and then entered that invisible world where alone the hidden purpose of love in her dark, tangled life-web could be made plain. Nelson, stout and strong for his years, could work his own way; a good, motherly farmer's wife volunteered to take little Dora; but Tommy had been feeble in body and mind from infancy—perhaps a result of that mysterious law which visits the sins of the father upon the children, a law which seems to slip one and take another as capriciously as the cholera or the plague, and what place for him but the county poor house? Thither he went to receive no better and no worse treatment than such unfortunates usually receive in similar institutions. Nelson, to whom he seemed the only living thing left to love and care for, used to visit him weekly, and as soon as he could claim his own earnings took upon himself the burden of his support.

But poor Tom, as a part of the dark legacy so strangely bequeathed, liked the taste of liquor—that is, he was always ready to sip the sweet poison if placed in his way, but he had not as yet developed such a craving for it as would lead him to tax his weak brains with the effort to get it clandestinely; and ordinarily his lack of money was a sufficient safeguard. But being unfortunately enticed one evening into a low drinking saloon kept by a certain Peter Snyder, it was considered a piece of rare amusement by the bar-room loungers to ply the half-witted boy with bad whisky till the point was reached at which he was incapable of affording them further entertainment, when he was coolly ejected with a kick of his cowhide boots by the proprietor—a peculiar and forcible style of argument which Mr. Snyder found handy in certain cases—in which condition he was pounced upon by a watchful guardian of the public peace and thrust into the lockup after the manner described by Nelson in his talk with Mr. Treworthy. The result was a cold and high fever, which carried him to death's door.

Peter Snyder was arrested and bound over to answer to two indictments – one for illegal liquor selling, the other for allowing Thomas Newhall to be made drunk with whisky sold on his premises, said Newhall being feeble-minded and a minor. He pleaded guilty to both charges and was duly convicted and sentenced; for, as it happened, Mr. Snyder had never been able to obtain admittance into the ancient and honorable fraternity where so many of his particular guild find a safe retreat from the sheriff and other "terrors of the law." We append his own statement of the reason, as given by him in communicative words to his various chums and cronies, only leaving out certain expressions questionable both on the score of morals and taste.

"I tell ye now, my opinion of the Masons don't take many words to say it in. They are a set of big, sneaking, rascally hypocrites. How did they treat me once when I tried to get in? I made my application shipshape and stood all ready to pay my fees and dues fair and square; but I wasn't quite genteel enough for 'em, so I got blackballed. I don't sell liquor because it is respectable or genteel. I do it to make money. Look at Parker and Longman, and lots of others—all Masons and all engaged in the same business, only maybe they carry it on in more style—and durned if I ain't as good as they are!"

It will be seen from the above that many traits of our common humanity were quite highly developed in this poor rumseller—noticeably his tendency to justify himself as being at least no worse than many others; which, with the fact that there had even been moments in his life when he thought of his good old praying Methodist mother, and half resolved to quit the vile business altogether and make a man of himself, coupled with the further fact that he had always put it off till "a more convenient season," was certainly clear proof enough that he was, after all, of the same flesh and blood with the general run of humanity. But the liquor business, like the slave-trade, must always have its Pariahs—men from the lower stratum of society who bear on their own shoulders much of the public odium of a traffic that they did not create, and which would fall like a mill-stone as soon as it ceased to be patronized or supported by any other class. Just as in ante bellum days it was very easy to find good people who looked with horror and loathing on the slave-dealer while regarding with complacency or indifference the system of which that occupation was only the legitimate exponent, so the publican of foreign birth who stands behind the bar and deals out the fiery poison to poor Pat, who goes straightway home, possessed with all the devils of the still, to beat and abuse his wife and children, is an outcast and a wretch to be spurned by all decent people, but what of the voter or the legislator who, in blind devotion to party or for the loaves and fishes of political power, is willing to ignore, and thus perpetuate the system which creates the rumseller?

Stephen Howland took hold of the case like a war-horse eager for his first fray. There was in Jacksonville quite a strong under-current of prohibition sentiment which had been for some time slowly gathering force; and as the case was one which, in its peculiar nature, awakened sympathy, his vigorous and successful prosecution of it gave to the young and almost discouraged lawyer precisely that start in his profession that he needed.

But we cannot do better than to give the reader an extract from one of his letters home:

"Public sentiment is at last roused up, and on the principle of the one toppling brick overthrowing its fellows, there is some hope that Snyder's arrest and conviction will close up other drinking places whose owners are equally defiant of law. For my part I am only too delighted at such a rare opportunity to fight the dragon, for I expect to have more liquor cases on my hands—two came in to-day.

"That Nelson Newhall is a splendid fellow; a grand specimen of the genus labor; and Martin Treworthy is an old soldier who lives all alone like a hermit or a saint. He came and shook hands with me after I had made my speech, and told me I had spoken like a young Daniel, and he only wished my folks could have been here to have heard me. I know, dear mother, that from my babyhood it has been your wish and prayer that I might be a Samuel. It hurt me more than anything else to disappoint those wishes and prayers, but if I 'dare to be a Daniel', will not that do as well?"

"It will suit me well enough," said Josiah Howland, emphatically, interrupting Phœbe in her reading of the letter. "Be sure, mother, when you write, to tell him that. And tell him, too, that I feel a sight more reconciled to his being a lawyer now that he's given them pesky rum-sellers a lesson."

As for Phœbe, she was too full of joy and thankfulness to say a great deal; and there mingled with it, too, a kind of awe. Why is it that the Lord often seems nearer to us when he answers our prayers in a way we are not expecting? In the quiet of the little bedroom which had been her "closet" for so many years, she read over again the precious letter; then, falling on her knees, tried to give utterance to her thanksgivings, feeling much as did Eve of old when she exultingly exclaimed, "I have gotten a man from the Lord."

But why did Stephen, in all his letters home, never once mention the fact that he was an Odd-fellow? one of a fraternity so moral, so religious, so benevolent! The reader is welcome to put his own solution to a question that Stephen Howland had never as yet consciously answered, even to himself.

THE SILENT REVOLUTION.

President Northrop, in an address which is now published in full, affirms that there has been a silent revolution accomplished in the Congregational churches of the East, to a modified Universalism. We must confess to surprise at the significant tone of this announcement. It is not what we expected to find in the address after reading and publishing President Northrop's letter, last week, concerning it.
